Gentlemen, you state that your company has suffered enough, that the infliction of further punishment in the form of punitive damages will cause harm to your ongoing business, will punish innocent shareholders and could conceivably depress your profits to the point where you could not survive as a competitor in this industry. When the poor and downtrodden in this country commit crimes, they too plead that these are crimes of survival and that they should be excused for illegal acts which helped them escape desperate economic straits. On a few occasions when these excuses are made and a contrite and remorseful defendant promises to mend his ways, courts will give heed to such a plea. But no court would heed this plea when the individual denies the wrongful nature of his deeds and gives no indication that he will mend his ways. Your company in the face of overwhelming evidence denies its guilt and continues its monstrous mischief.

Mr. Forrest, you have told me that you are working with members of the Congress of the United States to ask them to find a way of forgiving you from punitive damages which might otherwise be imposed. Yet the profits of your company continue to mount. Your last financial report boasts of new records for sales and earnings, with a profit of more than $58 million in 1983. And all the while, insofar as this court is able to determine, you three men and your company still engage in the self-same course of wrongdoing in which you originally commenced. Until such time as your company indicates that it is willing to cease and desist this deception and to seek out and advise victims, your remonstrances to Congress and to the courts of this country are indeed hollow and cynical. The company has not suffered, nor have you men personally. You are collectively being enriched by millions of dollars each year. There is as yet no evidence that your company has suffered any penalty whatsoever from these litigations. In fact, the evidence is to the contrary.

The case law indicates that the purpose of punitive damages is to make an award which will punish a defendant for his wrongdoing. Punishment traditionally involves the principles of revenge, rehabilitation and deterrence. There is no evidence I have been able to find in my review of these cases to indicate that any one of these factors has been accomplished.

Mr. Robins Jr., Mr. Forrest, Dr. Lunsford: You have not been rehabilitated. Under your direction your company has in fact continued to allow women, tens of thousands of them, to wear this device—a deadly depth charge in their wombs, ready to explode at any time. Your attorney Mr. Alexander Slaughter denies that tens of thousands of these devices are still in the bodies of women. But I submit to you that Mr. Slaughter has no more basis for his denial than the plaintiffs have for stating it as truth, because we simply do not know how many women are still wearing these devices and your company is not willing to find out. The only conceivable reasons you have not recalled this product are that it would hurt your balance sheet and alert women who already have been harmed that you may be liable for their injuries. You have taken the bottom line as your guiding beacon and the low road as your route. This is corporate irresponsibility at its meanest. Rehabilitation involves an admission of guilt, a certain contrition, an acknowledgment of wrongdoing and a resolution to take a new course toward a better life. I find none of this in the instance of you and your corporation. Confession is good for the soul, gentlemen. Face up to your misdeeds. Acknowledge the personal responsibility that you have for the activities of those who work under you. Rectify this evil situation. Warn the potential future victims and recompense those who already have been harmed.

Mr. Robins, Jr., Mr. Forrest, Dr. Lunsford: I see little in the history of this case that would deter others from partaking of like acts. The policy of delay and obfuscation practiced by your lawyers in courts throughout this country has made it possible for you and your insurance company, Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, to delay the payment of these claims for such a long period that the interest you earn in the interim covers the cost of these cases. You, in essence, pay nothing out of your pocket to settle these cases. What other corporate officials could possibly learn a lesson from this? The only lesson could be that it pays to delay compensating victims and to intimidate, harass and shame the injured parties.

Mr. Robins Jr., Mr. Forrest, Dr. Lunsford: You gentlemen have consistently denied any knowledge of the deeds of the company you control. Mr. Robins Jr., I have read your deposition. Many times you state that your management style was such as to delegate work and responsibility to other employees in matters involving the most important aspects of this nation's health. Judge Frank Theis, who presided over the discovery of these cases during the multidistrict litigation proceedings, noted this phenomenon in a recent opinion. He wrote, "The project manager for Dalkon Shield explains that a particular question should have gone to the medical department, the medical department representative explains that the question was really the bailiwick of the quality control department, and the quality control department representative explains that the project manager was the one with the authority to make a decision on that question." Under these circumstances, Judge Theis noted, "it is not at all unusual for the hard questions posed in Dalkon Shield cases to be unanswerable by anyone from Robins."

Your company seeks to segment and fragment the litigation of these cases nationwide. The courts of this country are now burdened with more than 3,000 Dalkon Shield cases. The sheer number of claims and the dilatory tactics used by your company's attorneys clog court calendars and consume vast amounts of judicial and jury time. Your company settles those cases in which it finds itself in an uncomfortable position, a handy device for avoiding any proceeding which would give continuity or cohesiveness to this nationwide problem. The decision as to which cases to try rests almost solely at the whim and discretion of the A.H. Robins Company. In order that no plaintiff or group of plaintiffs might assert a sustained assault upon your system of evasion and avoidance, you time after time demand that able lawyers who have knowledge of the facts must as a price of settling their cases agree to never again take a Dalkon Shield case nor to help any less experienced lawyers with their cases against your company.

Minnesota lawyers have filed cases in this jurisdiction for women from throughout the United States. The cases of these women have waited on the calendar of this court for as many as three years. The evidence they will present at trial is predominantly generic evidence concerning the company's actions, which is as easy to produce in Minnesota as anywhere else. Yet your company's attorneys persist in asking that these cases be transferred to other jurisdictions and to other judges unfamiliar with the cases, there to wait at the bottom of the calendars for additional months and years before they they have their day in court.

Another of your callous legal tactics is to force women of little means to withstand the onslaught of your well-financed, nationwide team of attorneys, and to default if they cannot keep pace. You target your worst tactics for the meek and the poor.

(I should point out that the Faegre & Benson law firm, local counsel for your company in the consolidated cases before me, has a high reputation for fair play, integrity and fidelity to the court. Faegre & Benson, and other local firms retained for trials across the country, are not responsible for the overall strategic decisions of your company).

Despite your company's protestations, it is evident that these thousands of cases cannot be viewed in isolation, one at a time. The multidistrict litigation panel of the federal court system found these cases to have sufficient similarity on issues of fact and law to warrant their reference to a single judge who, for varying periods of time, conducted discovery, depositions and proceedings designed to devise an efficient method of handling these cases. In each of these thousands of cases, the focal point of the inquiry is the same: the conduct of your company through its acts and omissions. Indeed, Judge Gerald Heaney of the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit recently urged judges in Minnesota to work together to devise a coordinated system for dealing with all of their Dalkon Shield cases.

These litigations must be viewed as a whole. Were these women to be gathered together with their injuries in one location, this would be denominated a disaster of the highest magnitude. The mere fact that these women are separated by geography blurs the total picture. Here we have thousands of victims—present and potential whose injuries arise from the same series of operative facts. You have made no effort whatsoever to locate them and bring them together to seek a common solution to their plight.

If this were a case in equity, I would order that your company make an effort to locate each and every woman who still wears this device and recall your product. But this court does not have the power to do so. I must therefore resort to moral persuasion and a personal appeal to each of you. Mr. Robins Jr., Mr. Forrest and Dr. Lunsford: You are the people with the power to recall. You are the corporate conscience.

Please in the name of humanity lift your eyes above the bottom line. You, the men in charge, must surely have hearts and souls and consciences. If the thought of facing up to your transgressions is so unbearable to you, you might do as Rogger Tuttle did and confess to your maker, beg forgiveness and mend your ways.

Please, gentlemen, give consideration to tracing down the victims and sparing them the agony that will surely be theirs.●

"VALLEY OF DESTROYED COMMUNITIES" WILL ENHANCE YAD VASHEM MONUMENT HONORING VICTIMS OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, several impressive changes are being made which will both expand and enhance Israel's memorial to the Holocaust, Yad Vashem. This significant addition to the memorial is designated the "Valley of Destroyed Communities." It will commemorate those villages destroyed by the Nazis when their Jewish inhabitants were annihilated. The 4,500 communities represented in this undertaking symbolize to Jew and non-Jew the horror and inhumanity of World War II.

Dr. Yitzhak Arad, chairman of the Yad Vashem Directorate, conceived of this unique memorial. It will be located adjacent to the Mount of Rememberance and will contain a huge map-like structure built from the engravings of stone onto rock formations. This map of Europe will illustrate the locations of the destroyed communities.

The director of this project is Eli Zborowski, a Holocaust survivor who found refuge in the United States and has since focused his energies and commitment upon a national and international campaign for its construction.

Mr. Zborowski's other important activities include the establishment of the American Federation of Jewish Fighters, and Camp Inmates and Nazi Victims, of which he was made honorary president in 1976. In 1980 he was appointed by President Jimmy Carter to serve as a member of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council. Through his activity in these organizations, as well as his involvement in the resistance movement against the Nazis during World War II, Zborowski has demonstrated his intense commitment to preserve the memory of this tragic moment in human history.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to acknowledge the significant efforts of my good friend, Norman Belfer, who currently serves as international secretary of Yad Vashem, and who is responsible for bringing this project to my attention. Mr. Belfer's wife, Elinor, is presently the Florida State chairman of the American Society for Yad Vashem, and has also contributed much to American awareness of this important undertaking.

The expansion of Yad Vashem is an appropriate way to commemorate the magnitude of the horror that was carried out against these communities. Equally symbolic is the location of this great memorial in Jersualem—a city that symbolizes peace, not just as an ideal, but as a reality for the many different religions of the world which coexist there. Set in the heart of the Holy Land, this memorial speaks to all who cherish humanity.●

RELIGION AND ETHNIC OPPRESSION IN THE USSR

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, on May 16, 17, and 18 of this year, the Research Center for Religion and Human Rights in Closed Societies held a conference at Marymount College in Virginia entitled, "Religion and Ethnic Oppression in the U.S.S.R." The conference featured scholars and former victims of persecution who detailed and documented Soviet efforts to eradicate religion and suppress ethnic identity.

One of the most moving presentations was by Ayshe Seytmuratova, who recounted the atrocities perpetrated by the Soviet regime in the ruthless expulsion of the Crimean Tatars from their native land. Forty years have passed since this tragic and nefarious Soviet action. However, we must not forget the severity of the expulsion, which resulted in unimaginable suffering and substantial loss of life. I think every Member of this Chamber should have the opportunity to read Ms. Seytmuratova's presentation, which, I hope, will serve to intensify our commitment to help oppressed and abused peoples everywhere.

Ms. Seytmuratova's statement follows:

RCDA CONFERENCE ON RELIGIOUS AND ETHNIC OPPRESSION IN THE U.S.S.R.

(By Ayshe Seytmuratova)

DEPORTATION OF THE CRIMEAN TATAR NATION ON MAY 18, 1944

On May 18th, 1984, 40 years have passed since the expulsion of the entire nation of Crimean Tatars from their native land. The facts speak for themselves:

During the night from the 17th to 18th of May 1944 the whole nation—young and old, children, women and the elderly—were roused from their beds and at gunpoint of the NKVD [KBG] troops expelled from Crimea. In the homes of the Tatars the NKVD officers announced: "In the name of the Soviet government, the whole nation of Crimean Tatars is banished from Crimea forever because of their treason committed against our Fatherland. It is forbidden to assemble and search for one's family and relatives. All Crimean Tatars will be exiled, wherever they may be found. They must be prepared for departure within 15 minutes."

Our people were never informed of the route by which they would be deported. The whole nation was arrested, shoved into cattle wagons—veritable crematoria on wheels—and under strict escort sent to the place of execution—to Central Asia, Kazakhstan and the Urals.

For weeks the people had to travel without food, water and medical assistance. The representatives of Crimean Tatars in Moscow wrote a necrolog in their Information Bulletin No. 69 of May 6, 1968:

"On May 18, 1944, the hungry, hastily clad people were taken in sealed freight cars, in a convoy of troops armed with submachine guns, to concentration centers. Those were defenseless children, women, aged and disabled persons whose fathers, husbands and sons were at that time giving their lives and blood on the battlefields in the Great Patriotic War [World War II] or serving in labor forces rebuilding factories destroyed by war actions. How could we ever forget the horror and nightmares of the almost 3 week long journey to the places of our exile, during which the people became swollen from starvation, infested with lice, and the sick and starving travelers were confined with the decomposing corpses of those who died on the way. The troops escorting the train would not remove the dead immediately, nor would they permit the families and relatives of the deceased to bury them even along the railroad tracks. People were fainting from lack of air and from the stench in the cars; many lost their mind."

The year of 1944 was difficult for all the people in the USSR but for the deported and exiled nations it was a year of mass destruction. During World War II 14 small, mostly Moslem nations in the USSR were banished from their lands and brutally relocated by the government; in 18 months diseases and starvation took the lives of more than 110,000 Crimean Tatars alone, i.e., more than 46 percent of our nation perished. Those dry figures include the corpses left behind in the houses, the bodies of those who died on the journey, the persons who lost their sanity, the mothers who lost all their children in a single day, the lament and tears of the poor victims.

It is impossible to find the words that would describe what took place in the resettlement centers. The people were housed in dugouts, barns, horse stables, barracks and even left under the skies. The most crucial problem for us was the total lack of any means of survival.

We, the founders of the Crimean Tatar national movement, conducted a census of our people, both the survivors and the deceased, which provided us with the following data:

Deported were 99,400 children under 16 years of age; 13,300 teenagers under 18 years of age; 93,200 women 18 years old or older; 32,600 men over 18 years of age.

According to the data of the census, a total of 238,500 Crimean Tatars were expelled from Crimea, 205,900 of them women and children, i.e., 86.4% of all expellees.

Dr. Sulamif Prakhye witnessed the annihilation of Crimean Tatars of which she later wrote:

"As a young physician I was assigned to provide 'medical aid to the resettled' who were left out in the open in the marketplace. What could I do with only a meager supply of pills? I could not even communicate with them properly—many of them could not speak Russian.

"There were hardly any men among them—most were elderly, women and children. The most distressful developments began to take place later. Children, either emaciated, as they say—skin and bones, or on the contrary, all swollen from malnutrition, began appearing at the hospital doors. We would put two or three of them together on every free and even occupied cot. If there were any Tatar women in the hospital, they would share their beds with those children. If some of the children happened to survive on hospital rations, I would bring it up to the attention of the hospital administration that nobody had visited them, so that they be sent to orphanages. The official diagnosis was PDE—protein-deficiency edema. Of course, everybody knew what that meant. I cannot recall when exactly the orphaned children began to come to the hospital. Most of them were 6 to 13 years old. I worked in the district hospital in Irgut, a settlement in the province of Samarkand, from 1942 to 1948."

The Crimean Tatars submitted many similar testimonies to higher instances of the USSR. For example, in 1957 the Crimean Tatar writer Shamil Aliadin said at a reception in Moscow to the members of the CPSU Central Committee:

"At 2 AM in the night from the 17th to the 18th of May 1944 the NKVD [KGB] agents armed with submachine guns suddenly burst into the homes of the Tatars, dragged the sleeping women, children and old people from their beds, and pointing their guns at the people's chests they ordered them to leave their homes in 10 minutes flat . . . They would not permit the people to get properly dressed, nor would they let them take their clothes, money and household goods. Soldiers armed with machine guns and agents [of the NKVD] freely rummaged in the houses and confiscated the owner's money, valuables and whatever struck their fancy. They addressed the Tatars as "you damn traitors," etc. The scantily dressed, hungry people left for a month-long journey: in the sealed, stifling railway cars typhoid fever was rampant and children and old people were dying of starvation and infection. The KGB troops would grab the corpses and toss them out through the windows of the cars."

I shall quote another letter addressed to the 23rd CPSU Congress by Tenzine Poragimova:

"Our expulsion was extremely brutal. At 2 AM, when the people were fast asleep, soldiers entered with the order for us to get ready in 5 minutes to leave our homes. We were not permitted to take with us clothes and food. We were treated so roughly that we were convinced that we would be executed. The hungry children wailed pitifully. At that time my husband was in military service and I was left with three children. Of the 30 families in our village only 5 survived, but not with all of their members—one or two members of those families were left and the rest succumbed to famine and disease. Our men served in the army and no one was left to bury our dead. The corpses were often left for days with the living."

Tens of thousands of victims were brutally destroyed according to a well planned method.

From 1957 to the mid-1970's we, the representatives of Crimean Tatars in Moscow, submitted thousands of such testimonies written by Crimean Tatars concerning the expulsion and annihilation of our nation; the documentation was addressed to the Central Committee of the CPSU, the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers of the USSR. It described the taunts by the special detachment and the inhuman conditions of our life in the places of resettlement. To understand the whole scope of the national tragedy experienced by the Crimean Tatars, I quote here at least the data on those who died during the deportation or during the first year of our exile: of 112,700 children and teenagers, 52,066 died; of 92,200 women, 43,085 died; of 32,600 men, 15,061 died. Thus, without a shot being fired, more than 110,000 Crimean Tatars were killed.

If 10-11% of the Crimean Tatar population were lost in the military action of World War II, then the barbarous deportation of our whole nation on May 18, 1944, from Crimea resulted in the death of 46.2% of Crimean Tatars—or almost one half of our nation—in 18 months!

While we were being physically liquidated far from our native land, the barbarians of the 20th century were using hatchets, axes and picks, bulldozers and tractors to destroy our ancient culture in Crimea—our landmarks, our Muslim cemeteries and mosques. The invaluable architectural treasures of Bakhchisarai—Gazi-Mansur and Aziz-Dzhami—were razed. Books in the language of Crimean Tatars and the holy scriptures of the Moslems, Koran, were burned in town squares.

After the deportation of Crimean Tatars from their native land the Tatar names of our communities, mountains and streams were changed to Russian names; for example, the town Karasubazar to Byelogorsk, the town of Eski-Krym to Stary Krym, the village of Besh-Terek to Donskoye, etc.

Thus, in one stroke everything that our nation had created and built over 15 centuries was destroyed. However, we see the beginning of our cultural genocide in the seizure of Crimea by Russia in 1783. No one could express the tragedy of Crimean Tatars after Russia's occupation of Crimea more poignantly than the poet Maximilian Voloshin:

There, in those folds of sea and land,
Life was protected by the span of centuries,
Until we—Russians—came.
For hundred and fifty years—since Catherine the Great—
We have exploited the Moslem paradise,
Cut down its woods, shattered its relics,
Plundered and ravaged the country.

The deportation of Crimean Tatars from Crimea robbed them not only of their native land, their national, economic and material wealth and their statehood but also of their language, literature and cultural heritage. Their nation was deprived of its customs and way of life, its national art, of the opportunity to educate its people in their own language and to teach them their own history, and of the right to celebrate their national and religious holidays.

History knows few such atrocities. For 40 years the Soviet government has been trying to persuade not only the people in the USSR but the whole world that the nation of Crimean Tatars no longer exists. If there is no nation, then there can be no national problem of Crimean Tatars.

The policy of genocide of small nations must serve as a warning not only to ethnic groups in the USSR but to every nation in the world.

Nevertheless, the brutality committed against the Crimean Tatars in 1944 could not induce them to abrogate their native land—Crimea. On the contrary, the tragedy of our nation compelled us, Crimean Tatars, to unite and fight for the categorical imperative of our national self-preservation, which means the preservation of our language, our culture and our history, our customs and traditions, our religion—Islam—and our national identity, our statehood.

From the first days of its existence the Soviet government has conducted a campaign against religion. However, its struggle against Islam had always been—and still is—even more vicious than its campaign against Christianity, as Prof. Alexandre Bennigsen notes in his book "The Muslims in the USSR." Thus, for example, fewer than 500 of the 26,000 mosques have been left, and there are fewer than 1,000 Islamic clergymen and religious workers who once numbered 50,000.

The number of Muslims in the USSR is estimated as 50 million and thus, the 500 mosques and 1,000 clergymen are a mere drop in the ocean. The anti-Islamic policy is evident not only from these data but mainly from Soviet laws. I shall mention one of them, "The Law on Religious Cults of the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic"—Decree of the Council of Ministers of the Uzbek SSR No. 65 of February 7, 1969, which states:

"The Council of Ministers of the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic herewith decrees:

(1) that a census of all currently active religious congregations and of clergy be made prior to June 1, 1969; that the conditions of vacant mosques and other houses of prayer be surveyed and steps taken in accordance with the established procedure to assign them for industrial and cultural use, or to demolish the buildings that are damaged;

(2) to intensify the efforts to curtail the pilgrimages to the so called 'holy shrines'; to investigate prior to June 1, 1969, every such place and to prepare specific programs for preventing pilgrimages to such localities;

(3) to authorize the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Uzbek SSR to take steps in order to intensify the efforts to investigate and prevent crimes perpetrated on religious grounds; to curtail the sales and distribution of religious literature (photocopies of sermons, excerpts from the Koran, tapes and recordings of religious poetry, hymns, etc.); to prevent employment of able-bodied individuals in houses of prayer and the activities of parasitic elements among the clergy and leaders of sectarian organizations."

The decree contains a total of 11 such paragraphs.

The campaign against Islam has been stepped up recently in Muslim republics of the USSR, especially after the Islamic revolution in Iran, as confirmed by the trials in Tashkent in 1982. As an example I should like to mention the court action against Samarkad Azimov, Ruzyev, Rakhimov and others who were charged with illegal organization of schools for teaching of Islam and with illegal copying and dissemination of a booklet entitled "The Islamic Faith."

Where is the pledge triumphantly announced to the Muslims in Russia and the East at the dawn of the Soviet regime: "From this day on your beliefs and customs, your national and cultural institutions shall be free and inviolable!"?●

THE VETERAN

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, July 4, 1984, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE VETERAN

The United States has the world's most comprehensive system of benefits for its 28.2 million veterans and their 56.4 million dependents and survivors. The nation owes veterans a debt of gratitude for their service, and it can express that gratitude best by maintaining and improving responsible programs for them. We generally spend more on our veterans than we spend fighting wars, trying to make up for the losses that they suffered and helping them readjust to civilian life. Only the Department of Defense and the Department of Health and Human Services have budgets larger than the $25.8-billion budget of the Veterans' Administration (VA). Yet there is a threat to future benefits on the horizon: as a group, veterans are growing older.

As a result of a 1971 law, all veterans aged 65 years or more are eligible for free health care, regardless of their need. The cost of that general promise is finally becoming evident as the nation's largest group of veterans, those who served in World War II, nears retirement. In 1980, 10.6% of all veterans were 65 or older. By 1990, 26.4% of our veterans will be, so half of all men in this age group will be eligible for free health care provided by the VA. VA outlays for health care tripled between 1973 and 1983, and may double again to $15.4 billion by 1990. The number of veterans turning to the VA for this benefit could be larger than expected if further cuts are made in medicare or if more than the 20% of retired veterans who now use VA medical facilities become aware of their eligibility. In our present budget predicament, the aging of our veterans poses a real challenge.

The 1971 law does not guarantee that all elderly veterans must receive free health care. It only establishes their eligibility for it where it is available. By law, only veterans with service-connected disabilities have the guarantee. Because so much of the VA's health care budget goes to veterans for the treatment of conditions not connected to service, Congress could close most of the VA health care system tomorrow and still live up to the letter of its commitment. However, the spirit of the commitment is another matter, and Congress has tried to accommodate all veterans. Public support for veterans continues as strong as ever.

Many of the proposals to deal with the problem of aging veterans involve cutting back benefits, especially to those whose disabilities are not connected to service. One option would be to institute a means test, providing free health care to these veterans only if they have limited incomes. Likewise, the VA could require veterans without service-connected conditions to share in the cost of their treatment through deductibles and co-payments. Supporters of such proposals argue that there is no reason why a millionaire businessman who served only a few months of desk duty should have taxpayers picking up the tab for all of his health care when he retires. They also point to a recent survey which found that veterans as a group are better off economically and socially than are non-veterans of the same age.

Congress is more interested in proposals emphasizing the economies that may be realized if the VA health care system is administered better. These economies could lessen the need to cut back benefits later on. Suggestions along this line include:

Making VA hospitals more efficient (the VA can lower its construction costs, handle its inventories better, and improve its computer system);

Recovering costs from private insurance (about 35% of all patients at VA hospitals have private insurance that could help cover the costs of their treatment);

Linking up VA programs with existing health care services (efforts are under consideration in the VA to end overlap and upgrade coordination of its services with health care already available in the community);

Putting more emphasis on less costly types of health care (the trend toward outpatient treatment and home health care should be encouraged to continue);

Providing vouchers to veterans seeking health care outside the VA system (payment by the VA for health care rendered elsewhere could prevent building of facilities that would be used for a few years at most);

Boosting preventive strategies (like any health care system, the VA's should be putting more emphasis on detecting and preventing illnesses and disabling conditions);

Improving allocation of VA facilities across the country (hospitals in some areas are stretched to the breaking point while those in other areas sit empty);

Pooling the health care resources of the VA and the Department of Defense (these agencies' hospitals are often close to each other, so there is an opportunity to share resources);

Converting acute care facilities to nursing homes (because the biggest need of veterans in future years will be space in nursing homes, it may be much cheaper for the VA to drop construction plans and convert underutilized hospital wards);

Revising hospitals' incentives (instead of basing the budget of the VA's health care system on the past year's spending, the cost-saving incentives that are part of a medicare-type scheme of fixed payments for services might be tried).

Providing excellent health care to our aging veterans clearly will be one of the more difficult issues on Congress's domestic agenda in the years ahead. With foresight, planning, and willingness to meet the challenge directly, we should be able to preserve a strong VA health care system without reducing the benefits or raising the costs to veterans.●

ASIAN-INDIANS AND IMMIGRATION

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to include for the RECORD a statement made by Dr. Joy Cherian, president of the Indian-American Forum for Political Education, on the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill. I believe Mr. Cherian's statement gives yet another perspective on this issue.

I would also like to point out the growing importance of this Nation's Asian-Indian community. There are approximately 500,000 Asian-Indians in this country. They are becoming a political and economic force. Although there is diversity within their community, I believe that they too recognize that their strength lies in forging a real sense of unity.

On May 26 and 27, the third annual convention of Asian-Indians was held in Washington, DC. The conference covered a wide range of topics, from cultural to political. Although, Dr. Cherian's statement is concerned with immigration reform, the forum is interested in a variety of subjects.

I hope that my colleagues will take a moment to read Dr. Cherian's remarks. I also hope that they will take the opportunity to better acquaint themselves with the Asian-Indian community.

The remarks follow:

FAMILY REUNIFICATION PROVISIONS IN THE IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1983

On February 25, 1983, leaders of the Indian-American Forum for Political Education, representing the Indian American Community of a half million legal residents and U.S. Citizens, testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy on the Senate Immigration bill, S. 529. We stated at that time that we appreciate the efforts of Congressional leaders to reform the present immigration process in order to protect the national interests of the United States. However, we strongly opposed certain proposed restrictions introduced by Senator Alan Simpson on family reunification provisions under the second and fifth preferences of the existing immigration law. Those restrictions would eliminate the special consideration granted to the immigration of adult children of U.S. permanent residents and siblings of U.S. citizens under the present law.

Although Senator Alan Simpson and other members of the Subcommittee agreed to revise one of their original proposals which would have eliminated the fifth preference system, the Senate passed version of the bill which would admit only unmarried siblings, is not at all satisfactory to American citizens of Asian Indian origin. We hope that the Senate-House Conference Committee will not accept the Senate bill's provisions which would restrict family reunification rights of U.S. permanent residents and U.S. citizens.

We defer taking a position on this bill until we see the final form of the conference report. If the conference report disappoints us, we will join with all Asian Americans and request the President of the United States to veto this legislation.●

SMALL BUSINESSES AND THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have heard from small businesses throughout my district about the need to reduce the deficit. Their message is clear. We must cut the Federal deficit, because higher deficits push up interest rates. Small businesses can't finance inventory or expansion out of operating profits. They can't sell stocks or bonds. For small businesses to grow, they must borrow. But if the Federal Government continues to soak up nearly $200 billion each year from credit markets, small businesses will face severe credit shortages. And for what they can borrow, they will have to pay prohibitive rates of interest.

While small businesses are acutely vulnerable to interest rates, they can also be victimized by tax rates. Major corporations and large conglomerates can often turn losses into profits simply by manipulating their taxes. For big firms, the Tax Code is a catalog of tax breaks. Smaller business and families get stuck with the Federal tab.

I have joined several of my colleagues in calling for a bipartisan assault on the deficit. Every aspect of the Federal budget—with the sole exception of Social Security—should be on the table for review. This includes entitlements, defense expenditures, and taxes.

There is a growing sentiment among my constituents that we do not need more taxes or higher tax rates but a different, simpler, and more efficient tax system. Other calls can be heard for comprehensive tax reform. I urge my colleagues, as we push forward with deficit-reduction strategies, to bring all proposals for comprehensive tax reform center stage. We can no longer pile tax upon tax, but must restore rational order and fairness to the tax structure.

Mr. Speaker, an editorial comment, published in the Washington Post on Monday, July 23, provides a clear statement of the linkage between tax reform and deficit reduction. I offer it now for my colleagues to consider. If the deficit makes tax increases unavoidable, it makes tax reform an urgent priority.

[From the Washington Post, July 23, 1984]

. . . SPECIFICALLY ON TAXES

Concerning Mr. Mondale's acceptance speech statement that both he and Ronald Reagan would have to raise taxes next year, Mr. Reagan says he would not raise taxes—not, at least, unless Congress met further large and implausible conditions regarding spending cuts. So there you have a choice between two positions—sharply defined, substantial and urgent.

Mr. Reagan has adroitly moved to avoid the whole subject by initiating a study of tax reform in general, with all questions and answers to be postponed until the study is completed after the election. But it's possible to lay out a few tests by which you can judge all the proposals that will be floated between now and November.

First, how much money? What's required is something more than $100 billion a year. But how much more? That depends on how much you want to cut out of present social spending. If, like ourselves, you think it unwise to go after more large reductions in the health and welfare programs, you had better use a figure of $125 billion a year as the minimum needed for new revenue in the next presidential term.

Next, which tax? The simplest would be a surtax on your present income tax. But that would only perpetuate and magnify all the present inequities in the income tax law. As for closing loopholes and abolishing preferences in the present law, one by one, that's not realistic. You have only to consider the vast amount of effort it took to get through Congress the very modest bill that Mr. Reagan signed last week, raising $50 billion in additional taxes over the next three years. The politics of piecemeal tax reform is the legislative equivalent of World War I—trench warfare, in which the defensive weapons are much more effective than the offensive ones. The real choice probably comes down either to a national sales tax—a rate of 10 percent would suffice—or a sweeping and fundamental revision of the income tax like the Bradley-Gephardt plan.

That leads to the final test: what's fairer? The income tax is a great deal fairer than a sales tax. But either would be preferable to the consequences of letting the deficit keep rolling along.

The deficit is pushing up interest rates—and Mr. Reagan's Treasury Department is flatly and absurdly wrong in continuing to quibble about it. But if the deficit is making trouble now, it is going to make much more trouble over the next several years. There's a circular process operating here. The deficit not only pushes up interest rates, but also adds to the federal debt on which the government pays interest. The rising interest costs then increase the deficit, and so on around again. Federal interest payments have doubled since 1980, which is to say that they have been rising much faster than either defense spending or Social Security. To say that it can't be sustained is simple arithmetic.

The issue isn't whether you like paying taxes. The real issue is what you're willing to pay to avoid the highly unappealing alternative, and in what form you prefer to pay it. The Reagan administration has ruled the whole subject unmentionable for the duration. Mr. Mondale is discussing it with his listeners as a responsibility that, as both he and they know, is unavoidable.●

1984 ANNUAL OPINION SURVEY RESULTS

HON. ELDON RUDD

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, each year I take the opportunity to conduct a survey of my constituents in Arizona's Fourth Congressional District in an effort to seek their views on key issues which will be facing the House of Representatives throughout the year.

Thousands of Arizonans in the Fourth District responded to this year's survey. Their advice is invaluable.

I wish to share the results of the 1984 survey with my colleagues and insert them in the RECORD at this point:

1984 ANNUAL OPINION SURVEY RESULTS

1. Do you approve or disapprove of President Reagan's job performance thus far?
a. Approve, 70%.
b. Disapprove, 18%.
c. Not sure, 11%.

2. In your opinion, the best way(s) to reduce federal budget deficits is (are) to: (check one or more)
a. increase taxes, 13%.
b. reduce the rate of increased spending for social programs, 40%.
c. reduce the rate of foreign aid, 53%.
d. reduce the rate of increase for national defense, 19%.
e. reduce the growth of all federal spending, 74%.

3. One proposal to exert greater control over federal spending is to give the President authority to veto specific portions of government spending bills, rather than having to accept or reject an entire bill. Do you favor or oppose this "Line-Item Veto?"
a. Favor, 80%.
b. Oppose, 12%.
c. Undecided, 7%.

4. Do you favor or oppose Congress enacting tougher laws, such as fining employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens, to stop illegal immigration?
a. Favor Tougher Immigration Laws, 81%.
b. Oppose Tougher Immigration Laws, 9%.
c. Not Sure, 9%.

5. Do you favor or oppose granting amnesty to the millions of illegal aliens currently in the United States as part of a comprehensive program of immigration reform?
a. Favor Amnesty, 18%.
b. Oppose Amnesty, 66%.
c. Undecided, 15%.

6. In your opinion, has President Reagan's economic program been a success or failure?
a. Success, 66%.
b. Failure, 15%.
c. Not Sure, 18%.

7. A proposal calling for merit pay for teachers has been suggested as a way to reward the outstanding teachers whose work upgrades educational quality. Do you favor or oppose merit pay for teachers?
a. Favor Merit Pay, 71%.
b. Oppose Merit Pay, 18%.
c. Undecided, 10%.

8. When Congress debates the defense for the next fiscal year, there are likely to be a series of votes on attaining a defense posture sufficient to assure our defenses. Do you believe that our national security requires us to be stronger than our adversaries, or not?
a. Yes, 75%.
c. Undecided, 6%.

9. Investment decisions must be made soon if industrial and commercial activity in outer space is to be an important source for economic growth and new jobs for the future. Would you favor or oppose government encouragement of space commercialization?
a. Favor Space Commercialization, 61%.
b. Oppose Space Commercialization, 18%.
c. Not Sure, 19%.

10. The recent Bi-partisan Commission Report on Central America has recommended increased U.S. economic and military aid to the region over the next five years. Do you favor or oppose increased aid to the region?
a. Favor Increased Aid, 51%.
b. Oppose Increased Aid, 33%.
c. Not Sure, 14%.

11. Do you favor or oppose legislation to authorize the death sentence for federal crimes of treason, espionage, and homicide?
a. Favor Death Sentence, 85%.
b. Oppose Death Sentence, 7%.
c. Undecided, 6%.

12. Should the U.S. Constitution be amended to require a balanced federal budget, except in time of national emergencies, or not?
a. Favor Balanced Budget Amendment, 73%.
b. Oppose Balanced Budget Amendment, 12%.
c. Undecided, 12%.

13. In your opinion, the best way(s) to prevent the bankruptcy of the Medicare program is (are): (check one or more)
a. Stricter controls on Medicare reimbursements, 81%.
b. Increasing Medicare taxes, 11%.
c. Shifting more costs to beneficiaries, 22%.
d. Raising the age for Medicare eligibility, 22%.

14. The U.S. currently bears 25 percent of the total cost of operating the 158-nation United Nations. Should the U.S. limit the contrbuition to our share of the population represented in the organization—about 5 percent, or not?
a. Yes, 83%.
b. No, 11%.
c. Undecided, 5%.

15. Do you support a Constitutional Amendment to declare English the official language of the United States, or not?
a. Yes, 80%.
b. No, 16%.
c. Undecided, 3%.●

THE CONGRESS MUST ACT TO ENSURE PAY EQUITY FOR WOMEN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last week in San Francisco, on the very doorstep of my own congressional district, the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits held hearings on the Pay Equity Act of 1984. On that occasion, I made a statement strongly supporting this important piece of legislation.

I now place in the RECORD that statement.

TESTIMONY OF THE HONORABLE TOM LANTOS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYEE BENEFITS ON H.R. 5029—"THE PAY EQUITY ACT OF 1984" SAN FRANCISCO, CA, JULY 17, 1984

Madam Chairperson, as a professional economist I am deeply concerned about the consequences to our society when we continue to permit enormous inequalities in pay for work of equal value solely because of sex. The price our society pays for such discrimination is the cost of the quality of life for women and children. Indeed, we have reached the point that the slogan, "the feminization of poverty," is not only widely used but it accurately reflects actual conditions in our nation.

Women have entered the workforce in growing numbers in recent decades. Today, more than half of the women in the United States are employed, while only 30 years ago that number was 30 percent. Today's working women are concentrated in low-paying dead-end jobs. Nearly 80 percent work in clerical, service, and semi-skilled or unskilled occupations. Nationally, women earn only 57 cents for every dollar earned by a man. The small size of the Susan B. Anthony dollar, which has been discontinued by the U.S. Mint, was an ironic symbol of the worth of the woman's dollar!

Adding to the serious implication of these statistics is the fact that 9.4 million families, one of every six families, is a household headed by a single woman. More than half of all children living in poverty are in families headed by women. For black children, the proportion is two-thirds. Single female heads of household have an average income of $10,000 compared to nearly $30,000 for a two-parent household with both parents working.

This problem is further compounded by the fact that retirement and social security benefits are based on previously earned income. With years of low income elderly women are left in even greater poverty when they can no longer work. Of the 4.4 million elderly who live below the poverty level in our nation, 72 percent of them are women.

What serious social problems fester in our society when children grow up in homes with hard-working but inadequately paid mothers? These women struggle to make ends meet but all too often they are unable to provide a financially secure environment. The expectations and aspirations, as well as the potential for their children are crushed. The hope and optimism of the mothers dies as well. This death of human spirit is insidious but indisputable. It is tragic, but I feel anger—not dispair. We can and must do something about it.

I am fighting to see women receive equal economic treatment. The issue is not only one of poverty, but equally important, it is one of principle. I have two intelligent and beautiful daughters, both are well educated professionals—and yet both of them face the prospect of being treated as "women" in the work force. Their training and experience will simply not be considered "equal" to that of men with similar backgrounds.

The phenomenon of sex inequality is not new. In the Old Testament the book of Leviticus puts the value of a women at 30 shekels but that of a man is 50. Margaret Mead reported: "There are villages in which men fish and women weave, and in which women fish and men weave. But in either type of village, the work done by the men is valued higher than the work done by the women."

The gender gap persists, but surely it is not inevitable. Two decades ago the Equal Pay Act and the Civil Rights Act were passed prohibiting employers from paying women less than men when the work was similar and required equal skill or training. These laws have not been enforced, however, as is evident from the statistics.

We must make a frontal attack on such lethargic enforcement of our laws. I give my commitment here today to continue to fight for these issues, to join my colleagues in the House to build a strong coalition to enact essential legislation assuring women an equal partnership in our economy and in our society.

I fully support H.R. 5092 as a much-needed step toward more effective oversight of laws which prohibit discrimination in compensation. Madam Chairperson, I commend you and the subcommittee for your work on this legislation and your holding this public hearing today. I appreciate the opportunity to participate with you today.●

CONGRESS AND TECHNOLOGY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, July 11, 1984 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONGRESS AND TECHNOLOGY

Not long ago, a few colleagues and I attended a meeting with the Speaker of the House. As we reviewed the congressional schedule, the Speaker commented, "Most of these bills wouldn't have been on Congress' legislative agenda ten years ago." One factor that explains the truth of his remark is the relentless advance of technology in medicine, warfare, agriculture, and many other fields. Keeping up with technological change has become a formidable challenge for Congress.

Information technology above all is changing the world and setting bold challenges before Congress. Whole new industries making and selling microchips and software have sprung up around the country. One third of the nation's households are connected to cable television systems that use satellites to transmit programs from thousands of miles away, and videocassette recorders allow people to tape these programs for viewing whenever they wish. Thousands of firms use computers to do business, the military relies on state-of-the-art communications to defend us, and nearly all people have some information about them stored in vast data banks. Personal computers soon may be as common as telephones and typewriters.

Faced with basic laws written decades ago in a much less technologically sophisticated day, members of Congress are beginning to see that they must grapple with the consequences of explosive technological growth. In many cases, information technology simply leapfrogs over these laws and renders them ineffective or irrelevant. Problems of copyright law, computer crime, national security, and personal privacy suddenly have jumped to the top of the nation's agenda.

While Congress accepts the benefits promised by the new information technology, it should not hesitate to look hard at the problems. Congress must realize that the technology is moving so rapidly that laws enacted as little as four years ago are already outdated. Indeed, the pace of change is such that some legislation is obsolete even before it is enacted. The job of keeping up is most difficult because members of Congress, most of whom have little technical background, are being asked not only to understand the workings of computers, satellites, and the like, but also to make decisions on the regulation of these devices.

Take copyright law, for example, the area that may be most affected by the new information technology. The last major overhaul of the law (which prohibits the copying of books or films without the consent of the authors or makers) took place in 1976, but change left the amendments behind almost before they went into effect in 1978. Questions have arisen about how to protect new creations, such as microchips, from pirates who would copy them without the consent of the makers. Are these microchips like books or films, or are they machines better protected by patent law? Other questions have to do with new ways to copy old forms of information. Should extra royalties be paid to the makers when materials under copyright, such as movies and television programs, are transmitted by cable and satellite, or when viewers employ their own equipment to tape the materials for private use? How will the copyright holder's right be enforced? Congress now has before it legislation technology.

Equally difficult issues revolve around the security of computers and the data that they contain, whether they are located in a military command center or in the offices of a large corporation. Breaking into computers is easier, and has become more common, then has been generally believed. With enough determination and time and a good computer, anyone can hook into a growing international web of military and commercial data banks. This fact dramatically increases the chance of minor disruption, and also the risk of espionage, fraud, larceny, extortion, embezzlement, and sabotage. The ease of invasion and the prospect that the situation may worsen as millions of computers are hooked onto telephone lines have fueled demands that Congress act. It is considering legislation that would create clear-cut penalties for tampering with data.

Concerns about individual freedom are as pervasive as concerns about the security of military and commercial information. Advances in information technology that allow data banks to communicate with one another have outstripped the development of laws that could protect individual freedom. Such services as electronic mail, for instance, transmit vast amounts of data on people instantaneously, greatly expanding the opportunity for electronic eavesdropping. Equally important is the nature of the data exchanged. The federal government maintains an average of 15 files on each citizen, and state governments are not lagging too far behind. outside government, banks, insurance companies, and schools amass computerized information on customers, clients, and students. Information on people's habits, health problems, religion, political associations, and finances are there for the curious to see, and the incentive to misuse the information is growing. The Privacy Act of 1974 has become ineffective, and so we must address again how we will defend the constitutional right to privacy, the presumption of innocence, and the prohibitions against self-incrimination and unreasonable searches and seizures.

It seems to me that Congress ought to take two steps before all else. First, it must forge a better relationship with the scientific and engineering communities. Such a relationship may not have been necessary in the past; today, it is urgently needed. Congress must seek from the technicians the guidance it needs to develop public policy for all kinds of new technology. Also, members of Congress must do all they can to keep up with the technological revolution. The Congressional Research Service, the Office of Technology Assessment, and other agencies that assist Congress can make a contribution in this regard, perhaps by joining forces to prepare continuing studies of the ways in which Congress might legislate more efficiently and effectively for the future. My feeling is that Congress had better begin to improve its capacity to deal with the explosion of technology now occurring.●

A SAFE ENVIRONMENT DOES NOT THREATEN CHEMICAL INDUSTRY

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are well aware, the concern of the American people regarding the disposal of toxic waste has been intense. As a result, considerable legislative attention has been focused on this problem. Although the need to enact a comprehensive reform of the Nation's laws governing hazardous waste management remains urgent, the progress that the chemical industry is accomplishing on its own should not be obscured.

Recently, the Du Pont Co. announced that its plant in Pennsville Township, NJ, will provide wastewater treatment and waste incineration services to other companies. This is not an act of charity: Du Pont can expect to profit from this venture. Nevertheless, it represents a significant step toward the goal of a safer, cleaner environment. The Du Pont Co., which is to be commended for its efforts in this area, has proven that protection of health and the environment is in fact compatible with a secure and prosperous chemical industry.

A recent editorial in the Gloucester County Times, Woodbury, NJ, provides an excellent summary of the benefits offered by Du Pont's involvement in proper hazardous waste management.

The editorial, which appeared on June 12, 1984, follows:

DU PONT HAS SKILLS FOR TOXIC WASTE JOB

It's a good sign for those concerned about the environment that the Du Pont Co. is getting into the industrial waste disposal business.

The company announced last week it had formed a unit at its Deepwater chemical plant in Pennsville Township to provide wastewater treatment and waste incineration services to other companies. The Du Pont Environmental Services Group will use wastewater treatment capacity at the plant to purify liquid waste and a special furnace to treat contaminated metal.

Du Pont enjoys a superb reputation as a pioneer in the chemical industry, having invented many of the fibers used to produce an endless number of the products we take for granted today. You can find the Du Pont trademark on everything from kitchen counter tops to the clothing on our backs.

So it's reassuring that a company with the resources and knowledge to invent Decron and Teflon is getting involved in cleaning up the environment.

It's also reassuring in our own area, because we know the company has to care what happens in our environment because all of its workers and managers live here.

We can't expect to make meaningful strides in the quest to eliminate pollution in our environment unless big business gets behind the move. You can't get much bigger than Du Pont, and that's why this new endeavor is so important to all of us.

Certainly the Du Pont Co. is getting involved because there is profit to be made. It's also true also that the company works with and disposes of many chemicals that can pollute the environment if not handled properly.

So it has a financially vested interest in this endeavor. And that's good. That's what makes the project believable and, to use a business phrase, "doable."

As group manager Nicholas J. DiMurino put it, "Regulations to reduce waste and protect groundwater have produced an opportunity for Du Pont to use its resources in solving environmental problems. We believe Du Pont management, safety experience and technical capabilities can be marshaled to help solve waste disposal problems that may seem unsolvable.

Such nightmare as the contaminated oil that fills lagoons at the Bridgeport Rental and Oil Services Co. site in Logan Township could be treated at a facility such as Du Pont's.

Maybe if other major chemical and petroleum industries get involved along with Du Pont, we can rid the environment of all of these man-made nightmares that plague us worldwide.

In the meantime, Du Pont's entry into this field is indeed welcomed.●

THE AMERICAN COMMUNITY: WHOSE VISION WILL PREVAIL?

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the idea of community was mentioned many times during the recent Democratic Convention. But the world can have radically different meanings, depending upon the speaker. If Walter Mondale is correct, then the people of the United States should be trying to build one big community called the United States. But if Ronald Reagan is correct, we have one Nation but many, many communities, out of which we draw diversity, innovation and resiliency. Mondale's vision of community is one that leads inevitably to centralization; President Reagan's is one that takes the diverse strengths of America and uses them. This election is going to be one that presents those competing visions to the American people.

Long before Mondale gave us his vision of community, scholar William A. Schambra of the American Enterprise Institute had been doing scholarly work on the two concepts of community. Recently he distilled the essence of that work into an article for the Wall Street Journal. I believe this article accurately portrays the major issue of this election. I urge our colleagues to read this important article.

At this point, I wish to insert into the RECORD, "Cuomo's Sense of Community Is a Political Hand-Me-Down" by William A. Schambra, in the Wall Street Journal, Tuesday, July 24, 1984.

CUOMO'S SENSE OF COMMUNITY IS A POLITICAL HAND-ME-DOWN

(By William A. Schambra)

"America is one, indivisible community," Walter Mondale asserted as he introduced Geraldine Ferraro to the nation. "We believe we must be the family of America, recognizing that at the heart of the matter we are bound to one another," added Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York in his stirring keynote address at last week's Democratic convention. It appears that this notion—the vision of America as one, great national community or family—will be at the heart of the Democrats' message this year. But the Democratic vision of community is seriously flawed, and President Reagan must put forth his own ideals of community or risk conceding the moral high ground to Mr. Mondale.

Democratic presidents since Franklin Roosevelt have built their programs and rhetoric around an image of national community, calling upon Americans to substitute for their traditional self-interested individualism the compassion, concern and willingness to share benefits and burdens that are usually to be found only within families and tightly knit communities. Roosevelt, for instance, described his New Deal as "extending to our national life the old principle of local community." Twenty years ago this summer, Lyndon Johnson—the prophet of national "consensus," or unity—called upon America to come together in a "Great Society" that would serve "not only the needs of the body and the demands of commerce, but the desire for beauty and the hunger for community." And now, in speech after speech, Walter Mondale lovingly describes the sense of mutual concern and community to be found in his boyhood home, Elmore, Minn., and urges the nation as a whole to embrace those virtues. This Democratic vision of national community has manifested itself over the years in a powerful central government whose programs have been designed to "integrate" marginal groups into the broader national society, and to ameliorate material inequalities and other differences that might disrupt national oneness.

The solid truth in this Democratic vision is that there are moments when we can and must become one, indivisible community—primarily in times of great national crises, such as depressions and wars. The difficulty is that such events are (happily for the republic) not always available. The Democrats therefore turn to dynamic, articulate presidents who try rhetorically to recreate in ordinary times the extraordinary circumstances of crisis. A favorite device for doing so is the "moral equivalent of war," which was Jimmy Carter's method of handling the energy crisis. President Johnson used the image of a "war on poverty," he said, because the "military image" would "rally the nation" and "sound a call to arms which will stir the people." Gov. Cuomo, in his bleak portrayal of modern America as a "tale of two cities," may have been testing a new version of this device—the moral equivalent of the Great Depression.

The extraordinary sense of community created in crisis cannot be sustained, however, even by the most skillfully crafted moral equivalent of war or depression. For a people with a deep tradition of individualism, the self-forgetting public spiritedness this requires is too strenuous. Not that Americans are selfish or mean-spirited; it is just that, as Alexis de Tocqueville observed 150 years ago, Americans satisfy these desires for belonging and community within smaller, sub-national groups, like the family, neighborhood, church, and voluntary and ethnic associations. Within such small groups close bonds can truly form, inspiring, without elaborate evocations of national crisis, the sort of sharing of benefits and burdens Gov. Cuomo would like to see. The ultimate irony of the attempt to extend this community-mindedness to the national level is that the massive federal programs undertaken in its name crowd out the social-welfare functions formerly performed by such smaller groups, thereby weakening them and undermining the true basis for community in America. When we try to transfer the town of Elmore's virtues to the entire country, we not only fail to create a national Elmore, we also make it more difficult for Elmore itself to retain its community values.

Nonetheless, the vision of national community remains a powerful symbol for Democrats. They are clearly hoping that it will permit them to retain the moral high ground in this election. They will succeed if the Republicans confine their response to a celebration of economic recovery and entrepreneurial individualism. Nothing could suit the Democrats better; they have decades of experience in making this appear instead as a mean-spirited commitment to Social Darwinism and "survival of the fittest." They could not do this in 1980, when Ronald Reagan built his campaign around the themes of family, neighborhood and local community. He persuasively made the case that a powerful central government does not facilitate but, in fact, undermines the cause of community in America. The outcome of this election may turn on President Reagan's ability to make that argument again.●

PERSONALLY, I AM OPPOSED TO ABORTION, BUT . . .

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, one of the most frequently heard moral evasions of the responsibility of legislators to protect innocent preborn life is the remark: "Personally I'm opposed to abortion, but I would not impose my beliefs on anyone else." If one sincerely believes it is wrong to want abortions done, it is surely wrong to want them done by means of public funding. Imagine applying that same logic to the question of slavery.

A most learned article on this very important topic appears in the July 1984 issue of Homiletic and Pastoral Review written by Prof. Germain Grisez of Mount Saint Mary's College, Emmitsburg, MD. I commend it to all who are interested in this subject:

The article follows:

A CRITIQUE OF TWO THEOLOGICAL PAPERS

(By Germain Grisez)

In November 1983, the Secretariat of the Leadership Conference of Women Religious distributed a packet of papers bearing upon the handling of the case of Agnes Mary Mansour. This packet included two theological papers, one by Charles E. Curran and one by Richard McCormick, S.J. Because these papers have been widely circulated and their central arguments are often used in other contexts, I offer the following critical reflections.

In his paper, "The Differences between Personal Morality and Public Policy," Curran tries to show the relationship between morality and law. He thinks he shows with respect to the public funding of abortion that while bishops can take a position on the matter, "They must realize that they are not teaching here in the same way they teach on faith and morals. They are dealing with the much more complex case of law and public policy."

Curran invokes John Courtney Murray, Jacques Maritain, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Vatican II in support of a distinction between the "personal moral order and the legal order." To confirm his opinion, he appeals to the U.S. bishops' support of the Hatch amendment and to statements in "The Challenge of Peace" regarding the distinction between principles and applications.

Not all the sources Curran uses are of equal weight; one could criticize some of them. One also could point out defects in Curran's use of every one of them. For example, summarizing the position of St. Thomas on the relationship between the moral and the legal orders, Curran says: "Civil laws should suppress only the more grievous vices from which the majority of human beings can abstain (I-II, q. 97, a. 2)." Actually, Thomas says:

"Law is laid down for a great number of people, of which the majority have no high standard of morality. Therefore it does not forbid all the vices, from which upright men can keep away, but only those grave ones which the average man can avoid, and chiefly those which do harm to others and have to be stopped if human society is to be maintained, such as murder and theft and so forth (S.t., 1-2, q. 96, a. 2)."

But no detailed critique of Curran's paper is necessary, because his argument is beside the point. Support of public abortion funding is not simply a case of law and public policy. It is a personal moral act whose object is direct abortion.

While one must recognize the difference between law and morality, the choices by which laws are made and carried out are themselves personal choices which are morally good or bad. Neither the teaching authority of the Church nor any sound Catholic theologian ever has granted that public officials may adopt and execute as public policy what is intrinisically immoral—a program of killing the innocent.

Obviously, a legislator who really opposed abortion might vote for a bill including abortion funding, since that item could be inseparable from many others which deserve support. Likewise a clerk might process checks paying for abortions without choosing that any abortion be done. One could have supported or voted for the Hatch amendment to prevent the abortions which would have been prevented by its adoption, only reluctantly accepting (as an unwanted side effect) those other abortions which it would not have prevented.

However, one cannot erect a wall of separation between personal morality and public policy. The public funding of abortions is not simply a system of reimbursing poor women for their medical bills; rather, it is a system of procuring abortions for poor women in order to reduce public welfare expenditures. Anyone who advocates or supports public funding of abortions understands that fact and wills that abortions be done with these public funds. This willing of abortion is a personal moral act, of the advocate or supporter of public funding.

As the point of departure for his paper, "The Magisterium," Richard A. McCormick, S.J., cites an instance of the asserted position of many politicians and other public figures, who say they are morally opposed to abortion but favor funding of abortions. In view of the preceding, what are we to think of this position? I think it can be interpreted and evaluated in several different ways.

Many people regard the expression of this position by politicians as a typical example of professional insincerity. Rather cynically, people assume that those who say they personally oppose abortion but practically want abortions done with public funds are simply lying in an inept attempt to mollify proponents of the right to life of the unborn. But while this interpretation may be accurate in some cases, it is not the only possible one.

The politician who expresses moral opposition to abortion but supports government funding also could be confused. Prior to 1973, when laws against abortion were the issue, some politicians—sincerely or insincerely—opposed certain methods of legal control of abortion without falsifying their claim to oppose abortion itself. That was possible because moral opposition to abortion does not necessarily entail any particular legal method of controlling it. Thus, there was a policy problem on which even sincere proponents of the right to life could disagree.

Once the 1973 decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court removed virtually all legal restrictions on abortion, the new issue of public funding of abortions emerged. The issue of funding is not a question of government reaction to abortion but of government participation in doing abortions.

However, some politicians continued to talk as though the distinction valid in the earlier situation were still relevant. In some cases, then, the inherently inconsistent position perhaps has been maintained without insincerity through confusion. Curran's paper both reflects such confusion and shows how it can be engendered.

FUNDING IS PARTICIPATING

Those who say they morally oppose abortion but support public funding also can be expressing a sincere view, but one which assigns "moral" a much narrower significance than it has in Catholic teaching. Thinking that the moral domain is that of personal feelings about action, their moral opposition is a genuine attitude of repugnance. But on their view, moral criteria cannot be ultimate in practical decision making. In actual practice, morality must be subject to realistic compromises.

Curran's effort to restrict the moral sphere to that of private life has something of this view. It is very different from the traditional teaching that the immorality of direct abortion is a truth to which everyone's actual choices should conform, not simply a personal attitude of limited practical relevance.

There also is a hint of subjectivism in Curran's argument when he claims that there can be differing judgments resulting in different legitimate positions within the Catholic Church on public funding of abortions:

"On the public funding question, it is quite easy to see how those opposed to abortion could be opposed to public funding of abortion. However, others could argue that poor people should not be discriminated against either in respect to more affluent people or in respect to medical procedures which they might want for themselves."

Curran ignores the fact that these differing positions logically follow from the opposed judgments they embody on the morality of direct abortion.

Those who regard direct abortion as a morally grave matter must, if they are consistent, reject public funding, for to approve it is to want abortions to be done. They will not consider refusal of public funds discrimination against the poor, for there is no discrimination in refusing to eliminate poverty by eliminating poor people and refusing to help the poor kill their children so that they might share more fully in the self-indulgence of wealthier members of society.

However, those who regard direct abortion as morally acceptable may well want abortions done with public funds, so that the poor will neither be a burden to the wealthy nor be deprived of their fair share in the liberty to kill enjoyed by the wealthy.

In "The Challenge of Peace," the American bishops do distinguish, as Curran and McCormick say, between moral principles and their application to particular policy choices. However, the bishops make it clear that the common moral teaching of the Church belongs on the side of principles. For example, the pastoral says (in 9):

"In this pastoral letter, too, we address many concrete questions concerning the arms race, contemporary warfare, weapons sytems, and negotiating strategies. We do not intend that our treatment of each of these issues carry the same moral authority as our statement of universal moral principles and formal Church teaching."

In other words, the option for one current policy choice among several, all compatible with the moral principles taught by the Church, does not have the same moral authority as the reaffirmation of these principles in continuity with the entire Catholic tradition.

MORAL PRINCIPLES OUTWEIGH OTHERS

That direct abortion is always gravely excluded is a matter of universal moral principle and formal Church teaching. The issue of public funding involves no abstruse problem of application. All that is required is the specification of the general principle by referring to the method of paying for the abortions: Since it is wrong to want abortions done, it is wrong to want them done by means of public funding. This specification is just as straightforward as: Since it is wrong to want abortions done, it is wrong to want them done by D & C, by saline, or by some other method.

In The Challenge of Peace: (105) the American bishops affirm: "We know, of course, that no end can justify means evil in themselves, such as the executing of hostages or the targeting of non-combatants," and (332): "In simple terms, we are saying that good ends (defending one's country, protecting freedom, etc.) cannot justify immoral means (the use of weapons which kill indiscriminately and threaten whole societies." Any attempt to justify public funding of abortion is an argument that some good end (reducing welfare costs and giving the poor services available to the wealthly) justifies an immoral means (procuring the death of the unborn).

From the preceding, it is clear that McCormick is mistaken in thinking that someone who favors government funding of abortion holds a position consistent with that of the magisterium. Subjectively, such as a person may be sincere. He or she may think morality is only a matter of private feelings or may be confused into overlooking the fact that wanting public funding of abortions is wanting abortions to be done with public funds. But objectively, anyone who tries to justify public funding of abortion takes a position contrary to that of the magisterium's absolute rejection of direct abortion.

Nor is McCormick making adequate distinctions when he claims: "Implied in the phrase 'contrary to the magisterium' is the notion that one may not, within the canons of Catholic loyalty, hold positions that diverge from those of the magisterium." For McCormick, and the theological materials he invokes in his argument, ignore a vital distinction among the teachings proposed by the ordinary magisterium.

As Lumen gentium, 25, makes clear, these are of two sorts. Some, although never defined by any pope or council, are proposed infallibly by the universal, ordinary magisterium:

"Although the bishops individually do not enjoy the prerogative of infallibility, they nevertheless proclaim the teaching of Christ infallibly, even when they are dispersed throughout the world, provided that they remain in communion with each other and with the successor of Peter and that in authoritatively teaching on a matter of faith and morals they agree in one judgment as that to be held definitely."

Obviously, teachings which are proposed infallibly leave no room for dissent on the part of faithful Catholics.

However, other teachings of the ordinary magisterium can be mistaken, even though they may require and deserve religious submission of mind and will. Such teachings can deserve acceptance inasmuch as they are the magisterium's current best judgment of what God's word requires of Christians. However, that judgment, on the leading edge of developing doctrine and in truly prudential matters, can be mistaken, and faithful Christians can be led by superior claims of faith itself to withhold their submission to it.

Catholic teaching that direct abortion is always gravely wrong has been proposed down the centuries by Catholic bishops, in communion with one another and the popes, all teaching authoritatively and agreeing in the same judgment as absolutely binding on every conscience. Generally, this teaching on abortion has been proposed as part of the revealed truth that innocent human life ought never to be taken by human authority. Thus, although there is no solemn definition of the grave immorality of abortion, faithful Catholics have rightly accepted this truth as part of their faith in God's law: "Thou shalt not kill"; "The innocent and just thou shalt not slay."

HOW CAN YOU RATIONALIZE KILLING?

It follows that a bishop makes no mistake when he implies that there is no room for dissent against the teaching of the ordinary magisterium on abortion. Moreover, in excluding dissent on a teaching such as this, he by no means absolutely excludes dissent from those teachings of the ordinary magisterium which are not proposed infallibly. Conversely, a bishop or body of bishops who allow for dissent from teachings not proposed infallibly do not thereby approve dissent on the morality of abortion.

The samples of theological opinion McCormick offers all ignore the vital distinction between teachings infallibly proposed by the ordinary magisterium and those which could be mistaken. Yves Congar, O. P., in criticizing the teaching on the magisterium in Humani generis, makes it clear that even Pius XII did not always attend sufficiently to this distinction.

McCormick cites passages from Karl Rahner, S. J., André Naud, and Bernard Häring, C.SsR. These passages show only that other theologians who ignore the status of the teachings from which they dissent agree with McCormick in claiming both that their dissent is justified and that the teaching of Vatican II summarized above has been nullified by dissenting theological opinion.

This line of argument by dissenting theologians is question begging, for by it they try to ground their authority in their own opinion and consensus. One might call this line of argument a strategy of theological boot-strapping.

Rahner argues that the magisterium's toleration of dissent from Humanae vitae falsifies the teaching of Lumen gentium, 25. This argument is fallacious. As Rahner and other theologians long urged, disciplinary and legal measures to enforce theological assent to teaching are of little use and only drive errors underground. For that reason, since Vatican II the magisterium has used such methods very sparingly.

But in the doctrinal field itself, the magisterium has by no means yielded to dissenting opinions. Familiaris consortio, for example, not only reaffirms the doctrine to which Rahner refers, but clarifies it, calls for further theological effort to explain it, and directs that pastoral practice uniformly conform to it.

André Naud says of Lumen gentium, 25: "The thought of the Church has, therefore, advanced in this matter." Thus, he preempts for himself and theologians who agree with him the claim not only to speak for the Church but be the Church.

Vatican II rightly ended the self-identification of the heirarchy with the Church. Now some theologians presume to omit from the Church the pope, the bishops who teach in union with him, the many theologians who firmly reject dissenting theologians opinions, and the faithful who continue to try to live by traditional Christian moral teaching.

If those public figures who express moral opposition to abortion but support public funding had lived in Nazi Germany, would they have said: "Personally, I am morally opposed to killing Jews, but I support the government's final solution to this problem?" Undoubtedly, they would vehemently reject this analogy. But what is the difference? Surely, in Nazi Germany they also could have found learned persons to argue in their defense.

"What is at stake here is not a matter of universal moral principle—the morality of killing human innocent beings—but a particular public policy for dealing with the Jewish problem. The magisterium has never addressed this particular matter, and what is true in the personal moral order is not by that fact necessarily to be incorporated into law. In any case, there is nothing contrary to the magisterium in favoring the government's final solution, because reputable theologians agree that the magisterium might well be wrong on this complex question."

That line of argument surely would have appealed to antisemites, but it is transparently fallacious to us. We ought not to allow current prejudice against the unborn to blind us to the moral truth about public programs of abortion.●

FIGHTING HUNGER IN THE WORLD

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues a letter written by a constituent of mine in Huntington, WV, which appeared in the Herald-Dispatch on July 4, 1984. I commend these dedicated people on their commitment to fighting hunger in the world and urge my colleagues to take heed of the following letter stating the goals of this fine organization, the World Runners.

The letter follows:

ANTI-HUNGER MANIFESTO

To the editor:

The following excerpts are from the message that is being carried from Geneva, Switzerland, to Los Angeles, Calif., and will be carried across West Virginia July 10-11 by the local chapter of World Runners, including runners from Huntington, Chesapeake, Point Pleasant, Romney, Clarksburg and Parkersburg.

MANIFESTO AGAINST HUNGER

(This Manifesto was issued in Geneva, at the United Nations headquarters in New York, and in six other cities on June 24, 1981. It has been signed by 80 Nobel Prize Laureates and will be carried in the Baton by Relay '84 runners.)

"We appeal to all men and women of goodwill . . . to bring back to life the millions who, as victims of the political and economic upheavals of the world today, are suffering from hunger and privation.

"Their situation has no precedent. In a single year, more people suffer than all those who died in the holocausts of the first half of the century. Every day spreads the outrage further, an outrage that assaults both the world around us and our own spirit and conscience.

"Everyone who denounces this tragic state of affairs and seeks to remedy it knows that its causes are primarily political.

"So what we need, urgently, is a new political will, a determination to deal with the causes of the situation and to mitigate its effects; and this must be found at once. . . .

"We must see that the great international organizations take action, together with states and with their peoples, to combat and overcome the starvation that is overwhelming a large part of the human race today.

"Each and everyone of us must support measures to save the living. We must not let them die through our inertia, through our failure to act, through our indifference. . . .

"If only people are told what is happening, then the world's dark future, which now seems to threaten everyone in it, may be changed.

"But only if we take action.

"Now is the time to act, now is the time to create, now is the time for us to live in a way that will give life to others."

INDIVIDUALS OF IMMENSE TALENT

HON. ELDON RUDD

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, every so often we encounter individuals of immense talent and sense of duty to their country, and I recently encountered such an individual in Albert E. Savoy, age 89. Mr. Savoy introduced himself to me at a Civil Air Patrol function in Phoenix, AZ, recently.

As a lieutenant colonel in the Civil Air Patrol, Albert Savoy remains active in training prospective pilots who are pursuing a career in the Armed Forces. He has and continues to be a practicing lawyer, a licensed pilot, an engineer, active in multiple philanthropies and organizations, and first and foremost, a patriotic and devoted citizen. Of interest is the fact that he, at age 82, was the oldest man to ever receive his private pilot's license and was so recognized in the "Guinness Book of World Records." Of course, longevity for the Savoy family is nothing unusual since his great-grandfather lived to be 108, his grandfather 95 and his father to 96 years of age.

His motto is "live life to the fullest."

Albert Savoy, a descendant of the Royal House of Savoy, whose ancestor was a French general who served on the general staff of Napoleon Bonaparte, is a truly impressive individual. I urge my colleagues to read the attached article from the June 1982 Ohio State University Alumni magazine.

FOREVER YOUNG

He's always been involved in activities, but Albert Savoy, Eng'22, has no intention of slowing down his pace. In fact, at the age of 87, Savoy has his fingers in so many pies that sometimes he loses track.

For example, he's been practicing law in Columbia and Lancaster (O.) for 55 years. He belongs to the Elks, the American Legion, and several professional organizations, too. He's also extremely proud of his three sons with whom he keeps in close contact. But what sets him apart from his contemporaries today is his avocation for flying.

According to the Guinness Book of World Records, Savoy at the age of 82, was the oldest man every to receive his private pilot's license. Even though this was his first official license, flying is anything but new to him.

He says that he first became fascinated with aviation in 1911 when he was a sophomore in high school, and an aviator visited his hometown. "His plane was the most primitive thing you could imagine," recalls Savoy. "He packed parts in the back of a truck and put it together in the field. Then he flew from one end of a racetrack to the other."

A few years later, Savoy decided to take up the sport on his own. "In those days, you learned by being a nosy kid who flew with someone who had a plane," he remembers. He received further training by observing pilots at McCook Field in Dayton, where he later became a flight instructor. At that time, there weren't any governmental restrictions on pilots and no licenses were required. The Air Force took him on as a civilian flight instructor during World War II, but he quit that assignment and enlisted in the Army as a "rookie doughboy."

"I love flying because I can think a lot when I get into the air," adds Savoy. "When detached from an annoying environment, I can philosophize and work out problems. But it's a demanding avocation, I have to be constantly alert," he contends.

As a lieutenant colonel in the Civil Air Patrol, Savoy remains active training aspiring pilots. through ground schools, camping practice drills, and other activities, Savoy is one of several veteran volunteers who also encourages young people interested in pursuing a career in the Armed Forces. Additionally, Savoy serves as the Ohio Legislative liaison officer for the Ohio Wing of the Air Patrol, where he lobbies for State funding for the air cadet program.

He maintains that he doesn't plan on stopping any of his activities in the near future, and despite his age, Savoy's law practice continues to thrive. Right now, he's involved in a $1 million case that he's confident of winning.

Savoy admits that he works all of the time. "I have no idea of how many hours a week I put in," he says. "Clients just keep coming and going. This makes it difficult to estimate how many cases I'm working on at once."

Longevity runs in Savoy's family. His great grandfather lived to be 108, his grandfather to 95, and his mother to 96 years of age. But Savoy has his own prescription for a long, happy life to pass along:

"I keep my brain active by always keeping myself interested in everything going on; I read all the time, and my body is in good condition. I have a diversity of interests, too. This brings a wide variety of stimulating people into my circle of friends." Ultimately, he advises, "Live life to the fullest!"●

THE 1984 SESSION

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, July 18, 1984, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE 1984 SESSION

When the second session of the 98th Congress began in January, few expected major results. Election-year sessions traditionally have been marked more by partisan bickering than by legislative initiative. With the House and the Senate under the leadership of different parties, and with an incumbent President up for reelection, even the Senate Majority Leader was predicting that Congress would take care of little more than the bare necessities. Yet when Congress adjourned at the end of June for its mid-year recess, it had compiled a surprising, even remarkable, record: a big deficit-reduction bill, greater progress on the 13 major appropriations bills than in earlier Congresses, and enactment of 226 laws, 61 more than it produced in 1983. Due to a rare ability to reach bi-partisan solutions in a political season, Congress was more active in the first six months of the second session than during any comparable period since 1978.

A basic shift in election-year politics in Congress made this record possible. Pressures not to ruffle feathers normally make it safer for Congress to avoid issues during an election year. This year, however, with wide dissatisfaction over deficits, with interest rates on the rise, and with awareness growing that Congress could be accused of doing nothing, pressures were right for significant legislative accomplishments. Although many pieces of legislation are still pending, the record to date is solid.

The major legislative accomplishment was passage of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. To address huge deficits, Congress approved part of its "down payment," easing the budget imbalance by $63 billion over the next three years through revenue increases and spending cuts. Revenue would be raised through restrictions on industrial development bonds and tax-motivated leasing transactions, curbs on abusive tax shelters, delays in future tax reductions, and an increase in the building depreciation period. Spending reductions would be made through changes in medicare (including a 15-month freeze on physicians' fees, increases in premiums paid by beneficiaries, and tighter limits on payments to hospitals), as well as through implementation of various recommendations of the Grace Commission.

With deficits expected to reach $600 billion during the next three years, this "down payment" does not solve the problem. Yet it is a good start, more than was expected six months ago. The tax increases, spending reductions, and reductions in domestic benefit programs complete key elements of Congress' attack on deficits. Another element, a limit on the growth of defense spending, remains to be negotiated but could represent up to one half of the package. Overall, the House is seeking to cut deficits by $183 billion over three years, while the Senate is seeking $138 billion in cuts.

Major bills in many other areas passed both the House and the Senate. Some were signed into law, and others are awaiting conference to iron out differences. These measures include: the first immigration reform in 30 years, containing sanctions against employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens and an amnesty for otherwise law-abiding aliens who immigrated illegally before 1982; a defense bill that would cut back on MX missiles and reject chemical weapons; bankruptcy reform that would restore the bankruptcy courts, curb consumer abuse, restrict the ability of companies to cancel labor agreements through bankruptcy, and protect farmers who stored grain in bankrupt elevators; important farm legislation to freeze federal price supports for various crops, expand surplus control programs, liberalize terms for federal loans to farmers, expand agricultural export programs, and make farmers who plow up fragile land ineligible for federal farm aid; a bill to help organ transplant agencies and patients in need of costly drugs; traffic safety legislation to encourage child restraints in vehicles and restrict federal highway funds to states with drinking ages under 21; a bill to bolster enforcement of court-ordered child support payments; legislation to begin development of a permanent manned space station; bills to reform procedures for removing social security disability beneficiaries from the rolls, as well as reform pension laws to make them fairer to women; legislation to upgrade education in mathematics and science; and a bill to broaden presidential control of security-related exports.

In foreign policy, Congress pushed hard for a withdrawal of the marines from Lebanon. Also, it boosted pressure on the administration for serious arms control, blocked funds for the covert war in Nicaragua, and condemned the mining of Nicaraguan ports by U.S. intelligence agencies.

Not all has gone smoothly. Other pieces of legislation that were taken up now appear to be stalled. Among these is a bill allowing student-initiated religious groups equal access to school facilities. Others are domestic content in imported cars, the Equal Rights Amendment, the youth subminimum wage, tax-free "enterprise zones" in inner cities, the Balanced Budget Amendment, amendments to the Clean Air Act, banking deregulation, parts of an anti-crime program, and a ban on sex discrimination in insurance.

Before the session draws to a close, Congress is likely to devote much of its time to the bills awaiting conference and the 13 appropriations bills. However, it may also begin looking at bills to reform natural gas pricing, clean up additional hazardous waste sites, broaden the clean water program, reform the bail law, impose sanctions against countries that engage in unfair trading practices, and revise cable television regulations. It is too early to say the all the accomplishments of this session are past.

Despite the solid record, my feeling is that Congress deserves the highest credit for laying next year's legislative foundation. There is a growing consensus that more action on deficits will be needed, and this will include action on popular entitlements and tax breaks. In a way, the easy work has been done, and the issues facing Congress next year promise to be among the most important and difficult in recent memory.●

IMPACT OF REAGAN CUTS ON CHILDREN, YOUTH, AND FAMILIES

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, in recent years we have seen an upsurge of interest in the American family. Although the debate about the family—its role and future—is often heated, there is general agreement that the family is the central institution in our society and must be protected and strengthened. There is also little disagreement that the family is affected by broad changes occurring in our society: The phenomenal growth in single parent-families, a declining birth rate, the increasing labor force participation of women, the high rate of inflation and its impact on families, and the effect of record high unemployment on families, with loss of both income and health insurance.

This concern about the family culminated in the 1980 White House Conference on Families and more recently in the creation of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, on which I serve. It has been the task of this select committee to assess the status of children, youth, and families, to gather information about problems confronting them, and look at both public and private efforts to remedy these problems and enhance the well-being of families.

The picture that the select committee has gleaned from its 22 hearings—12 in Washington and 10 in other regions of the country—is that parents are finding it increasingly difficult to provide for the basic needs of their children.

Essential family household expenses—food, clothing, shelter, utilities, transportation, and health care—rose faster between 1972 and 1981 than the Consumer Price Index as a whole. Consequently, the portion of family income not required for essential purchases has shrunk.

Experts reported that declining discretionary income make it more and more difficult for families to buy a home or to afford the cost of higher education for their children, even though these are part of the American dream.

The number of families who own their own home has declined. Families who want to buy a home have serious financial hurdles to jump. Interest rates have soared, and there is a declining pool of capital available to finance home mortgages since housing capital has been squeezed out by record high Federal budget deficits. Another housing barrier is the "affordability gap." Witnesses estimated that the gap between the cost of available housing and the price potential homeowners can afford to pay is about $14,000 apart. Another witness reported that 2 or 3 million households are doubling up because of the lack of housing, not only in the inner cities, but also in classic suburban neighborhoods.

Witnesses told the select committee about enormous increases in homelessness, hunger, child abuse, and infant mortality.

Although the national data reveal an apparent decline in infant mortality from 26 per 1,000 live births in 1960 to 12.8 per 1,000 in 1980, this data is misleading. The infant mortality rate is much higher in certain cities and States, especially in minority and low income communities. In 1950, the black infant death rate (43.9 per 1,000 live births) was 16 percent higher than the white rate (26.8 per 1,000 live births). By 1979, the black rate (21.8) was 91 percent higher than the white rate (11.4).

We found that more women in poor communities are not getting the prenatal care they need to ensure that their babies are born healthy. Even more alarming, the percentage of women getting early care is going down and the percentage getting no care is going up.

Witnesses reported evidence that low-income parents are increasingly being forced to choose between keeping their children and placing them in foster homes because they simply cannot afford to keep them at home. Father Thomas Harvey, executive director of the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the largest social service agency in the Nation, told the members of the select committee:

> High rates of long-term unemployment, frequent evictions, and spousal desertion can also mean parting with one's children. Our New Orleans agency and Galveston-Houston agency reported their experience with women facing the agonizing experience of deciding whether or not to give their children up for short-term crisis housing or for longer term foster care placement. Sometimes this is necessary to enable the mother to try to find employment and stabilize her situation.

Another witness suggested that poor mothers choose foster care because AFDC benefits are too low to adequately support a child. In some States, AFDC pays $264 per month for a single mother and three children. This does not go far in paying for rent, gas, electricity, water bills, transportation, food, and clothing for a family of four. AFDC benefits are low because they are not increased as the cost of living rises.

One witness reported that between 1974 and 1982, average payments for foster care children increased from $111 to $197 a month, while AFDC payments rose from only $35 to $49 per child per month. This decreased the average ratio of AFDC to foster care payments from 32 percent to 25 percent.

HOW HAVE FAMILIES AND THEIR CHILDREN FARED UNDER THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION?

As Chair of the Economic Security Task Force of the Select Committee, I have prepared a table that shows Presidential budget requests and congressional appropriations for fiscal years 1982, 1983, and 1984 for the areas of education, health, nutrition, social services, youth, housing, and entitlements. It also shows fiscal year 1981 appropriations, before the new administration took office, and Congressional Budget Office (CBO) forecasts of reductions in outlays for fiscal year 1982–85 due to legislative changes since January 1981. The CBO figures are based on services provided under 1980 law before the changes in eligibility requirements and benefit levels instituted during the Reagan administration.[1]

I have also prepared a series of tables that track fiscal year 1982–84 budget requests and appropriations for major programs that benefit children, youth, and families, and compare them with fiscal year 1981 appropriations for these programs.

While President Reagan extolls the value of the American family, his policies have been devastating to families. The Reagan budget cuts have had a crippling effect on programs for families. CBO projects that the programs that serve children, youth, and families will be cut by $62 billion in outlays during fiscal year 1982–85. The harm done by these cuts would have almost doubled if Congress had not rejected an additional $52 billion in appropriations cuts proposed by the Reagan administration during fiscal year 1982–84.

High unemployment and cuts in Government social spending have pushed families deeper into poverty, unable to find jobs because of economic conditions and ineligible for public programs because of cutbacks.

Increasing poverty rates show that the safety net has not been adequate to protect families. Both two-parent families and single parent homes have suffered under this administration.

Over one-half of the two million children pushed into poverty between 1980 and 1982 live in two-parent families and almost 90 percent of the children are white.

Black families are also hard hit by the domestic spending cuts. One out of four black children in two-parent families live in poverty, largely due to the high unemployment rates. In black families, 46 percent of which are single parent homes, one out of two children live in poverty.

Of all children in female-headed households, 56 percent live in poverty, but 70 percent of black children and more than 70 percent of Hispanic children in female-headed households live in poverty.

The Reagan budget cuts represent a step back from this country's commitment to high-risk children and families. It is disheartening that in many instances these cuts have interrupted basic programs that have been proven cost effective.

STATE AND LOCAL EFFORTS TO FILL THE GAP

The Federal spending cutbacks during the Reagan years have shifted a heavy burden onto State and local governments which are struggling to provide services to the truly needy with diminished Federal assistance. Lester Salamon of the Urban Institute told the select committee that when States have not been able to offset Federal cutbacks with either State funds or by shifting expenses among programs, they have responded by introducing fee systems, reducing the quality of care provided, and/or by shifting resources into shorter term emergency needs at the expense of longer term prevention activities.

With State and local government resources strained to their limits, there have been increased demands on private charitable organizations to provide these basic services. Salamon told the committee that the Federal budget cuts have already cost nonprofit organizations $8.6 billion for social service activities, and he estimated that nonprofits would lose $32 billion in revenues between 1982 and 1986 under measures already enacted or proposed. Salamon concluded that private giving cannot make up for this lost revenue, telling the committee:

If we take into account the level of private giving as of 1981, the anticipated rate of inflation, and the revenue losses that nonprofit organizations would sustain as a result of the budget changes already enacted or proposed, private giving would have to grow by at least 22 percent in 1982, 24 percent in 1983, and in excess of 30 percent in 1984, 1985, and 1986 to allow nonprofit organizations to maintain their 1980 level of activity. This represents a rate of increase in private giving that is two to three times greater than any that has been recorded in recent memory.

1984 AND BEYOND

The 1985 budget proposals continue the administration's efforts to reshape and limit the role of the Federal Government and reorder national priorities, shifting more responsibility to the private sector and State and local governments.

In sharp contract to the steep cuts in social programs has been increased military spending and larger tax cuts. Between 1981 and 1985 spending for national defense increased by 35 percent, a hefty $78 billion in constant dollars. The tax cuts enacted since January 1981 have reduced Federal revenues by an estimated $187 billion for fiscal year 1982–1984. Most of the cuts have decreased individual income taxes, primarily aiding middle- and upper-income people. Both increased military spending and the tax cuts have contributed to the growing Federal deficit.

CBO estimates that the budget deficit under policies now in place will rise from $190 billion in 1984 to $326 billion in 1989. The CBO reported that while the recession accounted for about half of the 1983 deficit, most of the deficits in future years will be the result of budget policies.[2] Most economists agree that deficits of this size will push up interest rates. There is also growing alarm about the extremely rapid growth in the outlays necessary to pay the interest on the national debt which CBO expects to rise from $90 billion in fiscal year 1983 to $218 billion in fiscal year 1989. Since outlays for interest on the debt are sensitive to interest rates, the costs of the debt will rise considerably if the interest rate increases.

There should be great concern that the burden of the Reagan spending cuts has been unevenly distributed. Programs for poor families have borne a disproportionate share of the cuts contained in the administration's budget proposals. Even though State and local governments, as well as private charities, have strained to meet the increased demand for human services, their resources have been inadequate to fill the gap caused by diminished Federal funding.

Children are generally given a low priority in our society. That is one of the reasons we find one out of every five children in the United States lives in poverty. Yet children are a precious resource that we cannot afford to waste. If the young are ignored or ill-treated, society will pay the price in the long run. It is important that we invest in preventive programs that help our disadvantaged grow into good citizens.

It is crucial that the Congress reject the President's 1985 budget proposals which adversely affect families, as it has done in the past. Otherwise, poor families themselves, those who are the least able, who will be forced to absorb the burden of the Reagan budget cuts.

The CBO figures are literal estimates of reductions in outlays based on 1980 law before the legislative changes that were instituted under the Reagan administration. The CBO baseline data assumes price growth with some inflation and adjustment, in addition to adjustments for changes in eligible population and cost-of-living adjustments for entitlement programs.

There is a growing concern about the skyrocketing Federal deficit, and rightfully so. Policymakers are looking for solutions to the deficit problem. But in our efforts to lower the Federal deficit, we must examine the policy options before us carefully in terms of their impact on the families of this Nation. We must adopt policies that strengthen families, not weaken them, whether it be in social spending or by changes in the Tax Code. Both branches of Government, executive and legislative, must make policy as if families matter, because they do.

Highlighted below are some of the changes since 1981 that have affected children, youth, and families:

EDUCATION

Despite enormous gains that have been made in providing educational opportunity for all children, disparities in resources, quality, and access remain. Although education is primarily funded at the State and local level, the Federal Government has created programs to improve the educational performance of disadvantaged children and youth.

During the Reagan administration, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimates that education programs have been cut by $9.1 billion in outlays, compared with the eligibility requirements and benefit levels existent under 1980 law. The attached tables show that in fiscal years 1982, 1983, and 1984 Congress restored $8 billion in reductions proposed by the administration.

Compensatory education (chapter 1) provides supplemental reading and math to 4.8 million children who are educationally disadvantaged, handicapped, neglected or delinquent. According to CBO projections based on 1980 law before the Reagan changes, the program was cut by $2.6 billion in outlays during this administration. The reductions in this program would have been even greater if Congress had accepted another $2.3 billion in proposed budget cuts.

Handicapped education increased with the 1975 enactment of the Education for All Handicapped Children Act which required a "free, appropriate public education for all handicapped children ages 3-21." In 1983, it served 4 million handicapped children.

In fiscal year 1982 the administration proposed abolishing the Education for All Handicapped Act and replacing it with a block grant with $241 million less in funding. In fiscal year 1983 Reagan proposed a $223 million cut in funding and only a 2 percent overall reduction in handicapped education in fiscal year 1985.

The Vocational Education Act of 1963 focused Federal attention on children with special educational handicaps. Some 16.9 million students are enrolled in federally supported vocational education programs.

During this Administration, the Vocational Education Program has been cut by $600 million in outlays, based on CBO assumptions about program costs under 1980 law. Congress rejected $574 million in additional cuts proposed by the administration.

Guaranteed student loan (GSL) is a program that guarantees and subsidizes loans at a rate of 8 percent interest for students who must demonstrate financial need if the family income exceeds $30,000 per year. In addition, the Federal Government pays the lender an additional interest subsidy adjusted quarterly according to the Treasury bill rate.

CBO reported that during the Reagan administration the GSL Program was cut by $3.8 billion in outlays compared with spending under the 1980 law. Congress rejected another $1.5 billion in cuts proposed in fiscal year 1982-84.

In fiscal year 1985, the administration proposed a $584 million increase in the program. This reflects an anticipated drop in interest rates, which reduced the Government subsidy to lenders, not an expansion of the program.

Student financial assistance consists of 6 student aid programs which have been cut by $2.1 billion during the Reagan administration, according to CBO baseline data that reflects the program under 1980 law. The Congress rejected $4.7 billion in additional budget cuts proposed for the Student Financial Assistance Program.

The fiscal year 1985 budget proposal would abolish two student aid programs: Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants which currently serves 545,000 students with exceptional financial need and the State Student Incentive Grants which provides awards to States to encourage them to establish student assistance programs. It serves 1.5 million students. The administration would also cut back the National Direct Student Loan Program from $184 million to $4 million, providing no new budget authority to make loans. In fiscal year 1983 this program provided 5 percent loans to 883,000 students who demonstrated financial need.

HEALTH

CBO reported that health programs have been cut back by $1.4 billion in outlays since January 1981. Congress rejected $500 million in additional cuts for health and handicapped programs.

In fiscal year 1982 the administration proposed consolidating 25 Federal health programs into two block grant programs, with greatly reduced funding. Congress rejected this proposal and instead established four block grants with $223 million less funding. In fiscal year 1983 and 1984 Congress restored some of the cuts made in the health block grants in 1982.

The maternal and child health care block grant was created in fiscal year 1982. Its funding was cut back from $454 million in fiscal year 1981 to $399 million in fiscal year 1984. Congress rejected another $269 million in additional cuts proposed between fiscal year 1982 and 1984.

The primary care block grant supports community health centers which were funded at $324 million in fiscal year 1981, and reduced to $281 million in appropriations the following year. The funding has since been increased to $337 million. The administration in fiscal year 1985 proposed for the 4th year in a row to incorporate family planning, migrant health centers, and black lung clinics into the primary care block grant, a move which would dismantle the programs at the Federal level. Congress has rejected this block grant proposal in the past.

The alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health block grant was created in fiscal year 1982. Funding for these programs was cut from $518 million in fiscal year 1981 to $432 million in fiscal year 1982. The Congress in fiscal year 1983 and 1984 restored some of the cuts made in 1982.

NUTRITION

Hunger has been rising in this country. The committee has found that children in certain areas are exhibiting signs of malnutrition and anemia. Poor economic conditions and Federal cutbacks have forced an alarming number of families to seek food at soup kitchens and food pantries. Nutrition programs have been cut by $5 billion according to the CBO, based on funding of the programs under the 1980 law, unchanged by the Reagan administration. The Congress rejected $2.7 billion in cuts proposed in fiscal years 1982-84, which would have devastated food programs even more.

Women, Infants, and Children's Supplemental Feeding Program [WIC]. Even though the impact of good nutrition on infant mortality and low-birth-weight babies is well known, the Reagan administration proposed deep cuts in the program in 1982 and 1983. However, Congress rejected $754 million in cuts proposed by the administration during fiscal years 1982-84. These cuts were proposed even though an estimated 70-75 percent of the women and children who are eligible for WIC are unserved because of the program's limited funding.

The Child Nutrition Program has suffered heavy cuts under this administration. Since 1981 the School Lunch Program, Child Care Food Program, the Summer Food Service Program, and the School Breakfast Program have been cut substantially. The CBO reported that child nutrition programs have been reduced by $5.2 billion compared with program benefit levels and eligibility requirements under 1980 law. The President's fiscal year 1985 budget would completely eliminate three of the six child nutrition programs—Child Care Food, Summer Food, and Nutrition Education and Studies.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Children with special needs and troubled families have suffered greatly as a result of the Reagan budget cuts. CBO projects that social services programs have been reduced by $3.9 billion in outlays since January 1981, compared with prior law. Congress rejected $2.7 billion in cuts proposed in fiscal year 1982-1984.

The title XX/social services block grant was created in fiscal year 1982, at the administration's request. Its funding was cut by $532 million in fiscal year 1982. The conversion of title XX to a block grant eliminating targeting of low-income families, dropped the requirements that States match Federal funds with State dollars, and terminated Federal reporting requirements so that little is known at the Federal level about State spending for day care, child protective services, elderly programs, legal services, and family planning.

Child abuse has increased sharply as a consequence of high unemployment and the worsening economic conditions of families. In spite of the increase in the proportions of the problem, for 4 years in a row the administration has proposed block granting the child abuse program and reducing its funding. Congress rejected the block grant proposal and responded in 1984 by passing H.R. 1904, which reauthorizes the Child Abuse Treatment and Prevention Act, raising its funding from $17 million to $30 million in fiscal year 1984, with 5-percent increases for the next 3 years. The Senate's child abuse bill, S. 1003, was reported by committee but has not yet gone to the Senate floor for a vote.

The Runaway Youth Act was passed in 1974 to provide assistance to youth who have left their homes voluntarily because of abuse, or conflict, or were forced out. In fiscal year 1982 the administration proposed that the program be included in the social services block grant, with reduced funding. The 1983 proposal recommended that its budget be cut from $11 million to $7 million. Congress rejected the block grant proposal and increased its funding to $22 million in fiscal year 1983 and $23 million in fiscal year 1984.

The President's fiscal year 1985 budget proposal would cut the program by more than half, from $23.3 million to $10.5 million.

Child welfare services and adoption assistance are programs that have been successful in keeping troubled youth in their own homes or returning them home as expeditiously as possible. In fiscal years 1982 and 1983 the Reagan administration proposed including both programs in the social services block grant program, with reduced funding. Congress rejected the block grant proposal, but funding for child welfare services fell from $164 million in fiscal year 1981 to $156 million for fiscal year 1982 and 1983. Congress increased its funding to $165 million in fiscal year 1984. Funding for Adoption Assistance has remained at $5 million for 4 years. Witnesses told the committee that lack of adequate State and Federal funding has left many children lingering in the foster care/child welfare system rather than being returned to their homes or legally adopted.

YOUTH

An expert has called adolescent youth one of the most poorly served populations subgroups in the United States—in terms of education, physical and mental health, vocational training, social services, foster care, and criminal justice programs. In spite of this, the Reagan administration has proposed drastic cuts in the few youth programs that have been put into place to serve this population.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act provides grants to public and private agencies to improve juvenile delinquency prevention. Although prevention programs, as alternatives to incarceration, have been shown to be highly cost effective and to reduce rates of offender recidivism, the administration for 4 years in a row has requested no funding for this program. The committee was told about the trend in the country toward punishment and incarceration, rather than investment in treatment, a move which is costly both in dollars and in human terms. For instance, in some States funding available for youth programs is being used to construct secure facilities, while treatment programs are weakened. The committee learned that in Florida all community-based treatment programs were filled beyond capacity so that juveniles were frequently put into training schools at a cost of $12,000 per youth for each year.

Employment and Training. Youth unemployment and school drop out rates have reached staggering proportions. In March 1984, the unemployment rate for teenagers (16-19) was 19.9 percent, while unemployment for black teenagers was 46.7 percent, more than twice that of white teens. A conservative estimate indicates that 700,000 youth leave school each year without graduating. According to the National Center for Educational Statistics, 28 percent of the Nation's ninth graders will drop out of high school before their senior years.

In spite of the dimensions of the youth problem, in 1982, at the President's request, Congress repealed the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). Congress enacted the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), with half the funding, since it eliminated public service employment. Both programs provided employment and training opportunities for low-income teenagers and adults. In contrast to CETA, JTPA does not include stipends for jobs, a factor some think will limit the participation of low-income youth. JTPA also practically eliminates child care and other supportive services which enable teenage parents to participate in job training programs.

The CBO estimates that employment programs have been reduced by almost 60 percent compared to spending under the 1980 law before the Reagan changes. According to CBO, the Reagan administration cut employment and training programs by $25 billion in outlays compared to the 1980 program. In spite of high youth unemployment, by fiscal year 1984, Jobs Corps funding has only increased by $17 million since 1981, while funding for the Summer Youth Program has decreased from $838 million in fiscal year 1981 to $725 million in fiscal year 1984.

Work Incentive Program (WIN). The Reagan administration, for 3 straight years has requested no funding for the Work Incentive Program (WIN). Since 1967, WIN has provided job counseling, training, placement, and support services for AFDC recipients who are working their way off welfare through paid employment. Funding has fallen from $365 million in fiscal year 1981 to $271 million in fiscal year 1984. However, Congress has rejected the administration's proposal for the past 2 years to eliminate the program entirely.

HOUSING

Low-income housing has suffered greater cuts than any other human needs program. Federally assisted housing is important for low-income families who cannot afford adequate housing. Two major programs comprise assisted housing. Public housing projects provide low rent and standard quality housing, primarily to low-income families with children. Approximately half of all residents in public housing projects are children under age 18, about 1,817,000 children. The Section 8 Rental Assistance Program was established to help low-income households occupy privately owned, modest quality housing without excessive rent payment. Of the occupants of the Section 8 Rental Assistance Program, 42 percent are under age 18 (approximately 1,373,000 children).

The Reagan administration's housing policies have been devastating to low-income housing programs. The 1981 Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act (OBRA) cut budget authority for assisted housing (both public housing and the rental assistance programs) from $25 billion to $13.3 billion. Funding for assisted housing reached a low of $8.7 billion in fiscal year 1983, the year the President asked no new budget authority for assisted housing. Funding was increased by Congress to $9.9 billion in fiscal year 1984.

A number of the actions taken in fiscal year 1982 made subsidized housing more expensive for the poor. OBRA increased assisted housing rents from 25 percent to 30 percent of income for all tenants with incomes over 50 percent of the local median income. The 1981 law gave the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development authority to issue regulations designating allowable deductions from gross income. Although there was an agreement between Congress and HUD in the conference report that child care costs would continue to be deductible, the final HUD regulations eliminated the child care deduction. In 1983 Congress restored the deduction for child care when it enacted the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act. Another change made in 1981 permitted States to subtract the value of housing assistance from a family's AFDC grant which further reduced the incomes of needy families.

The administration's fiscal year 1985 budget would reduce funding for assisted housing from $9.9 billion to $6.2 billion. It also proposed a voucher system as a replacement for the Section 8 Rent Subsidy Program. Congress approved an experimental voucher program for 15,000 units for fiscal year 1984 and 87,000 units for fiscal year 1985.

HUD's programs helped about 3.7 million low-income households in 1983 providing 400,000 units of subsidized housing. But the most recent census survey found 13.8 million very-low-income households with housing problems, 4.7 million in physically inadequate or overcrowded quarters and 9.2 million paying burdensome amounts of income for standard shelter. So despite 50 years of Federal aid, housing needs of low-income people remain large, relative to available assistance.

ENTITLEMENTS

The Food Stamp Program has been cut by 13 percent or $7 billion in outlays according to CBO data based on Food Stamp Law in 1980. This means that $7 billion less has been spent than benefits under the pre-Reagan law. Because of unemployment the need for food stamps has increased. As a result, the cuts are not evident in the annual appropriations levels. Because of these budget cuts, an estimated 2 million recipients have been dropped from the Food Stamp Program and nearly 20 million others have had their benefits reduced.

The fiscal year 1985 budget request ignored the recommendations of the President's Task Force on Food Assistance which called for modest increases in food assistance to deal with the hunger problem and for adjustments in the food stamps assets limits so that more unemployed families could receive food stamp assistance. The fiscal year 1985 budget would cut the Food Stamp Program by $100 million and institute a mandatory workfare program—without assuring adequate day care.

Medicaid is the largest Federal health program for poor mothers and children. It has been cut by more than $3.9 billion in outlays since January 1981, according to the CBO. This was accomplished both by decreasing the Federal payment to each State and by giving States greater flexibility in determining which medical services and individuals medicaid should cover. To cope with reduced Federal funding, most States has reduced benefits and restricted medicaid eligibility.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] provides cash assistance primarily to needy children in single parent families. Only 23 States offer AFDC to two-parent families under the AFDC-Unemployed Parent Program. Approximately 70 percent of the 10.4 million AFDC recipients are children.

CBO reported that this program has been cut by $4.8 billion in outlays during this administration compared with the program under prior law. The 1981 Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act tightened eligibility requirements which caused an estimated 408,000 families to lose their AFDC benefits entirely and 299,000 families to have their benefits reduced.

The 1982 law removed the work incentive that since 1969 permitted working AFDC recipients to deduct $30 from earnings per month and one-third of their wages, plus all work expenses and child care costs, before reducing the AFDC Grant by the amount of earnings. After 1982, the $30 and one-third of wages could be deducted only during the first 4 months of employment. After the fourth month on the job, the AFDC recipient can only take a standard deduction of $75 per month in addition to child care expenses, which are capped at $160 a month. With these two exceptions, there is a dollar-for-dollar reduction in AFDC benefits by earned income.

The 1982 changes also instituted a gross-income limit. Anyone above 150 percent of the State needs standard, is automatically ineligible for AFDC. The State needs standards vary, ranging from $168 for a family of 3 in Texas to $816 for the same family in Vermont.●

ENERGY CONSERVATION

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to alert my colleagues to the release of an important publication of the American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy. What Works: Documenting energy conservation in buildings, is a compilation of the best papers presented at a conference in 1982 convened to review practical experiences with energy conservation efforts in buildings. A similar conference is scheduled for this August which promises to be even more productive and timely.

What works includes subjects ranging from superinsulated homes to behavorial science, from income distribution to building instrumentation. The work demonstrates that research on energy conservation issues, which is still barely a decade old, has raised pressing social and scientific questions to challenge all of us in the years ahead.

The American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy deserves our praise for its commitment to finding new solutions to this Nation's and the world's inefficient use of scare and expensive energy. I insert the table of contents of what works: Documenting energy conservation in buildings, in the RECORD at this time:

TRIBUTE TO GERALDINE FERRARO

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in paying tribute to my friend and distinguished colleague from New York City—GERALDINE FERRARO, the nominee of the Democratic Party to be Vice President of the United States.

With her selection—GERRY FERRARO makes so many different groups of people proud. She, of course, makes all of her colleagues in the House proud. She makes millions of women in America proud. She makes millions of Italian Americans proud.

However, for those of us who live in and serve on the New York congressional delegation—we can be a little selfish and confess to a special parochial pride today as the Congresswoman from Queens takes her place in the annals of American political history.

When Walter Mondale and later the full Democratic Party made their selection of GERALDINE FERRARO, they were choosing a special woman—a woman who has proven herself in all of her career endeavors—as a teacher, an assistant district attorney, a three-term Member of this House and, of course, as a wife and mother.

Yet GERALDINE FERRARO is in a special place in history now—a woman of destiny—a political pioneer. Those who know her know full well that her tremendous personal energy, commitment, compassion, and rapport with the people will serve her so well as she embarks on this national campaign.

The Democratic Party was showcased in its best light before millions of Americans last week at the convention. Yet the event that produced the most excitement among the delegates was the selection of GERRY FERRARO as the nominee for Vice President. This excitement has spread across this Nation and will continue as the campaign continues.

The words of Aristotle seem appropriate: "If liberty and equality as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost." GERALDINE FERRARO has the potential to share in the utmost, and I wish her well in the pursuit.●

RUBE GOLDBERG IS BACK

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, it now appears that the U.S. Department of Transportation [DOT] has proven that the legacy of Rube Goldberg is alive and well in our Nation's Capital. After several months of hearings and thousands of pages of documents, Secretary Dole, on July 11, decided it was far better to require automakers and consumers to pay millions of dollars to equip new cars with passive restraints or air bags than to encourage individuals to buckle up with existing seat belt equipment in order to reduce highway deaths. This Rube Goldberg rule will require automobile manufacturers to install air bags or passive restraints in all new cars beginning September 1, 1986. The rule applies to 10 percent of the automakers' production in the first year, increasing to 25 percent of all cars built after September 1, 1987, and 40 percent of those produced after September 1, 1988. All automobiles manufactured after September 1, 1989, will have to be equipped with automatic crash protection. Some automakers estimate that the rule provides insufficient lead time for compliance since planning for model year 1987 cars (which will come out in September 1986) is already well underway.

In crafting its rule, DOT has provided an option which will let automakers off the hook if States representing two-thirds of the U.S. population pass mandatory seat belt use laws. I commend Secretary Dole for recognizing that mandatory seat belt use laws enacted by the States would accomplish the same, if not better, safety objectives than the more onerous and costly requirement of installing passive restraints or air bags. However, forcing auto manufacturers to install costly crash protection equipment to motivate States to enact seat belt use laws will not accomplish the desired objective.

If Secretary Dole truly wishes to create an incentive for States to enact seat belt use laws, DOT should embrace and endorse legislation I introduced last year to provide incentive grants to the States to enact mandatory seat belt use laws. the "Motor Vehicle Passenger Safety Act" (H.R. 4175) authorizes $15 million in 1985, $30 million in each year from 1986 to 1990, and $20 million for each year from 1991 to 1996 to be distributed to States for the purpose of enacting and implementing mandatory seat belt use laws. States failing to enact such laws by 1989 would lose future grant moneys.

Secretary Dole has a shining opportunity to transform DOT's Rube Goldberg rule into a progressive policy to provide tangible incentives for States to move forward with seat belt legislation to save thousands of lives and millions of dollars.

Public opposition to the recent DOT rulemaking decision is just beginning to build and Secretary Dole should act expeditiously to take further action to form good policy, not just bad precedent. I commend my colleagues to read an editorial entitled, "Mrs. Dole's Compromise," which appeared in the July 12 issue of the Detroit News.

MRS. DOLE'S COMPROMISE

The long-awaited air bag decision was greeted by Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a leading bagman, as a welcome bang, not the whimper he feared. We're afraid he's correct. Despite frantic calls from Grand Boulevard to the White House, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole has announced what seems to be an odd compromise between requiring air bags on cars as demanded by the Naderites and seeking other safety options as begged by the auto industry. In the end, however, this "compromise" really amounts to a capitulation to the anti-auto fanatics.

Ten percent of 1987 model year cars must have air bags or other passive restraints, going up in steps to 100 percent by 1990, unless the manufacturers can come up with some other means of improving passenger protection in crashes, or unless states with two-thirds of the national population pass compulsory seat belt use laws.

Well, the two "unlesses" are obviously stale crumbs thrown to the industry. Recently GM pulled the "friendly interior" option out of its hat as a desperation ploy to thwart the hated air bag. Interior design of cars to reduce damage in crashes has been subject to government standards since the beginning of the great auto safety crusade in the 1960s. If GM has not been able to achieve high performance by now, the chances of doing it in the next three to six years are nil.

As for compulsory seat belt laws, these are blatantly unpopular. Remember that the public wouldn't even tolerate the ignition interlock system a decade ago; and most car owners simply disconnect today's nasty warning buzzers. The proposed standard will make the passage of seat belt laws even more difficult. Each state will pass the buck, preferring to let the other states make up the two-thirds. And state politicians, knowing the unpopularity of mandating such controls on their constituents, will prefer to leave the problem to the auto companies. Mrs. Dole's apparent compromise is a coy cosmetic way of bashing the automobile industry.

The Washington lawyer and lobbyist Ralph Nader has claimed that the Dole edict actually is a clever plot cooked up by the Reagan administration and the murderous auto industry to put the air bag in storage. By his reasoning, permitting state law to override implementation of a federal regulation is bound to generate litigation over its constitutionality. Indeed, one insurance company already is challenging the Dole solution in court. According to the conspiracy theorists, such litigation could go on for years, or at least until the Reaganauts are out of office and no longer have to face the wrath of the motorist. Meanwhile, the Reaganauts can claim credit with the safety nuts for giving it the old college try.

We have serious doubts whether anybody involved is that cunning. In any event, the manufacturers cannot wait for legislative fights in dozens of states. the 1987 models are being firmed up now. It looks like the only way out for the manufacturers is to fit automatically deploying seat belts—such as the carload of snakes that VW had a few years ago. These are an annoyance, but are much cheaper and more reliable than air bags, and have the advantage that we can cut them away easily.

But once again Detroit and the consumer will have to pay the freight for political chicanery. We don't need this kind of hassle from Washington. We had hoped the Reagan administration, of all administrations, would protect us with active restraints against additional regulatory costs.●

NATIONAL POW/MIA DAY

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, on July 20, 1984, the Nation paid tribute to American prisoners of war, servicemen still missing in action, and their families. As a cosponsor of the legislation which designated July 20 as National POW/MIA Recognition Day, I believe that we owe these people a great debt and that we must continue doing everything we can to account for every American serviceman still missing in action.

National POW/MIA Recognition Day served as a reminder to the American people that there are still American servicemen in Southeast Asia who have not been accounted for. While the Vietnam era was a painful chapter in our recent history, we must not forget those who served their country so valiantly and courageously when called to duty.

Of the nearly 2,500 American servicemen still missing in action in Southeast Asia, 1,394 are reported missing in Vietnam, 574 in Laos or Kampuchea, 4 in Thailand, 6 in China, and 422 servicemen were reportedly shot down while over water.

While many of those servicemen still missing in action are listed as killed in action, there have been numerous reports which indicate that there are Americans who are still alive and being held in captivity in Southeast Asia. It is essential that we conduct exhaustive investigations of such reports. The only hope nurtured by those Americans who may still be alive is that their country has not forgotten them.

The recent return of the remains of eight U.S. servicemen who were killed in Vietnam is a clear example that the effort to account for American MIA's is not made in vain. It is a necessary and humane mission which we have an obligation to fulfill.

We must not bury the POW/MIA issue with one unknown soldier from the Vietnam war; rather, we must intensify our efforts to account for his missing brothers. The families of these servicemen continue to face the awful pain and agony of uncertainty. A full accounting of these brave men deserves our highest priority. We must be unrelenting in our commitment to the goal of accounting for every MIA and securing the return of the bodies of those killed in action and the release of those who may still be alive.●

"LOUIS KARIEL: THE LORD HAS BEEN GOOD TO ME"

HON. SAM B. HALL, JR.

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, one of the most distinguished citizens it has ever been my privilege to know is Mr. Louis Kariel, Sr., a citizen of Marshall, TX, which is also my hometown. This month marks his 88th birthday, and by every conceivable measure of a man, it has been 88 years of service to his fellow humans.

It would take literally thousands of words to describe his career and involvement in public affairs. As a young man in 1918, he volunteered for duty in World War I, and that same enthusiasm and devotion to family, community, and the Nation is just as strong today.

He served as mayor of Marshall for some 12 years and just recently he was honored upon the occasion of the 50th anniversary of his election to the Marshall City Commission. For over 40 years he operated a very prominent business in Marshall, and to this very day he is still involved in the business with his son, Louis Kariel, Jr.

It was Oliver Wendell Holmes who remarked on his 90th birthday that as long as the will to work remains, then the work remains to be done. That statement sums up the career and life of Louis Kariel, Sr. To know him is to admire him. To have the privilege of knowing him serves as an inspiration to me and countless others.

Mr. Kariel has not only been very active in political and business endeavors, but his civic work is legend. He has a 38 year perfect attendance record in the Rotary Club, and has held just about every office one can think of in the American Legion. His religious activities serve as an inspiration to all of us. He is a member of Temple Emanuel in Longview, TX, and among his contributions to the Jewish community include president of Moses Montefiore Congregation and president and secretary of B'nai Brith.

Mr. Louis Kariel, Sr. is truly a "man for all seasons." Just recently the Marshall City Commission honored him on the occasion of his initial election to the commission 50 years ago. It was a wonderful event for a wonderful person. In typical fashion on that occasion he responded to the secret of long life by saying, "The Lord has been good to me." A story from the Marshall News Messenger describes the event and contains some great anecdotes about his career. I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues and the Nation as follows:

[From the Marshall News Messenger, April 12, 1984]

LOUIS KARIEL MARKS GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY OF HIS CITY ELECTION

(By Sandra Cason)

The date was April 10, 1934, and Louis Kariel Sr. attended the city commission meeting. His purpose—to be seated as the Place 1 representative.

Tonight, Kariel will attend another commission session. His purpose—to celebrate the golden anniversary of that evening 50 years ago.

While the commission will not honor Kariel with what might be an appropriate gift of gold, they will present him with a piece of paper bearing a resolution in tribute to his service.

For Kariel the meeting is a personal celebration, one that was not afforded any of his peers.

Kariel, who will celebrate his 88th birthday in July, served 14 years as a city commissioner and held the post of mayor for all but two years of his tenure.

He served with 16 different men and only one of them, J.M. Oliphant, is still alive. Kariel knows of no other Marshall commissioner who has seen the 50th anniversary of his election.

He recalled that elections were "not such a political situation" in the 1930's. "In those days, people were asked to run—some still are. The ones who were asked to run didn't have opponents."

Newspaper accounts substantiate Kariel's remarks. The News Messenger for April 3, 1934, notes:

"Two city commissioners will be elected formally today as Marshall citizens go to the polls in the regular city election.

"Citizens Party primary nominations, tantamount to election, were held March 15 and today's balloting is a matter of legal form.

"No independent candidates have announced against the Citizens Party nominees Edwin J. Ryan, for re-election for Place 2 and Louis Kariel . . . for Place 1."

On April 4, the paper reported 30 votes having been cast and said official totals would not be revealed until the commission meeting of April 10.

Reporting on the local election took a back seat to banner headlines marking law enforcement's chase of Depression-era bank robber Clyde Barrow through Texas, Missouri and Kansas.

While elections may have changed over the years, problems facing the city commission have not.

"The things that were done were the same as they are today, Kariel said. "Water was one of our main concerns." It was during Kariel's administration that Marshall residents approved a bond issue for a pipeline to Caddo Lake.

"Our water was supplied by a number of deep wells on the Jefferson Highway. I remember we drilled another one in what is now City Park.

"We had a survey made and determined there was not enough water available in wells. We decided to hold a bond issue to build the pipeline to Caddo.

"A lot of streets were paved during the time I was on the commission because of the WPA." Works Progress Administration was implemented by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to offset unemployment created during the Depression.

"There were probably more streets paved then that at any other one time since," Kariel said.

Also during his tenure, City Park, another WPA project, was built and Marshall got a public swimming pool, a facility the city can no longer claim.

Kariel said he will have no advice to offer commissioners during the brief remarks he will make tonight. "I'm not going to try to tell them how to do it. I never have. The only suggestion I ever made was that the square should be named for (William B.) Travis."

Kariel said he noted years ago that Marshall had streets named after all other important figures in the state's early history.

He said the historical society disagreed wanting to name the square for Peter Whetstone, the Marshallite who gave the land. The group decided instead to rename Border Street in Travis' honor.

Kariel can remember when Marshall's mayor was paid a salary of $150 per month and the two commissioners each received $50 monthly.

That was before the city manager form of government was implemented in 1924. "There was an article put in the charter that the city manager could be paid no more than $5,000 per year," Kariel said.

Considering the value of the dollar, Kariel said the current city manager's salary is probably not in violation of that article.

A Marshall native, Kariel was the owner of Hub Shoe Store for many years. He still keeps books for the store although he sold the business to his son, Louis Kariel Jr., in 1969.

Kariel is a World War I veteran, signing on with the Army two months before the end of the war.

Before going into the shoe business in 1924, Kariel worked as a chemist for sugar plants in Colorado, Cuba and Sugarland, Texas.

He has been active in the local Rotary Club, Masonic Lodge and American Legion, holding leadership posts in those organizations.

Kariel has also been an active member of the Jewish congregation. He was president of the local Moses, Montefiore congregation and now attends Temple Emanu-El in Longview.

While he was Marshall mayor, Texas celebrated its centennial. In conjunction with the event, Kariel sat on a platform with President Roosevelt during Cotton Bowl activities in Dallas.

In 1986, the state will celebrate its sesquicentennial, or 150th birthday. Kariel said he hadn't given that event much thought.

Asked his secret to long life, he said: "The Lord has been good to me."●

H. CLIFFORD BOWMAN: SELECTED TO ATTEND RICKOVER SCIENCE INSTITUTE

HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a very gifted young man from my district who has recently earned the honor of being one of only 60 students selected to attend the first summer session of the prestigious Rickover Science Institute, sponsored by the Admiral H.G. Rickover Foundation.

The Rickover Science Institute is the only program of its kind which combines theoretical training with practical experience, accomplished through individual hands-on research projects with Government agencies, academic institutions, and private corporations.

H. Clifford Bowman of Russellville, AR, while only 17, has already distinguished himself academically and in his community.

This fall, Clifford will be a senior at Russellville High School, where he is enrolled in the honors program and carries a perfect 4.0 grade point average. In addition, Clifford has already embarked on his college education, having earned perfect marks in college physics and trigonometry classes at Arkansas Tech University. At Russellville High School, he is a student senator, model United Nations delegate, science club officer, first chair violinist in the orchestra, and also participated in the Arkansas Close Up Program. Yet he also finds time to be involved in his church choir and youth group, and unselfishly serves as a volunteer at St. Mary's Hospital.

I had the honor of having this fine young man intern in my Washington office for 4 weeks this summer before he went on to Leesburg, VA, for the Rickover Science Institute, and he proved himself to be a most capable staff member.

In these times when we hear much about the negative side of youth, Clifford can certainly stand out as an example of the positive qualities that many of this Nation's teenagers possess. His accomplishments bring honor not only to himself, but to his parents, Leo and Michiko Bowman, as well. I wish him well at the Rickover Institute, and believe that he will distinguish himself further in whatever career path he chooses.●

REFUGEE VICTIMS

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, as you may be aware, the newest figures on the number of refugee victims are shocking. These boat people, the women in particular, are subjected to a whole spectrum of crimes difficult to imagine.

Roger Winter, the director of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, has written an article which recently appeared in the Washington Times. As most of us were not in Washington during the last few weeks, I wanted to alert my colleagues to this tragedy and would urge them to read the following closely:

[From the Washington Times, June 21, 1984]

OPEN SEASON ON REFUGEES

(By Roger Winter)

A season of death has befallen refugees half a world away.

The season, the good weather months of February through June in the Gulf of Thailand, has been especially deadly this year. In a recent two-month period, for example, more than 100 Vietnamese boat people who were escaping on the Gulf of Thailand from their homeland are said to have been killed by Thai pirates.

Their deaths inflate an already sickening total. According to a February report by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, 1,400 boat people have perished at the hands of pirates since 1980. Many more have been robbed, raped, abducted, not only during the February-through-June time of good weather and high boat flows, but also in other months. The victims apparently are overwhelmingly women.

Although the death counts should be chilling in themselves, they mask the brutality. Imagine in recent weeks, boat people, many perhaps former allies of the United States who weren't fortunate enough to make it out of Vietnam before Saigon fell, reportedly have had gasoline poured on them and been burned or have been tied and tossed into the sea before the eyes of loved ones, or watched as pirates rammed their rickety boats, sinking them with children aboard.

The world's answer to the crushing finality of these attacks has been less than resounding. This month, for example, a dozen nations met in Geneva under U.N. auspices to consider extending an international anti-piracy program that has been largely known for its ineffectiveness.

My own organization took a firsthand look at the situation, too, and issued a report last February. Though its findings are generally similar to those of others, they are distinctive in one respect—the conclusion that resources and technical expertise are important to saving the boat people from horrible ends, but the will to do something to improve things is crucial.

As the greatest contributor to the $26 million anti-piracy program and the richest and most powerful of Western nations, the United States is in the best position to bring that will to bear. To a small degree, it has. President Reagan raised the piracy issue during discussions with visiting Thai Prime Minister Prem Tinsoulanonda last month. However, going into the recent meeting in Geneva, the United States had failed to extract any assurances from Thailand that the Thais would monitor the piracy vigorously. Animosity between Thais and Vietnamese is age-old, and according to critics, has contributed to Thailand's taking a mild approach at best to the plight of the boat people.

The meeting in Geneva had another disturbing aspect, too. News of the recent round of brutal attacks was suppressed. Apparently, the suppression was supposed to make diplomatic sense, the rationale being that a careful look at the program, rather than a public scolding of the Thais for their patrols' insufficiencies, would be the best use of attendees' time.

Though such a scolding rarely serves any useful purpose, neither does incomplete information. It would seem that not only statistics about attacks but also a discussion of them are necessary if realistic decisions are to be forthcoming for the third year of the international anti-piracy program, which could begin as early as next month.

Still, the Geneva session bore some encouraging signs. For example, the Americans succeeded in having a proposal for providing the Thais with a $3 million patrol boat tabled, a development that could leave funds for less expensive but innovative anti-piracy approaches, and also quell concern that the anti-piracy program has succeeded only in outfitting the Thais with vessels and aircraft.

Thailand has yet to agree to this development, however, and it is an understatement, to say the least, that it remains to be seen whether the final plan for the next year of the international anti-piracy program will make the Gulf's waters safer for boat people, who now are leaving Vietnam at a rate of 21,000 annually.

What is not an understatement came from the American representative at Geneva. Referring to the severity of the piracy problem, Ambassador Gerald P. Carmaen told participants at the May meeting that ". . . people's lives are at stake."

Of all that has been said by observers, it would serve nations well to ponder that assessment as they continue to search for results in the battle against piracy.

Otherwise, yet another season of death will befall boat people, and haunt the civilized world.●

CLARENCE L. JORDAN: THE MAN WHO IS DEDICATED TO HELPING OTHERS

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I bring to the attention of my colleagues in the Congress an outstanding humanitarian and a dedicated civic leader who, on Wednesday, July 25, will be honored by my friends in the greater Syracuse community.

I am speaking about a man whom I am proud to represent, my constituent

Mr. Clarence L. Jordan, the executive director of the Syracuse Rescue Mission.

For a quarter of a century, Clarence Jordan, with seemingly tireless energy and unique talent, has devoted his life to bringing hope to our people who had despaired, shelter for our homeless and food to our hungry.

Clarence Jordan began his service to the mission and the people of our community as a lodging house manager in 1959. Within a short period of time, he was appointed executive director. From the beginning of his tenure and to this day, his commitment to the mission's goal of "putting God's love into action" has been an inspiration to the countless people he has helped and to all of us who are privileged to know him.

Under Clarence Jordan's innovative leadership, the Syracuse Rescue Mission has emerged as a model for not only other cities in New York State but for cities throughout our Nation.

The mission's comprehensive alcohol rehabilitation program, involving short- and long-term care, and nutritional, counseling and work therapy, has enabled alcoholics to climb from the chasm of despair onto the ladder of health and opportunity.

The mission provides 40 to 200 beds and meals for the destitute and transportation for the street people in need of shelter and care.

The mission's network of collection centers, seven retail thrift stores and a workshop warehouse provide work and training for the disadvantaged and alcoholics receiving treatment as well as jobs for other citizens in our community. The mission operates an inner city family center which offers recreation and counseling by trained staff personnel, in addition to a day camp for youth.

The mission's annual budget has grown from $60,000 to a present level of $2.4 million which supports a staff of more than 120 persons as well as the mission's varied and worthy programs.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Clarence Jordan personally epitomizes America's tradition of service to our country's less fortunate citizens.

I am honored to share the commemoration of his 25 years of dedication to his fellow citizens with my colleagues.●

ATTORNEY'S FEES

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will maintain the access of low and middle income parents to our Nation's judicial system as they seek to enforce Federal civil rights protections designed to ensure that their handicapped children receive a free and appropriate public education. When Congress passed the Education of the Handicapped Act in 1975, parents of handicapped children were given administrative remedies as well as a right to private action as a means toward realizing the goals for their children in special education. Today there are over 4 million handicapped children in special education and the gains that have been made in the quality of their education are remarkable. These gains can be attributed in part to parents' ability to shape various educational components of their child's programming.

In the overwhelming number of instances when parents and educators conference to design an appropriate educational program for a handicapped child, they work cooperatively toward common goals. In some instances, however, parents and educators disagree and require a third party to resolve their differences. Congress foresaw this in 1975 and incorporated the elaborate administrative procedures as well as a private right of action into the act. Parties are required to exhaust their administrative remedies prior to filing suit, and in an overwhelming number of cases, disagreements are resolved at the due process level and litigation is not pursued. When litigation is pursued and parents or the legal representatives of a handicapped child prevail, courts have awarded attorney's fees in a number of instances, when litigants have filed for relief under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Civil Rights Attorney's Fee Awards Act of 1976 as well as under the Education of the Handicapped Act.

On July 5, 1984 the U.S. Supreme Court ruled, 6 to 3, that awards of attorney's fees are not permitted to prevailing parties that are in essence brought to enforce the Education of Handicapped Act. The Court opined that because the Education of the Handicapped Act is silent on the question of attorney's fee, parents who had successfully proven that public schools had unlawfully denied their handicapped children the free and appropriate public education guaranteed by both the Education of the Handicapped Act and the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, were not allowed to recover attorney's fees even though secton 505 of the Rehabilitation Act provides for recovery for prevailing parties.

Congress has authorized award of attorney's fees in virtually all civil rights actions brought under Federal law. Attorney's fees may be recovered for civil rights violations under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Fair Housing Act of 1968, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the post-Civil War Acts, title IX, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Act of 1973, the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, and the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act.

The July 5 decision was clearly misguided and will result in disastrous consequences for low and middle income parents of handicapped children, if Congress does not act. My office received a call from a single working mother in San Antonio shortly after the Smith against Robinson decision was handed down. Just the month before a district court in western Texas had ruled in her favor that her son who has cerebral palsy, is mentally retarded, is unable to walk without assistance, and has no verbal language, should receive summer school in order to preserve the progress that he had made during the regular school year. This single parent had prevailed through every administrative procedure, again in district court, and the judge was in the process of awarding a reasonable attorney fee when Smith against Robinson was handed down. Not surprisingly, the school system had filed a motion to reconsider and the award of the attorney's fee of many thousands of dollars for 4 years worth of litigation is in jeopardy. If Congress does not act then this parent of a handicapped child and many like her will face a debt that will plague her family for years to come. Other parents who are considering litigation will be unnecessarily stifled by the prospects of tremendous indebtness and will not seek the legal redress that Congress had intended to allow them. The economic resources of parents should not be the critical factor in their ability to protect their children's rights under the Education of the Handicapped Act.

The legislation that I am introducing today will not alter the act's requirement that administrative remedies be exhausted before a lawsuit is brought. The legislation allows for the recovery of reasonable attorney's fees for the prevailing parent or legal representative, and will therefore not encourage frivolous litigation.

The legislation will also clarify the relationship between the Education of the Handicapped Act, the Rehabilitation Act, and other Federal statutes. This clarification will serve to signal our intention that the Education of the Handicapped Act is intended to complement and not preempt other Federal statutes that affect handicapped children in elementary and secondary education.

The dissent in Smith against Robinson concluded that, and I quote:

With today's decision coming as it does after Congress has spoken on the subject of attorney's fees, Congress will now have to take the time to revisit the matter. And until is does, the handicapped children of this country whose difficulties are compounded by discrimination and by other deprivations of constitutional rights will have to pay the costs. It is at best ironic that the Court had managed to impose this burden on handicapped children in the course of interpreting a statute wholly intended to promote the educational rights of those children.

I am happy to note that as I drop this important piece of legislation in the hopper today, my distinguished colleague in the Senate, Mr. WEICKER, is dropping in an identical piece of legislation. Our staffs have worked cooperatively on the drafting of this bill, signaling our intentions to correct this injustice as soon as possible.●

NEED FOR SOIL CONSERVATION

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, farmers are by nature independent thinkers. However, one topic which brings a quick consensus is the need for soil conservation. Agricultural columnist Charles Hallam pointed out the need for cooperation between the Federal Government and farmers to address the problem in a recent article for the Rock Island Argus. I commend this article to your attention:

LEGISLATORS AGREE ON NEED FOR CONSERVATION

(By Charles E. Hallam)

Preliminary discussions leading up to eventual adoption of the 1985 Farm Bill has produced a panoply of disagreement among farmers who must live with the new legislation for the next four years, but one matter on which there is little controversy is the need to participate in federal benefits to conservation practices.

For years government assistance programs have tended to reward the improvident use of farm land by using base acres as the criteria for participation. The base acres assigned to each individual farm often grew at a reckless pace during the 1970s when agricultural exports encouraged farmers to plant from one fence row to the next.

We all know how wrong the so-called experts were, but learned the lesson slowly and at the cost of mistakes. So much marginal land was put under cultivation during the prosperous years of the last decade that the biggest problem agriculture faces today is not, as some say, the disappearance of family farms, but the disappearance of the land itself through erosion.

It is high time that the federal government and farmers cooperate in correcting as much as possible of the damage already done and take steps to insure it will not happen again.

Probably the best way to achieve the conservation goals that everyone claims to favor is for the government to stop rewarding the infrugality of wasteful land management. Doing so will not be easy, given the generosity of our political system in an election year and the greed of so many farmers who insist on taking all they can get from the government.

If you are in an optimistic frame of mind, you can find a few encouraging signs that at least some farmers are ready to admit their past mistakes and take some of their most erodible land out of production.

The idea was tried on a limited scale this year under what Secretary of Agriculture John Block called the Acreage Conservation Reserve Program. A total of 264,000 acres in the U.S., including 12,807 in Illinois, were placed in new program initiative which offered land owners 90 percent of the cost of planting grass or trees on highly erodible land in exchange for agreement to keep the land out of crop production for six years.

The program was publicized so little that it may have been the USDA's best kept secret of 1984 and the fact that a quarter million acres were enrolled shows that farmers are searching for ways to save their land from further damage.

At least Jerry Sierra, Rock Island County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office manager is convinced that if the program had been more vigorously promoted participation in his county would have been substantially better than the four farmers who signed up 60 acres for long term conservation.

In writing the new farm bill, the U.S. Congress must seriously consider the extent to which farm commodity and credit programs encourage row-crop production on erodible land.

No farmer ought to be subsidized unless he is in compliance with provisions of existing laws which mandate a reduction of soil loss to a tolerable level—usually no more than five tons per acre—by the year 2000.●

DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT OF 1984

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 contains numerous provisions which are of great value, both in the area of tax reform and in the area of human services. In many ways, this conference report is superior to the bill passed by the House of Representatives in April. However, the conferees have seen fit to include unwarranted and unconscionable spending cutbacks that will severely impact the elderly, Federal retirees, and veterans. These groups have already been asked to sacrifice far too much in the effort to bring our massive budget deficit under control, and it is extraordinarily unfair to ask them to sacrifice further. It is primarily because of the negative impact on our Nation's senior citizens, Federal retirees and veterans, who are struggling to get by in uncertain times, that I cannot support the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

There is much that is highly attractive in this legislation. On the tax side, there is an increase in the earned income tax credit for the working poor of our Nation and an extension of the mortgage subsidy bond program which helps Americans to afford their homes.

On the benefit side, there are important changes in the medicare program that will force physicians to accept part of the burden of keeping the medicare system solvent. The conference agreement imposes a 15-month freeze on fees charges by physicians for treating medicare patients, and it provides incentives for doctors to accept the charges allowed by medicare as payment in full for health care services. While medicare beneficiaries and hospitals have already been asked to make considerable sacrifices to keep medicare solvent, physicians have not shared fully in this burden.

The conference agreement also establishes a new program of expanded medicaid coverage for low-income children and pregnant women. This essential program will extend the protections of medicaid to a forgotten segment of our society that is in substantial need of improved health care services.

Finally, the conference agreement provides for important add-ons in the medicaid program, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] program, and the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program.

All of these provisions are highly important for the poor, disabled, and the elderly members of our society. However, they exist side-by-side with other provisions that will make further cuts in programs of historic importance to our Nation. These proposed cuts in the medicare program, the Federal retirement system, and veterans programs are not defensible by any means. They amount to an assault on groups that have already been assaulted year after year, and they should be forcefully rejected.

The conferees have agreed to a 2-year extension of the temporary requirement that premiums for medicare part B be set so as to cover 25 percent of program costs. This provision will cause part B premiums to rise to an estimated $21.30 per month by 1987. Without this requirement, it is estimated that the premium for 1987 would be $18.60 per month.

Premiums for medicare part B have risen substantially in recent years. These added costs are borne by an elderly population that can little afford them. Already, health care is costing older Americans almost 3.5 times the amount it cost them just 14 years ago. Due to escalating medical costs as well as legislative changes during the past several years, the average older American is spending 15 percent of his or her income on health care, the same percentage as in 1966, before medicare was fully implemented. The further erosion of the medicare program will force many older Americans to suffer hardship in order to pay for medical care or to forego needed health care because they cannot pay.

The conference agreement also includes a change in Government retirement systems that will result in eliminating one monthly payment to military retirees in 1985. This change, which will save the Government $1.62 billion over 3 years, seeks to balance the Federal budget on the backs of military retirees. Finally, the agreement calls for major cuts in programs that benefit our Nation's veterans. These include changes in the Veterans' Administration Home Loan program and in nonservice connected disability pensions that will reduce outlays by $721 million over 3 years.

All of these groups—medicare recipients, Federal retirees, and veterans—have already sacrificed for the sake of reducing our budget deficits, and they cannot be fairly asked to do so once again. Moreover, we are already hearing rumblings about the administration's plans for massive spending cuts after the upcoming elections. It is my judgment that the $200 billion Reagan deficits stretching into the foreseeable future did not happen by accident. Rather, they have been created deliberately to frighten the American people into turning their backs on programs of historic importance like medicare, medicaid, and Social Security. If we begin to succumb to this argument now and allow our commitment to these programs to become a hostage to the massive Reagan deficits, we will be opening the door to much larger and more devastating cutbacks which the Reagan administration will seek to push through in the future.

Rather than lending validity to the notion that spending for domestic and entitlement programs is responsible for the massive deficits we are experiencing, we must firmly draw the line now. We must establish once and for all that medicare, medicaid, Social Security, and other programs can never be subject to the Reagan budget ax. And we must shift our attention to the true causes of our staggering debt—the extravagant tax giveaways of 1981 and the continued upward spiral of military expenditures. Only by substantially reordering our national priorities will we be able to protect the human needs of our citizens while assuring our continued survival into the next century.

The continued cuts envisioned by the Deficit Reduction Act represent an unconscionable attack on those who are already struggling, and they will open the door more devastating attacks in the future. I urge my colleagues to join me in fending off this attack by forcefully rejecting the Deficit Reduction Act.●

GUAM PROUD TO HAVE MONDALE-FERRARO ON DEMOCRATIC TICKET

HON. ANTONIO BORJA WON PAT

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Guam, I am proud to join with my colleagues here today to congratulate Congresswoman GERALDINE FERRARO of New York for her history-making role at the Democratic Convention. I can think of no one more qualified to be the first woman in American history to be part of a national party ticket for the office of President and Vice-President than this talented woman. Vice President Mondale is to be commended for his profound judgment and wisdom in his selection of GERALDINE FERRARO to be his Vice-Presidential nominee. This is a historic first and it is my hope that the trend established by Mr. Mondale to incorporate women totally in the selection of who will be our Chief Executive and Vice-President will not stop here.

Congresswoman FERRARO is the right person at the right time in history to take on this awesome responsibility. She has the skills, public experience and temperament to undertake the job of Vice-President and I believe that the Mondale-FERRARO ticket will have an electrifying impact upon the electorate, particularly among the women voters. GERALDINE FERRARO will serve this Nation with the dignity and pride she has shown in her terms here in Congress.

As a woman, GERALDINE FERRARO is politically in the minority and as such, she has much in common with her fellow Americans in Guam who are also a distinct political minority. We who live in U.S. territories understand what it means to be denied full participation in the American political scene. During the convention, we displayed our concern by placards which clearly stated that we are loyal Americans but cannot vote in Presidential elections.

I hope that this historic action will lead to passage of my legislation extending the right to vote in Presidential elections to residents of the territories. This proposal is now part of the Democratic platform plank and I hope one day to be part of U.S. law. Again, we salute Congresswoman FERRARO for truly being the "First Lady" on the Presidential ticket and I wish her and Mr. Mondale success in November.●

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED TO ABOLISH THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON OCEANS AND ATMOSPHERES

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation which will abolish the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere. I am doing this because I am horrified at the prospect of Ann Burford affecting oceanic policy of this country, and because the House determined more than a year ago that a new commission should be established to deal with these critical issues.

Like most of the Members of Congress today, I am totally appalled that President Reagan has appointed Mrs. Burford to a position of authority in this administration, considering her horrendous record as Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. Her appointment now to the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmospheres is an abomination—a slap in the face at all Americans who care about protecting our environment.

The House of Representatives approved an amendment to Senate bill 1098 last year that would establish an oceans and atmospheres commission. I think that we should go forward with that idea and at the same time inform the President that Congress and the American people expect the environment to be protected by appointees who have demonstrated a clear record of concern for the environment.

This new commission would have as its charge the development of a comprehensive national oceans policy within a specified time period. It has an elaborate appointment process whereby each House will contribute 14 names for appointment and the President must choose no less than seven from each list. The President then will have three appointments to name independently. The chair and vice-chair of the commission will be agreed upon by the President, the Speaker of the House and the majority leader of the Senate.

This legislation has been languishing in the Senate for over a year, but I hope that the appointment of Ann Burford to be chair of the advisory committee will encourage our colleagues in the other body to move on this legislation with all due speed.

Meanwhile, we are faced with an impossible situation. President Reagan has insulted the American people by reappointing this person to his administration in an environmentally sensitive position, after she was forced to resign her previous appointment by the overwhelming public outrage over her actions as Administrator of EPA.

We are not dissolving a committee that this administration has permitted to function. We are, in fact, allowing oceans policy to continue uninterrupted, without the potentially damaging influence of Mrs. Burford. I think that we will be better off with no committee than with a committee controlled by the person who brought us Rita Lavelle and the almost total destruction of the Superfund Program.

I hope my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, in both Houses of Congress will support this legislation.●

TRIBUTE TO TED MOSIER, PARAMOUNT CIVIC LEADER

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening, July 27, Ted Mosier, five-time mayor of Paramount, CA, will be honored at a reception to be held at Progress Park in Paramount. This gala event is intended to pay tribute to Ted's many years of public service.

Mr. Mosier arrived in Paramount from Missouri in 1938. After spending 2 years in college and a few years in the Navy during World War II, Ted returned to the community and began his own successful business. His activities were not just confined to the business community, as he became active in civic and local organizations such as the United Way, Salvation Army, Boy Scouts, Elks Club, Lions Club, and the Masonic Lodge.

He first entered public life when he was elected to the city council in 1968. Ted was a councilman for 16 years, 6 of those years as mayor, and was a founding member of the Paramount Redevelopment Agency.

One of the highlights of Ted's career has been his role in the city's redevelopment program. Ted was instrumental in helping to obtain passage of special redevelopment legislation which allowed Paramount, alone of all California cities, to use redevelopment agency funds beyond project boundaries. This allowed the city to proceed with projects that otherwise would never have been attempted. As a result, residents are now able to enjoy new lighted baseball diamonds, new parks, and well maintained streets.

Another achievement was his efforts to improve the fragmented and poor water delivery system that used to serve city residents. Ted provided direction for consolidating 14 separate water companies into a single city system. By consolidating approximately 90 percent of all the city residents into a single city-owned system, water quality, pressure, and fire protection have been substantially improved.

In his role as an official of the Paramount Chamber of Commerce, Ted has helped to maintain and develop an attractive business environment essential to a successful community.

Throughout all of his activities, Ted has had the unending active support of Mary, his wife of 34 years.

I join with my wife, Lee, in wishing Ted Mosier, Mary, and their four children, Jim, Valarie, Pat, and Pam, all the best in years to come and much success in future endeavors.●

TRIBUTE TO HOPE SKIPPER OF NACOGDOCHES, TX

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the responsibilities connected with local public office are often as important and frustrating as those faced here in Washington. Therefore, being honored for outstanding achievement in the office of county clerk and possessing a longstanding reputation on the job as well as in the community for hard work and inspired leadership deserves recognition.

Mrs. Hope Skipper, who is currently serving her fifth consecutive term as Nacogdoches County Clerk, was named the 1984 Outstanding County Clerk for the State of Texas earlier this month. She shines as one of the best in a group of over 200 dedicated local public servants.

Her record of civic and community activity spans 40 years in east Texas. This is a woman who has never been afraid to "get involved" and work toward a better way, for her neighborhood, her city, her county and her State.

Local community leaders were a motivating force behind the formation of the first 13 United States of America 200 years ago. They continue to constitute a vital and influential group in our Nation's governing machinery. I am pleased to have the opportunity to call attention to the fine work of Mrs. Skipper. In praising her efforts, we should recognize the contributions made by all local public officials in this country, and offer our gratitude.●

ROCKY JENSEN'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO HAWAIIAN FINE ARTS

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to my colleagues' attention the outstanding accomplishments and dedication of one of my constituents, Rocky Ka'iouliokahihikolo'ehu Jensen. His contributions to the fine arts arena in Hawaii, for over a decade, are most commendable.

Over the years, Rocky has played an active leadership role in advancing the public awareness of Hawaiian art and its significance to today's Hawaiians. I hasten to say that Rocky is at the forefront of artists who are concerned ultimately with the pursuit of truth and preservation of Hawaiian art. At a time in Hawaii's history when a renaissance is actually taking place, Rocky is doing his part to create a link between past and future, and to give permanence to the present.

As a child, Rocky displayed his artistic talent when he won a scholarship to the prestigious Honolulu Academy of Arts, and since that time, Rocky's interest in the beaux-arts has only intensified. In 1973, he seriously pursued an artistic career when he illustrated and published a hallmark of Hawaiian cultural works, "Men of Ancient Hawaii." From that point on, Rocky's creative career was set in flight.

On February 1, 1976, Rocky formally founded the Hale Naua III, Society of Hawaiian Arts, conceived with the notion of perpetuating the Hawaiian culture, religion and history through individualistic knowledge of the Hawaiian artists within the society. Since its inception, Hale Naua III has given countless exhibits, lectures and demonstrations, continually offering the public an opportunity to become reacquainted with Hawaiian values and traditions. Today, Hale Naua III is a prominent and well-respected society, whose record of accomplishment will be recognized on August 3, 1984 by John D. Waihee, III, Hawaii's Lieutenant Governor.

Rocky has gained both statewide, national, and international recognition, in producing more than 100 exhibits and lecturing throughout the country. In addition, he organized the first contemporary Hawaiian art display at Hawaii's Bishop Museum. This same exhibit was then sent to the Museum Fur Vulkerkunde in Vienna, Austria, the first of its kind in two centuries.

In 1945, Lionel Venturi wrote that what ultimately matters in art is not the canvas, the hue of oil or tempera, the anatomical structure, and all the other measurable items, but its contribution to our life, its suggestions to our sensations, feeling and imagination. Rocky Jensen, the artiste, is certainly fulfilling Venturi's notions through his works. As he feverishly pursues his self-imposed responsibility to carry on where his multitalented family left off, to fill that link, Rocky is presenting his gift to his culture, his artforms from the heart, in his undying pursuit of the perpetuation of the Hawaiian culture.

I congratulate Rocky for his invaluable achievements thus far made, and I look forward to his outstanding contributions in the future.●

REAUTHORIZATION OF THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, in the next few weeks we will be taking up a measure to reauthorize and amend the Older Americans Act. Along with Social Security and medicare, the Older Americans Act [OAA] lies at the foundation of the Federal Government's commitment to the elderly. First enacted in 1965, the act is dedicated to protecting the health, honor, and dignity of senior citizens and serves as the primary vehicle for providing critically important community services.

I have heard from seniors across the country, and from many in my home district. Their message is clear. Reauthorizing the bill is an urgent priority. As an original cosponsor of the reauthorization bill, I rise today to request that my colleagues give their full and unhesitating support to this measure.

Several improvements are put forward in the reauthorization. Funding for OAA programs has been frozen since 1979. This year the Education and Labor Committee recommends increasing the programs' authority by 5 percent over current spending levels. It has also accelerated the program's research into aging related illnesses. A growing commitment to finding suitable treatment for victims of Alzheimer's disease is reflected in amendments to title IV of the act.

Funding for programs designed to assist the elderly in maintaining their economic and personal independence will also be increased by a significant 11 percent under the reauthorization amendments. This increase is especially important for seniors in Maryland's First Congressional District, which I am proud to represent. Mine is a predominantly rural district. Senior support groups, such as the MultiService Area Centers, are often the vital core of the senior community in rural areas. MAC's provide transportation services, so that convalescing medicare patients can have access to outpatient clinics. MAC's provide congregate and in-home nutrition programs and offer valuable legal aid services to seniors.

It would be a mistake, however, for my colleagues to consider the OAA as simply a vehicle for providing social services to the elderly. It also serves as a means for enabling the elderly to provide valuable services to the community. Title V of the OAA provides for job training and employment for the elderly. During the 1983–84 program year, almost 63,000 positions were funded by the program, most of these relating to service to the general community. Such service is vitally important to the health, honor, and dignity of seniors, for the elderly have a lifetime's worth of experience to give their younger neighbors. This act provides them the opportunity to continue sharing themselves and their experience with the community. It gives the community the opportunity to learn from its elders.

Let us in this Chamber reaffirm our commitment to the health, honor, and dignity of senior citizens. I call upon my colleagues to bring the reauthorization legislation to the floor at the earliest possible opportunity, and to give their unanimous approval to the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984.●

LORRAINE J. CARON, GOLD STAR MOTHERS' COLOR GUARD/HISTORIAN

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, recently, Lorraine J. Caron of Millersburg, PA, returned from the American Gold Star Mothers' 47th annual convention held at the Radisson Hotel in Houston, TX.

I am happy to note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today that Mrs. Caron returned to Millersburg as the newly elected color guard/historian of the National Gold Star Mothers. As color guard/historian, Mrs. Caron will carry the American flag when the Gold Star Mothers meet this September in Washington, DC, for their annual board meeting, including on November 11, when the Vietnam memorial statue will be unveiled.

Mrs. Caron has distinguished herself in Pennsylvania by being named department president of Pennsylvania's American Gold Star Mothers Harrisburg chapter. She attends to the needs of the Harrisburg chapter and the department of Pennsylvania, attends many veterans' functions, and board meetings. The department of Pennsylvania's 37th annual convention board will meet October 7 and May 5, 6, and 7 in the greater Harrisburg area.●

(Legislative day of Monday, July 23, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Righteous God, we are amazed at the profusion of variety, with its beauty and balance, which Thou hast built into life. We accept with profound gratitude the diversity among human beings and the special propensity America has had of accepting, absorbing, and honoring this diversity without destroying the identities of culture, language, and ethos.

Help us Lord, to guard this heritage and never violate it.

But Father in Heaven, may we not allow pluralism to degenerate into valuelessness, mediocrity, and monotony. Help us to understand that tolerance is not a virtue to one who has no convictions. Spare us the meaninglessness which is indiscriminating in all its judgments and like a garbage can accept anything. Deliver us from a way of life which quantifies everything and qualifies nothing and help us to realize that without standards, values, and rules, society is anarchy. In His name who is truth incarnate. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS IN ISRAEL

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, on Monday, the State of Israel celebrated an important holiday. That holiday was the occasion of its parliamentary elections. It is appropriate for all of the Members of the Senate to celebrate with the State of Israel its renewal of faith in the democratic process which we all hold so dear. For 35 years, since its founding, Israel has remained a strongly democratic state and America's staunchest ally in its region. As chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, I am pleased to join all Members of the Senate in applauding our Israeli friends for their steady adherence to the democratic principles upon which the State of Israel was founded. Our defense goals of the region are heavily dependent on Israel's strength. The United States has a real stake in Israel and values its friendship highly.

At this moment, there is no certainty as to which of Israel's leading political parties, the Labor Alignment or the Likud Coalition, will be successful in forming a new government. There are differences between the two major parties and the shape of the new government will not be known for several days. Amidst this uncertainty, one thing is sure. No matter which party forms the new government, the American-Israeli friendship will continue to grow and to prosper. Our two countries share similar values and interests. We both strive for peace in the Middle East and work together to achieve that peace. There is a special relationship between the United States and Israel which I will work to strengthen.

I have visited Israel a number of times and have always been struck by the industriousness of Israeli society and citizens and the ability of Israel to cope with all of the problems and concerns which have beset it since its birth. The strength of Israel remains its people and that strength was once again shown by their enthusiasm for and participation in the democratic election process which took place in Israel this week.

It is my belief that as Members of the Senate we all have duty and responsibility to encourage and foster the democratic process not only in our Nation but throughout the world. It is particularly appropriate that we recognize the triumph of this process, wherever it may be. I am therefore pleased to request that I be added as a cosponsor of S. 2746, a bill which would establish a free trade relationship between Israel and the United States. This bill has strong support throughout the Congress. If passed, the bill would encourage trade between Israel and the United States and benefit both countries.

Israel is one of the most loyal allies and deserves this relationship. I urge other Members of the Senate, who have not yet cosponsored this bill, to join me at this time in sponsorship of the legislation in recognition of the State of Israel's continuing support of democratic principles and its continued friendship with the United States.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order and one special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past 10:30 a.m., during which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

At 10:30 this morning, the Senate will temporarily lay aside the pending business, which is the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill, in order to consider Calendar No. 977, the debt collection bill, under a time agreement.

Under that agreement there is a limitation of 60 minutes equally divided between the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

At 11:30 a.m. a rollcall vote will occur on three Metzenbaum amendments en bloc. It will be one vote on the three amendments, which will be followed immediately by a vote on the pending D'Amato substitute as amended if amended, and final passage will occur immediately thereafter.

I invite Members' attention to that time agreement.

There will be no intervening debate, amendment, motion, appeal, or points of order to the final passage of the bill following the votes that I have mentioned.

After that, the Senate will return to the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill.

And on behalf of the leadership, I wish to say we are hopeful that this bill will be finished today.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. WILSON]. Under the standing order, the acting minority leader is recognized.

VITIATION OF ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I do not believe there is anything on our side that needs to be done this morning. I wish to make two unanimous-consent requests, one to vitiate the time of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] who will not be here.

So I ask unanimous consent that that time be vitiated.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to the Democratic leader be reserved for his use at anytime during the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of our time.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for a period not to extend beyond 10:30 a.m. with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

A MOST GLORIOUS PLACE TO LIVE

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, one of the greatest misnomers in the English language today is referring to cocaine as a recreational drug. This description creates the impression that this drug is a harmless one. I would like to focus on a small community in Washington, DC, to show just how recreational and harmless cocaine really is.

A formerly quiet and peaceful neighborhood in our Nation's Capital was invaded by cocaine dealers. Elderly citizens had lived there for years, had reared their children there, had referred to it as the most glorious place they had ever lived.

This has all changed with the invasion of the cocaine dealers.

Now there is only murder and fear in Hanover Place.

The police remark that Hanover Place is different from other drug dealing blocks because of the high cost of cocaine—$50 packets of the drug is the smallest amount sold, and because the customers tend to be middle-class suburbanites. But the dealers and pushers of the drug occupy Hanover Place by day and by night, terrorizing its residents and bringing ruin to the individuals who buy what they have to sell.

Mr. President, the police spend more time on Hanover Place than anywhere in Washington, and still it remains the city's No. 1 market for street sales of cocaine, and one of the city's deadliest places. When the police leave the block, the dealers just ooze back out from under their rocks and return to their work.

Mr. President, we must not let up in our efforts to eradicate drug abuse. As the attached article depicts, lives are being lost, neighborhoods are being destroyed, and futures are being ruined; all by the recreational drug, cocaine.

Recently the subcommittee I chair, the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, conducted hearings on the impact of drugs on crime. While this seems to be a self-evident relationship, specific questions needed to be addressed and specific answers needed to be given in trying to break up this relationship. Testifying at this hearing were the U.S. attorneys for the southern districts of Florida and New York; criminologists from Temple University and the University of Maryland; and a group of recovering narcotics addicts. What came out of this hearing were horrifying revelations of just how great is the impact of drugs on crime.

For example, testimony stated that heroin addicts pale in comparison with the next generation of unpredictably violent criminals hooked on PCP and cocaine; that the power of drug dollars to corrupt civic integrity cannot be overestimated; that death is an appropriate penalty for major drug traffickers because successful large scale drug operations cannot be conducted without engaging in murder. Statistics provided by witnesses were chilling in their numerical depiction of the impact of drugs on crime: The average heroin addict in California commits 177 property crimes a year; over a 9-year period, 234 heroin addicts in Baltimore committed half a million crimes; in Texas a drug addict is expected to commit 190 crimes.

But this hearing was not just about numbers. It was also about the vital, personal dimension that has been depicted in the article I have attached. And this personal dimension, in terms of the survival of our citizens, must be considered if we are to try and solve the problems of drug abuse.

I respectfully request that the article entitled "Combat Zone: Cocaine, Killings Terrorize Hanover Place," dated May 17, 1984, in the Washington Post, be printed in the RECORD.

COMBAT ZONE: COCAINE, KILLINGS TERRORIZE HANOVER PLACE

(By Linda Wheeler)

Nobody on Hanover Place NW really wants to talk about the murders and the drug dealing that are part of life on this littered, deadend street just off busy North Capitol Street.

The little street of two-story brick row houses is now the Number One market for street sales of cocaine in the city, according to police. And it is rapidly becoming one of the city's deadliest places as well, with at least three homicides this year on or just off the block-long street, along with several other stabbings and shootings.

Questions about the cocaine business are turned away by the young men lining the street unless interest is shown in buying the $50 packets of white powder called "the lady."

Questions about the murders on or near the block are just shrugged off. The most recent killing was last Thursday evening, when 24-year-old Walter Turner was shot to death at the end of the block. "I looked out the door and when I saw what it was, I closed that door," said one man who lives on the street and declined to identify himself. "It's bad here, lady. Don't come back here alone."

Hanover Place hasn't always been such a tough block. Police say marijuana has been sold on the block for nearly 20 years, but there was little trouble until the dealers added heroin and cocaine to their inventory.

Leroy and Mable Harris moved to Hanover Place 22 years ago. Mable Harris remembers when the street was "clean and nice and quiet. It was a wonderful place to live." But things changed about two years ago, she says. "People started throwing trash on the street. And there's a lot of traffic and a lot of people who don't live here out on the street. The police be out there, but nothing changes."

Leroy Harris, a former advisory neighborhood commissioner, says the block used to be "the most glorious place I ever lived. Now it's terrible. People stand in front of your gate all night long, and out back of your house in the alley. It is awful."

Hanover Place is a busy street by day and by night. Shifting groups of men lounge against the walls of vacant houses, shoot craps on the sidewalk or crisscross the street, pausing to lean into car windows. At night the little street resembles a long dark tunnel, punctuated by street lights that barely illuminate the crowds below.

Tuesday night the police blocked several of the labyrinthine alleys leading out of Hanover Place and questioned everyone driving into the block. Most of the drivers were turned away, leaving the block unexpectedly empty and quiet.

Down at the end of the block, at one of two car-repair shops on the street, an autobody mechanic leaned against the garage door of his shop, his white protective mask dangling around his neck. He said he was afraid to give his name.

"We heard the cops were here so we came out. Glad to see them here. They ought to burn those guys, those drug dealers, and not let them back on the street. It's like a rubber band, they just keep snapping back to Hanover," he said.

The man said he has owned the repair shop for two years and found that running a legal business on Hanover Place presents peculiar problems.

"I can't get anyone to deliver parts here," he said. "I tell them the address and they say, 'no way, you will have to come here and get them.' And my customers won't come in here. I have to do pickup and delivery."

When the man saw the police cars leave the block, he decided to close the big garage door and go back to work. He said he regretted shutting out the daylight and fresh air, but "I like working in the dark where it's safe. We never open up this door."

The police left, the garage door closed and suddenly the block filled with men who stepped into the street from several vacant houses and out of the back alleys.

Sgt. Al Marshall, head of the narcotics squad for the police department's 1st District, said, "We're devoting a lot of time to Hanover, more than to anywhere else. We go in there on a warrant and we get more than drugs. Recently we got a sawed-off shotgun, a .45 automatic, a rifle with a telescope, a .38 and a lot of drugs from just one house."

Marshall said Hanover Place is different from other drug-dealing blocks because of the relatively high cost of cocaine and because the customers tend to be middle-class suburbanites driving Volvos and Mercedes. "We find people trading for cocaine, and that's why you have so much stolen property up there. Most of the stuff seems to be new. Some of it has price tags."

As Hanover Place became a tough street over the past few years, the neighboring blocks changed in a different way. Houses along N and O streets have been renovated, and an old warehouse at 52 O St. NW was transformed into studio space for 20 artists.

Eric Rudd, a sculptor who owns the renovated warehouse, said Hanover Place is the busiest block in the area. "On O Street we have a mixture of homeless people eating at SOME [So Others May Eat, a soup kitchen], a school for nurses, oldtime residents and the artists. All of that is calm compared to Hanover. Hanover is like a third world country."

Former ANC commissioner Harris, 76, would like Hanover Place to be a quiet street again. But he is a realist about how much change he can bring to his block, and settles for the area in front of his own house.

"I don't allow them to sell no dope in front of my place, or I will have to get involved," He said. "They give me that respect. They don't want me raising sam out there. It can be a terrible problem knowing too much. Down here, if you start knowing too much, you get yourself dead."

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR FRANK LAUTENBERG

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the Newark Star Ledger recently took note of the outstanding contributions of my colleague, the junior Senator from New Jersey, FRANK LAUTENBERG. I want to share with my colleagues this well-deserved tribute, and I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Newark Star Ledger, July 1, 1984]

FAST LEARNER

After he was sworn in as a U.S. Senator, Frank Lautenberg reflected on the office he had just assumed and admitted to being "overwhelmed." But, that understandable sense of awe apparently was fleeting. In his short incumbency, the New Jersey Democrat has shown he is a quick learner, not only in the rudimentary parliamentary and procedural functions but also in the intricate inner workings of that traditionally clubby legislative body.

For a freshman senator, Sen. Lautenberg has been an unusually active legislator, involved in a broad array of legislation and issues of importance to his home state and the nation.

He moved into elective politics at an age when many of his corporate peers were more attracted by a leisurely style of living, or even early retirement. The move has turned out to be a rewarding one for his New Jersey constituency, judging from his legislative record. He has been involved, too, in a broader foreign affairs perspective, making trips to troubled Central America and war-ravaged Lebanon.

Recently, he sharply criticized New York City for its excessive pollution of the Hudson River and its adverse environmental impact on the Jersey coast. He joined with two other Garden State Democratic congressmen—Reps. James Howard and James Florio—in pushing for a national 21-year-old drinking law, a matter of particular concern for this state.

While he has been acutely aware of the nation's nagging economic problems associated with record high budget deficits and trade imbalances, Sen. Lautenberg also has shown a sensitivity to social issues affecting the poor and the elderly, and the palpable academic shortcomings of urban school districts.

Almost at the outset of his Senate service, Sen. Lautenberg introduced legislation to provide $600 million in federal funding to finance computer education in poorer city school systems. It was an effort to avoid opening a wider gap between opportunities afforded poor and wealthy children in their access to computer-based instruction.

Months before the implementation of the breakup of the American Telephone and Telegraph monopoly, he sponsored a measure to subsidize basic phone service for the poor and elderly, in anticipation of higher rates that would ensue after the divestiture.

For a Senate newcomer, the Lautenberg legislative record has been highly auspicious—a record that augurs well for his home state, and in broader dimension, for the country.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in May, more than 400 Illinois small businesses gathered in our State capitol of Springfield for the Illinois Conference on Small Business. This conference, sponsored by the Illinois Small Business Association and the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, was modeled after the 1980 White House Conference on Small Business. The Springfield Conference focused on the opportunities available to small businesses at the national and State levels and reviewed some of the problems facing small businesses in our State, in particular.

More than 97 percent of all businesses in Illinois have fewer than 100 employees. This conference, under the leadership of the Lieutenant Governor of our State, George Ryan, developed an agenda of 55 recommendations, with issues covering Federal, State and private sector initiatives.

Mr. President, I am pleased that my State has taken the initiative to hold this conference and to seek the participation and the views of the small business community in Illinois. The recommendations that were developed there should be a guide to the policymakers of our State and Federal Government on the issues that are important to our small businesses. The delegates to that conference developed their own theme: "We've only just begun speaking out for small business in Illinois."

Two months ago, the Congress approved legislation (Public Law 98-276) directing the President to reconvene the White House Conference on Small Business by no later than September 1986. I was honored to join with Chairman WEICKER and our ranking Member on the Senate Small Business Committee, Senator BUMPERS, in cosponsoring that legislation in the Senate. Under that new law, the reconvened conference is to be preceded by State conferences. Our Illinois conference clearly puts our State in the lead in preparing for, and encouraging the participation in, that next national conference.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter to me from Lieutenant Governor Ryan and the chairman's final report of the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
July 12, 1984.

Hon. ALAN J. DIXON,
U.S. Senate, Hart Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR AL: I am pleased to enclose a copy of the Chairman's Report on the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business.

In October 1983, the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission called for the convening of an Illinois Conference on Small Business. The purpose of the Conference was to formalize recommendations for strengthening the economic base for small business and improving the overall economic climate and vitality of the state from now through the year 2000. On May 15-16, 1984, approximately 450 delegates representing small businesses across the state convened in Springfield to accomplish this purpose.

I believe the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business was successful in identifying and highlighting the unique contributions, concerns and needs of small business in Illinois. Much work remains to be done, however, to ensure that the recommendations of the Conference are implemented. Many of the recommendations will require federal action to implement.

Small business is the most significant contributor toward new job creation. It is, therefore, imperative that we in the public sector, both at the state and federal level, continue to work with the private sector to assist the establishment, survival and growth of this important segment of our economy.

Sincerely,

GEORGE H. RYAN,
Lieutenant Governor.

Enclosure.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
July 6, 1984.

Hon. JAMES R. THOMPSON,
Governor, State of Illinois, Springfield, IL.

DEAR GOVERNOR THOMPSON: I am pleased to submit the Chairman's Report on the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business.

In October, 1983, the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission called for the convening of an Illinois Conference on Small Business. The purpose of the Conference was to formalize recommendations for strengthening the economic base for small business and improving the overall economic climate and vitality of the state from now through the year 2000. On May 15-16, 1984, approximately 400 delegates representing small businesses across the state convened in Springfield to accomplish this purpose.

During the two days of intensive meetings, the delegates adopted 55 recommendations designed to assist the establishment, survival and growth of small business in Illinois. This report outlines the process involved in achieving the Conference's purpose and the policy expressed in the delegates' work. A final report detailing the recommendations made by the Conference will be issued later this summer.

I believe the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business was successful in identifying and highlighting the unique contributions, concerns and needs of small business in Illinois. Because small business is the most significant contributor towards new job creation, it is imperative that we in the public sector give careful consideration to the recommendations made by the Conference, and continue to work with the private sector in making Illinois a better state in which to do business.

Sincerely,

GEORGE H. RYAN,
Lieutenant Governor, Chairman, Illinois Conference on Small Business.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE ON SMALL BUSINESS

INTRODUCTION

The 1984 President's Report on the State of Small Business noted that in 1982 small firms comprised 99.7 percent of total enterprises, employed 47.8 percent of total nongovernment, non-farm employees and contributed approximately 38 percent of the Gross National Product of the United States. In Illinois, there are over 240,000 small businesses which produce approximately $60 billion in goods and services and have a productivity rate 10 percent higher than the nation's average. Most importantly, it is estimated the small firms will generate between 50 and 80 percent of all new jobs.

Research sponsored by MIT, Brookings Institute and the Heller Institute all indicate that small businesses are the major source of the new jobs and products. While figures on the importance of small business to the economy vary, they all indicate that this sector is a major factor in growth, development and innovation.

To say that small business is important to our economy is an understatement, at best. In the past, the United States has been relatively free from foreign competition, but today, we see ourselves being beaten on many different economic fronts. Our best weapon against this competition is innovation. Small firms are inherently more creative, innovative, flexible and resourceful. According to the National Science Foundation, small companies develop new products faster and bring them to market faster than larger companies. Studies show that small businesses produce 24 times more innovations per dollar than large businesses. It is this type of efficiency that will provide the shot in the arm to revitalize our economy and put the United States back on top.

The advantages of promoting and nurturing the development of small business are clear. A sound, well conceived small business development policy will help modernize and diversify our economy, provide jobs for our citizens, raise our standard of living, and help us better compete in the world marketplace.

In forming this development policy, we in government can learn a valuable lesson about resourcefulness from the small businesses of our nation. In Illinois, we are fortunate to have a group of entrepreneurs who are willing to donate their time and energies in helping the state become more resourceful in its small business development efforts.

The fruition and subsequent success of the Illinois Conference on Small Business is directly attributable to the talents of the small business people who participated. Over 400 representatives of the small business community have come together through the Illinois Conference on Small Business to help us shape our policy toward small business development.

The Conference has provided a foundation upon which to build our policy. All of us, the delegates, elected officials, and business leaders from throughout the state must now work hard to uphold this policy and ensure that the recommendations from the Conference are implemented.

This report briefly describes how the Illinois Conference on Small Business came about, what the general results of the Conference were, and where we may go from here to help improve our small business climate.

THE PROCESS

In February of 1983, Governor Thompson appointed the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission (GSBAC) and asked Lieutenant Governor Ryan to serve as Chairman.

In discussing its mission the GSBAC decided that it could be most effective as a private sector advisory group. The Lieutenant Governor therefore asked the Commission to elect a private sector Chairman. The Lieutenant Governor continues to serve as the public-sector Chairman and Ex-Officio member.

The GSBAC believes that this structure is fundamental in the ultimate success of its stated mission: "to assist the establishment, survival and growth of small business in Illinois for improving the economic environment of the state".

During its first six months of meetings, the GSBAC discussed, at length, the problems facing small businesses and how these problems can best be solved. First, the GSBAC needed to confirm what they were assuming to be the major problems confronting small business. Second, the GSBAC needed to develop solutions to those problems. Finally, the GSBAC needed to develop a state-wide network to help refine and implement the solutions to those problems.

The Illinois Conference on Small Business was the mechanism selected to fulfill these needs. Specifically, the Illinois Conference on Small Business was designed to "formalize recommendations for strengthening the economic climate and vitality of the state from now through the year 2000".

The activities of the Illinois Conference on Small Business were coordinated by the Lieutenant Governor, the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission, the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, the U.S. Small Business Administration and several trade associations and private sector resources. The Conference represented a watershed in public-private sector relations to help the business climate.

Fact Finding Meetings—Two public fact finding meetings were held in December of 1983, one in Chicago and one in Springfield. These meetings, conducted by the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission, provided an opportunity for trade, business and labor associations, as well as other interested groups, to identify the concerns facing small businesses. This framework of concerns was further developed and refined in a series of regional meetings.

Regional Meetings—Eleven Regional Meetings were held throughout the State during March. The purpose of these Regional Meetings was to generate preliminary recommendations to address the issues identified at the Fact Finding Meetings. In addition, the Regional Meetings were designed to identify issues of particular concern within each region.

In order to stimulate interest in the meetings, informational brochures were mailed to over 200,000 small businesses throughout the state. To ensure consistent and quality results from each Regional Meeting, a detailed training session was held for the Regional Meeting coordinators. Each Regional Meeting ran from four to six hours and ended with the election of seventeen delegates and two alternates.

REGIONAL MEETINGS

Date, location, coordinators

March 5, Kankakee, Area Jobs Development Assn.

March 6, Harvey, South Suburban Chamber of Commerce and the Harris-Hub Co.

March 8, Champaign, Albert Griffiths, Commission Member.

March 9, Quad Cities, Chamber of Commerce of Upper Rock Island County.

March 10, Chicago, Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry.

March 13, Mt. Vernon, Stan Koziara, Commission Member.

March 13, Carbondale, Phillip Gillespie, Commission Member.

March 14, East St. Louis, East St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

March 15, Rockford, Rockford Area Chamber of Commerce.

March 15, Peoria, Peoria Chamber of Commerce.

March 15, Quincy, Quincy Chamber of Commerce.

In April, delegates were provided with a three ring binder containing each recommendation developed at the Regional Meetings. The recommendations were divided into topic areas and each was supported with detailed background information. This book of recommendations served as the focal point of the delegates work during the May 15 and 16 Conference.

Delegates—In order to assemble a responsible and enthused Conference body, the Lieutenant Governor asked each Illinois member of Congress and each member of the Illinois General Assembly to delegate one individual from their respective districts to the Conference.

In addition, delegates were elected at each of the eleven regional meetings. The Governor and the Lieutenant Governor jointly appointed twenty-two delegates. Each member of the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission also served as a delegate to the Conference which brought the delegate total to 435.

THE CONFERENCE

The Illinois Conference on Small Business was held on May 15 and 16, 1984, in Springfield. The conference marked unprecedented cooperation among the state and federal governments and the private sector to make Illinois a better place for small firms to do business. The Conference was attended by approximately 450 small business people and business representatives. The Conference staff was provided by the Lieutenant Governor's Office, the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, the U.S. Small Business Administration, L.R. Nelson, Inc., Ann Becker and Associates, NFIB/Illinois, and the University of Illinois.

The objective of the Conference was to discuss, refine and formalize the recommendations resulting from the Regional Meetings. Each of the final recommendations was prioritized in order of importance.

During the two day Conference, each delegate attended two issue discussion sessions. Each session was led by trained discussion leaders who acted as moderators and facilitators in determining the five to six priorities of each issue area. The issue areas included:

Capital Formation and Retention.
Government Imposed Costs on Employment.
Government Procurement.
International Trade.
Regulatory and Legislative Reform.
Small Business Development Incentives.
Taxation.
Tourism.
Women and Minorities.

The top priorities from each of these issue areas were presented to the full conference delegation on the afternoon of the second day. The presentations were followed by questions and comments from the floor. The delegates were then asked to vote for their top twenty priorities. The results were announced at the end of the Conference.

At the close of the Conference, delegates were asked to evaluate the Conference. Overall, it received a very positive evaluation.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The delegates to the Illinois Conference on Small Business developed, refined and prioritized fifty-five recommendations ranging from reducing government imposed regulations and costs to establishing tax incentives for investing in small business.

The wide scope of recommendations reaffirms the conclusion made in Alvin D. Star's article "Small Business and Midwest Economic Revitilization":

"The way to stimulate small business formation and expansion appears to be through the creation of the proper overall environment in which they are to exist, rather than through simple tax and financial incentives."

Costs—A recurrent theme in the recommendations is the need to reduce costs and particularly, government imposed costs. Generally, reducing government imposed costs on businesses was the highest priority of the Small Business Delegation.

Of the fifty-five recommendations, fourteen would help small businesses reduce their costs. Eight of those fourteen recommendations dealt with government imposed costs and were generally ranked higher in priority than recommendations in other topic areas. Several recommendations would provide direct labor cost relief by lowering unemployment insurance and worker compensation costs and liberalizing various other labor laws. Some of the indirect cost relief measures made it easier for small businesses to fulfil' certain governmental requirements in the areas of taxation.

The number one priority resulting from the Conference was to make Illinois' Workers Compensation System competitive with contiguous states. Another of the top ten recommendations would require state government to pay all litigation costs incurred by small business arising out of litigation brought by the state in which the small business prevailed.

A majority of the recommendations in this area were not specifically aimed at small businesses but rather at improving the overall business climate of the State.

Financial and Technical Assistance—Another major area of concern for the delegates was the need for government assistance. Without this assistance, they argued, small businessmen would not have the information or the capital to compete with multi-national corporations or not-for-profit monopolies.

MIT Professor, David Birch, noted in his book, The Job Generation Process, that "small businesses need, use well, and cannot easily get capital."

Several of the recommendations made in this topic area addressed Birch's conclusion by proposing tax incentives and credits for investing in small businesses. Specially, it was recommended that investors be allowed to defer capital gain taxes for the roll-over of investments from one small business to another. Another recommendation called for legislation to create a state check-off on income taxes to create an investment insurance pool.

A majority of the recommendations in the area of financial assistance were directed specifically at small businesses. This confirms the fact that small businesses have a much harder time securing capital at acceptable interest rates than larger businesses. While there were only five recommendations in the area of Capital Formation and Retention, overall, these recommendations were the number two priority for the delegation.

In the area of information services available to small business, the delegates advocated that the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs establish a clearinghouse of professional research studies relating to small business and provide information and analyses on pending legislation. They also recommended the expansion of the Small Business Development Center program and in particular the expansion of services to small exporters.

The delegates further suggested that the government insure small business input in the formation of state policy. To this end, they recommended the creation of a cabinet level position in Illinois government which would exclusively represent small business.

In the area of procurement assistance, the priority recommendation called for greater dissemination of information on government procurement opportunities through weekly publications and timely uniform notification procurements.

Legislative and Regulatory Reform—The delegates expressed a general belief that state and federal laws pertaining to small business are often ill considered or out of date. Accordingly, they offered several suggestions for eliminating these needless drains on small business.

To insure that state laws do not become irrelevant or counter productive, the delegates suggested legislation which would require all state laws, rules, regulations and agency enabling acts to automatically expire after five years unless reviewed and renewed by the General Assembly.

Similarly, they urged the state to require economic impact studies on all new state laws or amendments. The delegates were also concerned that state laws are often indecipherable to all but lawyers or legislators.

The recommendations in this topic area were aimed at streamlining Illinois' regulatory system. Many of the recommendations in this area would provide cost relief to businesses by making it easier to deal with government red tape.

The regulatory and legislative reform recommendations, as a group were ranked third in the delegates' list of important issues.

Taxation—While recognizing that taxes may be the price of a free society, the delegates to the Conference advocated both a more equitable and streamlined tax system.

The number five recommendation called for the Illinois Department of Revenue to respond more quickly to taxpayers' problems and to simplify the tax filing requirements. The delegates also recommended that the Illinois Tax Code remain coupled to the federal system. Further, the delegation urged legislators to reduce the Illinois Corporate Personal Property Replacement Tax and to avoid an increase in the Illinois Hotel/Motel tax.

Based on the priority of the nine recommendations in the area the issue of taxation was considered the fourth most important.

International Trade—Although the issue of small business exports is a relatively new and unexplored area, the delegates recognized the vast potential for growth of Illinois' small businesses through export opportunities. Many of the delegates were not sure how to go about tapping this vast potential and, therefore, recommended that more information on foreign trade requirements, customs and opportunities be provided to potential exporters. They also urged that export assistance be expanded through the services provided by Small Business Development Centers throughout the state.

The delegation also called upon the U.S. Export-Import Bank and the Illinois Export Development Authority to provide greater incentives to local banks in export financing for smaller businesses.

Through these recommendations, the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, the Illinois Export Council and the Illinois Export Development Authority can help small businesses explore this new potential for growth and vitality.

Women and Minorities—During the Illinois Conference on Small Business, Governor Thompson and the Small Business Administration announced that delegate Ronald Thompson, a minority business owner, would receive a million dollar minority federal defense contract.

The need for more women and minorities to receive a fair share of such government contracts and business in the private sector was cited as another priority by the Conference.

Women and minorities often face special problems in doing business. Therefore, several of the recommendations in this issue area called for special assistance to help solve those problems. Specifically, it was recommended that the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs establish local business assistance centers with programs targeted to female and minority business owners.

The recommendations from this topic area are important in the equitable development of our economy and should be further refined and developed to insure they are properly addressed.

Tourism—On the second day of the Conference, immediately following Governor Thompson's keynote address, the Small Business delegation received an excellent tourism development presentation from Barbara Proctor, President of Proctor and Gardner Advertising, Inc. (a minority small business in Chicago), and Donald DePorter, Regional Vice President of the Hyatt Regency Chicago.

The highest priority in this topic area, and one of the more controversial recommendations, was to elevate the Office of Tourism to cabinet-level status separate from the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs. Removing the Office of Tourism from DCCA and giving it Department status would highlight the state's commitment to tourism as an important segment of Illinois' economy.

A vast majority of businesses in the tourism sector are, by nature, small businesses. Because of this unique relationship between the tourism industry and small businesses, special attention should be provided to further research and refine the recommendations of the topic area.

Conclusion—Only through aggressive recommendations such as those outlined above can Illinois insure the prosperity of its small business sector. The recommendations set forth by the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business are just the beginning and can only be implemented through cooperation and the consistent efforts of both the public and private sectors.

FOLLOW UP

As previously stated, the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission determined that in order to be effective they had to have grass roots support for their efforts. The delegates to the Illinois Conference on Small Business will provide that deep-line of support.

The Illinois Conference on Small Business considered hundreds of issues and recommendations and put forth a list of top priorities. The many recommendations that did not make the final list are still important issues. Priorities and issues change and the future work of the small business community will not only involve implementing priority recommendations, but also refining and developing new priorities.

The work of the Small Business Conference must evolve and adapt in order to make progress. Therefore, subsequent regional and statewide meetings on small business issues should build upon the ground work laid by the 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business.

Many issues were brought up but not addressed in sufficient detail to make the final recommendation list. One such issue of special interest to the Lieutenant Governor's Office is the issue of declining productivity associated with substance abuse. A further examination of assistance programs to help small business owners deal with employees whose personal problems affect job performance should be initiated. This type of follow up will ensure the continuation of the efforts put forth at the Conference.

Subsequent to the Conference, the Governor's Small Business Advisory Commission has held planning meetings to develop ways to ensure the implementation of the fifty-five Conference recommendations. This planning, of course, will utilize the talents and enthusiasm of the Small Business Delegation.

Successful Conference follow up will require administrative action by the Executive branch and legislative action by the Illinois General Assembly. The Lieutenant Governor, as a small business spokesman for the Governor, will do everything possible to ensure cooperation from the Executive branch.

Major recommendations which can be implemented administratively:

1. The fifth most important recommendation called for the Department of Revenue to streamline administrative procedures to reflect legislative intent of tax laws and to respond to taxpayer problems.

2. Recommendation number fifteen urges the Governor to create a cabinet level position to serve as the state's small business advocate.

3. The twenty-fifth most important recommendation advocated expanded dissemination of information on state procurement programs and opportunities.

4. A similar recommendation called for the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, the Illinois Congressional Delegation and others to establish a comprehensive procurement assistance plan.

5. The delegation also thought it important that the state agencies be required to respond to all written inquiries within thirty days.

6. The twenty-eighth recommendation urges DCCA to establish specific business development programs which include greater access to information on resources available and legislation impacting small businesses.

7. Another recommendation called for greater availability of information on international trade requirements, customs and opportunities.

The complete set of recommendations requiring administrative action are contained in Appendix A.

Recommendations already enacted.—In order to meet the goals set at the Small Business Conference, legislative action is also required. The delegates will be pleased to learn that as a result of their coming to Springfield in May, some legislation addressing their recommendations has already passed.

House Bill 3161 would address some of the concerns regarding prompt payment of tax refunds. This bill permits a taxpayer to notify the Department of Revenue when an overpayment is made. If the Department does not respond within twenty days the taxpayer may deduct the amount of overpayment on his next tax payment.

House Bill 3239 helps small businesses with their utility bills. Specifically, it requires utilities to charge small businesses the same deposit as residential users are charged (⅙ of their annual bill). Presently small businesses are charged ⅓ of their annual bill.

House Bill 2950 relieves some of the burdensome government regulations. Last year, legislation was enacted that allowed employees to inspect their personnel records. House Bill 2950 would provide that very small employers (5 or less full-time employees or 10 or less part-time employees) are exempted from this access records law.

Finally, House Bill 3091 is a direct result of the Small Business Conference. The bill does several things, including: 1) creating a business assistance office in the Illinois Department of Commerce; 2) prescribing methods to help reduce/eliminate "red tape" and burdensome paperwork; 3) strengthening the Regulatory Flexibility Act for small business; 4) assisting in state and federal procurement opportunities; and 5) improving prompt payment from the State of Illinois to businesses.

These changes are only small steps in the right direction in helping the State's small business sector. Many more legislative and administrative changes must be made before Illinois has the proper overall environment in which small businesses can do what they do best—create new products, jobs and opportunities. These changes cannot take place by themselves. They will require steady and unrelenting pressure from small businesses throughout the state.

CONCLUSION

The 1984 Illinois Conference on Small Business was indeed productive. The Conference provided an invaluable forum for cooperation among the public and private-sectors to improve Illinois' economy. Although productive, the ultimate success of the Conference can only be measured by the extent to which the Conference recommendations are implemented.

The Conference represented the culmination of many months of planning and hard work. The Conference also represented the beginning of another long and arduous task. The construction of a favorable business climate will not take place overnight. The Conference has, however, provided a solid foundation upon which to build.

The importance of small business to our economy is well established. It is now incumbent upon both the public and private-sector to continue cooperative efforts to assist the establishment, survival and growth of this important segment of our economy. I am confident that with this joint effort we can make Illinois a better place to do business and improve prosperity for all citizens.

APPENDIX A

Recommendations Requiring State Administrative Action:

Recommendation No. and recommendation:

5—Direct the Illinois Department of Revenue to streamline administrative procedures to reflect the legislative intent of tax laws and to respond to taxpayer problems.—Require prompt payment of income and sales tax refund claims and impose an interest penalty for late payment.—Establish a problem resolution office within the Department of Revenue.

15—Create a cabinet level position within state government to serve as an advocate for small business.

20—Elevate the Department of Tourism to a cabinet-level position because of its economic/industrial development importance. The mission of the Department of Tourism shall be to coordinate State efforts to promote tourism, including study and development of new attractions, providing education opportunities to communities regarding tourism and providing annual reports on the status of tourism in the State of Illinois. Funding for the Department of Tourism shall be transferred from existing funds within the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs marked for tourism promotion, and from current Hotel/Motel tax receipts.

25—Require expanded dissemination of information regarding State procurement opportunities to Illinois businesses. Create a weekly publication (similar to the Commerce Business Daily), providing information regarding state contracts and purchases for all state agencies. Require timely uniform notification of procurement opportunities, preferably 30 days. Use private sector channels, i.e. banks, chambers and local industrial committees as conduits for state procurement information.

26—Require that all state agencies respond to written inquiries regarding administrative interpretations of rules, regulations or policy within 30 calendar days.

27—Create a comprehensive plan involving the Executive branch, DCCA, the private sector and Illinois' Congressional delegation to help small businesses become more competitive on federal contracts. Establish an advocate within Illinois to assist small firms in efforts to secure federal government contracts. Establish a program within the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs (DCCA) to promote awareness of federal government procurement mechanics, prime contracting opportunities and subcontracting opportunities. Promote the use of Small Business Administration programs designed to help firms interested in federal procurement opportunities (i.e. financing for equipment, bonding guarantees, etc.). Establish a program within DCCA to inform the private sector of opportunities to do business with the federal government. Develop a list of Illinois businesses interested in federal contracting. Recognize procurement as a significant economic development tool. Establish a tax credit for expenditures of Illinois firms seeking government contracts for the first time. Support Congressional action to increase competition in federal contracting through reduction in the use of sole source contracts and by increasing the breakout of small component parts from larger purchases. Seek the cooperation of labor in efforts to secure government contracts by urging increased productivity.

28—DCCA should establish specific business development programs. Establish a central location (clearinghouse) for a computer-based data bank containing user friendly professional research studies, relating to small businesses and other small business resources. The program should be linked to each SBDC. Provide information regarding pending legislation which affects various categories of small business. Identify the economic impact of proposed legislation on small businesses. Provide a mechanism for small business input into proposed legislation.

30—Recommend that the support and expansion of the Small Business Development Center (SBDC) program continue as proposed, or with possible acceleration of implementation. Form local advisory boards to work with each local SBDC. Provide funds to do local needs analysis. Communicate local service delivery plans for each SBDC to local small businesses. Hold each SBDC accountable to their service delivery plan. Establish and support an interactive SBDC computer-based data clearinghouse through the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs (DCCA).

31—Devise a new tourism marketing and promotional strategy to include small business participation in both development and implementation.

37—Create a task force, comprised of small minority and female business owners, representatives of the banking community, and representatives of the Small Business Administration and the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs. The purpose of this task force shall be to explore and develop unique and innovative sources of capital. Establish state and federal legislation specifically to provide tax incentives for investments in minority and female-owned and operated small businesses. Establish direct loan and guarantee programs specifically for minority and female-owned and operated businesses. Support establishment of local venture capital funds by banks and larger businesses for minority and female-owned small businesses.

41—Improve the availability of information on international trade requirements, techniques, and opportunities for the benefit of entry level companies. Make information available through sources such as the Small Business Development Centers, local Chambers of Commerce, and the media regarding programs and assistance available to firms on exporting. Through state and federal agencies, publicize existing sources for potential export sales and foreign customers. Encourage foreign language and cross-cultural training at all levels of education.

42—Through the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs, establish local business assistance centers to provide technical assistance specifically targeted to female and minority small business owners. These centers should offer services including management counseling, information and assistance regarding government procurement opportunities, information and assistance regarding various financial programs, and listings of minority and female-owned businesses. These centers should be established in locations that are easily accessible to minority and female enterprenuers, such as community colleges, local chambers of commerce, and offices of other business organizations. The business assistance centers should be developed as part of existing programs with no additional funding required and activities should be directed by local user boards.

45—Establish legislation that will create an advocate within the Office of the Lieutenant Governor to establish, enforce and monitor a 25-40% set-aside of state contracts for Illinois small businesses.

48—Expand export assistance to small business through programs within the Small Business Development Centers. Encourage participation of business associations in export programs, and expand trade show and trade mission efforts.

50—Develop a mechanism for small business input in state policy and foster local public/private partnerships (i.e. local business, labor, and chamber of commerce and task forces) to improve the small business climate.

52—Monitor and enforce the Illinois Small Business Purchasing Act to define small business set-asides and to expand such set-asides to all goods and services for all state agencies.

53—Establish an independent, non-political tourism advisory committee involving individuals from the visitor industry.

THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, many of my colleagues were returning to Washington this weekend and may have missed an article in Sunday's Washington Post by writer John M. Berry. However, the information contained in the Berry article is of such extraordinary importance that I wanted to bring it to the attention of the Senate quickly.

Many of us voted for the deficit reduction package with the reservation that it was too little to even qualify as a downpayment. But it was obvious that it was all that the Congress was willing to do at this time and so we accepted it, even though we supported and voted for more significant measures.

The points contained in the Post article are these:

The deficit reduction package will not in fact lower the deficit because its savings will be eaten up by rising interest costs.

The increase in interest costs alone, I add emphasis of my own that we are talking not about the total cost of interest, but only about the increase in these costs, will be as large as the total combined costs of Federal welfare payments to the elderly, aid to families with dependent children, and all housing assistance programs.

The fundamental problem is not the level of interest rates, but the size of the deficit itself.

Each year the Government has to borrow still more to pay the interest due on the money borrowed the year before. This is the Government equivalent of compound interest and is a highly unstable situation—a situation in which there is no limit on future interest payments.

Older securities are maturing all the time and often carry lower rates than the newly borrowed money that is used to pay them off.

The offset of returns of revenue by the Federal Reserve is of diminishing importance because those repayments are rising far more slowly than the total debt.

Finally, there was a CBO warning issued in February that "without change in budget policies, the cost of financing the deficit could become a severe burden, to the point that huge spending cuts or tax increases might be necessary just to prevent an explosive increase in outlays for interest payments."

There is more to contemplate in this article, Mr. President, and I ask unanimous consent that the entire article appear at the conclusion of these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, it is small comfort that the deficit and interest cost picture would be worse if we had not done even the small amount we have done. I remind my colleagues that a good deal of work yet remains if we are to meet even the modest goals of the total deficit reduction package. An agreement on a realistic defense spending level must yet be reached and if that is not done the damage, real and perceived, will be great.

Many among us seem to be willing to wait until next year to pursue real deficit reduction. At the same time, Mr. President, there is certainly no consensus today on either what a real reduction is or on how it can be achieved in pragmatic terms.

If we are unprecedented in our actions and pass a significant reduction package by midsession in 1985, its effects will not be fully felt until 1986 or beyond.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to think about that and read this article and then decide: Can we really afford to wait? I think not.

BORROWING COSTS THWART DEFICIT REDUCTION

(By John M. Berry)

The big tax increase and spending cut that President Reagan signed into law last week will not mean lower federal budget deficits in the next two years because its savings will be eaten up by rising interest costs.

The Deficit Reduction Act, so painfully passed by Congress, is the long-promised "down payment" on moving the federal budget back toward balance. It will boost federal taxes an estimated $10.6 billion in 1985 and $16.9 billion in 1986, while cutting spending by about $4 billion each year.

But this year the government will borrown about $175 billion, more than $1 out of every $5 that it spends, and its net interest bill will reach about $110 billion. If interest rates keep climbing as most private forecasters expect, the $110 billion could easily jump by $25 billion in 1985 and $35 billion in 1986, even with the "down payment" legislation.

The rise in interest payments, which must be paid, will be about as big as the increase in defense spending in 1985 and probably would exceed it substantially in 1986. The increase in interest costs alone will be as big as the total combined cost of federal welfare payments to the elderly, aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) and all housing assistance programs.

In other words, all of the deficit-reducing provisions of the bill Reagan just signed will offset not much more than half the higher interest bill for the next two years. Add all the other spending cuts Congress contemplates making for 1985 as it passes various appropriations bills and the entire "down payment" on deficit reduction is no bigger in 1985 than the increase in interest costs, and in 1986 it will be considerably smaller.

Without passage of the Deficit Reduction Act, deficits in coming years would have been even larger.

The fundamental problem, analysts at the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office stress, is not the level of interest rates but the continuing large budget deficits. Borrowing to cover this year's deficit and that of some off-budget agencies will increase the national debt held by the public by about $175 billion to more than $1.3 trillion.

The increase in the publicly held debt would be greater except that the Treasury started the year with an unusual amount of cash on hand and is using about $15 billion of it to help finance the deficit. The rise in the debt in 1985 probably will be more than $190 billion for a total of about $1.5 trillion.

Once the debt goes up, the government is stuck with paying interest on the increment. If the debt is rising faster than the economy is growing, interest payments will go up steadily relative to the gross national product. And each year, the government has to borrow still more to pay the added interest due on the money borrowed to pay interest the previous year.

This is the budget equivalent of compound interest, analysts such as CBO Director Rudy Penner point out. They regard this as a highly unstable situation in which there is no limit on future interest payments.

If the federal government paid only an average of a 10 percent interest rate to borrow the additional $190 billion, it would mean an additional interest payment of about $10 billion 1985 and $19 billion in 1986. The cost in 1985 is less because the money will be borrowed over the course of the year rather than at the beginning of the year.

But older securities are maturing all the time, and often they carry lower rates than the newly borrowed money that is used to pay them off. Thus, the longer rates stay high, the greater the cost of rolling over existing debt. For instance, OMB estimates that a 1 percentage point rise in rates now, if sustained, will add about $10 billion to the interest bill by 1986.

The federal government, with the best credit in the land, is now paying more than a 10 percent interest rate to borrow money for just three months. The last time it borrowed 30-year money it paid about 13.3 percent.

Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates predicts that the rate on three-month Treasury securities will average 12.4 percent in 1985, with longer-term rates substantially higher. Wharton expects rates to decline somewhat in 1986 as the economy slows or moves into a recession.

Such a path for rates would mean net interest payments in 1986 at least $35 billion higher than the administration indicated in its April budget revisions, which showed a steadily declining course for rates.

Privately, some administration economists do not challenge such a forecast, with rates going up as strong economic growth generates a rapid increase in private credit demand at the same time the federal government continues to finance its big deficits by borrowing.

Officially, however, a midyear budget and forecast update scheduled to be released by the administration early next week will show the three-month Treasury rate dropping to 9 percent by the end of 1985, sources said. The forecast issued in April showed that rate averaging 8 percent in 1985.

In some ways, rising rates are more of a burden to the government than to private borrowers. U.S. businesses can count almost all interest payments as a business cost, which lowers their reported profits and therefore their tax bills. The millions of American households that itemize deductions on their personal income tax returns also can deduct almost all of the interest they have paid.

But the government has only one such offset—the Federal Reserve.

For budget purposes, the central bank is counted as part of the public, and the interest paid on the approximately $160 billion in government securities it holds is regarded as an expense. But after paying its expenses, the Fed returns most of that to the Treasury, which records it as a miscellaneous receipt.

Thus, the true impact of interest payments on the government's overall budget position is smaller than it might appear. Last year, for instance, the Fed sent about $14.5 billion back to the Treasury. However, the Fed's holdings of securities and its repayments are rising far more slowly than the total debt, so this offset is of diminishing importance, budget analysts say.

As recently as 1980, net interest payments on the federal debt were $52.5 billion, less than half what they will be this year. At $52.5 billion, the payments were equal to 2 percent of gross national product and 9.1 percent of total budget outlays.

If the Wharton Forecast is correct—and it is similar to several other private forecasts—net interest payments in 1985 will be about $135 billion, nearly 3.5 percent of GNP and nearly 15 percent of total outlays. Both as a share of GNP and of total spending, the increases are comparable to those in the much more visible defense budget.

Adjusted for the fact of the Fed's annual repayment of most of the interest it receives, all of these figures are slightly smaller. But the increase over the four-year period relative to GNP or total spending is even greater.

In February, the CBO warned, "Without a change in budget policies, the cost of financing the deficits could become a severe burden, to the point that huge spending cuts or tax increases might be necessary just to prevent an explosive increase in outlays for interest payments."

Even with this year's attempt to change budget policies, as embodied in the Deficit Reduction Act, the arithmetic indicates that such an explosion is occurring.

THE NEED FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I wish to share with my colleagues an article on the future of the Democratic Party, written by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, FRITZ HOLLINGS.

In my opinion, it is one of the best articles written in recent times about the path that should be followed by the party.

I share it with my colleagues not for any partisan political purpose, but because the maintenance of a strong and viable two-party system is of vital importance to all of the American people.

The vast majority of Americans, Mr. President, are reasonable moderates. This moderate majority is being disenfranchised as a result of the increasing polarization of our two parties.

All too often the American voters are left to select between the lesser of two evils instead of giving this moderate majority a choice about which they can be genuinely enthusiastic.

The Senator from South Carolina is known by all of us to be among the most able and thoughtful Members of this body, and what he has to say transcends party lines.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Hollings article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE DEMOCRATS COULD WIN, BUT WE WON'T—BASHING REAGAN ISN'T WHAT THE COUNTRY WANTS, BUT IT'S ALL WE SEEM TO DO

(By Ernest F. Hollings)

The good news is that we Democrats can win in November. We can defeat Ronald Reagan. We can put an end to his mismanagement of the resources of this great nation—its people, its treasure, its government.

The bad news is that on the present course, we won't. We won't because we are too bemused with defeating Ronald Reagan personally and equally bemused with ignoring the majority of America. We chase around like a bunch of script writers for "Laugh-In" zapping the president with one-liners—totally oblivious to the distance between real America and Democratic rhetoric.

The first order of business during these next few weeks—weeks which will decide our fate—is to disenthrall ourselves.

We must disenthrall ourselves from the idea that the election of Ronald Reagan was an aberration, a momentary political blip until the voters regain their better judgment. Reagan's election ensued from the voters' loss of confidence in Democrats' ability to manage the economy and provide a strong national defense. Government had grown too big. It needed to be cut. Our defenses had declined. They needed to be rebuilt. It wasn't a purloined briefing book or an old actor's virtuoso performance that did us in. Democrats met the enemy in 1980—and it was us.

We must disenthrall ourselves from the idea that the route to Democratic victory in 1984 is just doing a little more than we did four years ago with this group or that. The vast majority of Americans look on this country as one nation. They see its resources and its people as one nation. They see the problems, the opportunities, the responsibilities as those of one nation. But in 1980, we Democrats were running the government by political poll and appealing to the one issue groups on the 7 o'clock news.

We packaged our worthiest causes—feeding programs, education, women's rights, minority rights, arms control—in single-interest wrappings rather than as advancements for the nation as a whole. We took the issues where Democrats hold the high ground and presented them as sops to organized interests rather than as building blocks for the common good.

At our 1980 convention, the people watched as one-issue group after one-issue group told our party to take it or leave it. We took it. And the people left us.

We must disenthrall ourselves from the idea that President Reagan is amnesiac, insincere and ineffective. President Reagan is intentional, since and successful. During the '30s and '40s, the Republican Party veritably dissolved by attacking Franklin Roosevelt's personality. Now the Democratic Party is mimicking that mistake by charging that Ronald Reagan is out of touch with reality.

President Reagan has the frontier mentality. He believes the wild and woolly West was settled without any food stamps, without Social Security or a federal government and he feels all the country needs is to get rid of the federal government. Other than a strong defense, all we need is incentive for the rich to invest and America will grow strong. He knows exactly why he came to Washington. He came to dismantle government—good programs as well as bad—and he's doing it.

He came to dry up the revenues of government so it cannot sustain itself—and his $200 billion deficits are proof that it's working. And he came determined not to control but to win a new arms race with the Soviets.

Of course, President Reagan's history is wrong. It was the East that was developed without a federal government. And after 100 years of trying it without a federal government, we organized the government by mutually pledging each other our lives, our fortunes, our sacred honor. It was the federal government that opened the West and settled the frontier with the Land Ordinance in 1785. It was the federal government that laid out the transcontinental railroad; that changed the Midwest desert into the breadbasket of the world with water and reclamation projects.

In recent years when the free market forces thrust this country into the Depression, it was the federal government and President Roosevelt that provided the programs not only for economic recovery but a more equitable society. When challenged by Sputnik, it was the federal government that correlated science, industry and labor into a team to put a man on the moon.

We need a federal government today. The modern industrial world is locked in a competition for air and water, for food and ideas. A hungry man is not a free man. Capturing the hearts and minds of the hungry with communism is not difficult. The Soviet Union on the prowl has found its prey in Angola, Afghanistan, Nicaragua, El Salvador. Urbanization and industrialization level the wilderness and shower down a rain of acid. A trade war that has ensued for the past 20 years now threatens to turn the United States into a colony exporting our food and raw materials and importing finished goods. Our standard of living is on the line. Our capacity as a world power is in jeopardy. Devastating deficits threaten a depression. Devastating debt threatens to sink the Third World. An arms race will soon bankrupt us all. This puts the government of the United States on its mettle in 1984.

The people's will in 1984 is no great mystery. Americans want their country competing and their country committed. We want our government disciplined enough to live within its means and competitive enough to protect our standard of living. We want good programs in feeding, health and education, and we want the kind of can-do, hands-on management of those programs that we have in our best-run companies. We want to open wider the doors of economic opportunity and social justice for all our citizens. We want a government strong enough to commit in the defense of freedom and smart enough to get itself and its adversaries talking about arms control and talking about peace.

The policies of this administration make a mockery of the people's will. A government living within its means? Two hundred billion dollar budget deficits each year for as far as the eye can see.

A government competitive enough to protect our standard of living? One hundred billion dollar trade deficits close down plants and wipe out jobs by the hundreds of thousands each year. And while other countries use government to compete and put America at a disadvantage, our president insists on closing government down.

Good programs in feeding, health and education? We all know what the Reagan administration has done for them. And if you think you've seen it all, wait 'til you see what they have in store if they win in November. I'm not nearly so worried about Reagan pulling some kind of "October surprise" to influence the election as I am about the "December surprise" he will spring on us once he doesn't have to worry about elections.

Opening the doors of economic opportunity and social justice? Ronald Reagan and his minions have been busy slamming them shut each day, every day, since Jan. 20, 1981.

Defending freedom? Like our Marines hunkered down at the end of the runway in Beirut, we are hunkered down trying to project America's strength with MX missiles and gunboat diplomacy, while our conventional military erodes and our commitment is questioned.

As for dealing with the Soviets, we've regressed 25 years to the Cold War. The rest of the world thinks we're more to blame for the breakdown of arms talks than the Soviets are. The real tragedy—tragic because it's so unnecessary—is that many Americans think so too.

Yet Ronald Reagan goes on. The pundits, the odds-makers, conventional wisdom—all are one in predicting a Ronald Reagan victory in 1984.

In the light of the Reagan debauchery of government, the president's continued popularity must come from our unpopularity. A political party is the instrument of the people's will. It exists not just to win elections but to move a country. Its purpose is not to placate a cacophony of strident voices, but to attract diverse groups to a common purpose. It is built not on television, but on a national vision. And when that party is out of power, its charge is to provide an alternative.

More than anything, the lack of an alternative is what sustains Ronald Reagan. As one who would fight fire with fire, we insist on trying to beat the Reagan extremes with Democratic extremes. And as a result, the only thing Democrats have to fear is fear of the Democrats.

The emphasis on extremes was particularly evident in the primary season. As candidates we appealed to a minority of minorities. In Iowa, 85 percent of the Democrats didn't vote. And studying the less than 15 percent who participated, it was either those interested in the domestic content bill, those interested in the nuclear freeze, those interested only in arms control, or agriculture or education. So the candidates addressed these issues in the extreme. It came down to who endorsed the nuclear freeze proposal first, who was more committed to teachers, who really was for arms control and who was wavering. A military build-down proposal became a buildup; and if one candidate was elected, America's youth would be sent to be killed in Latin America. If the other was elected, his inexperience would blow up the world.

Our task is not to reconcile Hart, Jackson and the Mondale forces. The task is to reconcile the Democratic Party with a majority of Americans. There is a majority out there. It's not armbands and alphabet groups. It's individuals and families. America's majority has been searching for a generation now for balance. Each election they are told there will be balance in the economy and in defense. But all they get is a swing from one extreme to the other.

We have to do something. We must do it because it's right. If we are going to win in November, we Democrats must make clear what that something is. For given the choice between Reagan's extreme of no-government and the Democrats' extreme of nothing but govenment, Reagan will prevail again.

This election is not about domestic content laws or moving our embassy in Israel. It's not about who voted for the Chrysler loan or what the latest Federal Election Commission ruling prohibits or allows. It is, or ought to be, about great and fundamental decisions facing America at a crossroads of its existence.

Difficult days, some of the most difficult in our nation's history, lie ahead. There is no quick fix, no magical set of new ideas, no cluster of all-powerful interest groups. There is just work and discipline and sacrifice. The people of this land, I am convinced, understand that. They will do whatever needs to be done—and more—if we as a party and then as a government work and discipline and sacrifice.

Ronald Reagan doesn't believe in government. He never has and he never will. If Lincoln's government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from this earth, then it will be because of the Democratic Party. Here is our challenge; here is our opportunity.

PAY EQUITY: FEDERAL GOVERNMENT NEEDS TO TAKE ACTION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, on June 28, the House of Representatives took a major step forward in the long overdue effort to eliminate wage-setting practices that discriminate against women in the workforce. The House approved, by an overwhelming vote of 413 to 6, H.R. 5680, the proposed Federal Pay Equity and Management Improvement Act of 1984. Title I of that legislation contains provisions requiring a review of the Federal wage-classification system for the purpose of identifying discriminatory wage-setting practices and proposing ways to eliminate such practices.

I was particularly delighted to see the House action on title I of H.R. 5680 since the provisions relating to the review of the Federal wage classification system in that title are very similar to the provisions of the legislation, S. 1900, the proposed Pay Equity Act of 1983, which I introduced in the Senate on September 28, 1983. S. 1900 was the first legislation dealing with the issue of pay equity, or comparable pay as it is sometimes called, introduced in either the House or the Senate.

Both S. 1900 and H.R. 5680, which was introduced on May 17, 1984, would require an examination of the Federal wage-classification system for the purpose of determining whether the rates of pay in positions which are held predominantly by female employees are lower than the rates of pay for positions held predominantly by male employees, although the work performed as to each position involves comparable duties, responsibilities, and qualification requirements and is performed under comparable working conditions. Both measures also would require the identification of appropriate measures for eliminating such discriminatory practices, including proposals for the development of equitable job evaluation techniques which provide an objective method of determining the comparative value of different jobs utilizing a system which rates numerically the basic features and requirements of a particular job, including such factors as education, training, skills, experience, effort, responsibility, and working conditions.

The House-passed bill also contains an explicit provision excluding remedies which would result in a reduction in the wages paid for any position. This provision is similar in intent to that contained in the Federal Equal Pay Act which also prohibits reduction in pay as a remedy for violation of that act.

Because of the substantial concerns about the ability or willingness of any agency under this administration to fulfill adequately the congressional mandate, the House bill was amended on the floor to provide that the mandated review be done by an independent consultant, rather than by the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] as the reported bill would have required. S. 1900 would require the study of the OPM system be done by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC]. Given the track record of this administration with respect to all equal employment concerns, I think the judgment of the House to require that an outside consultant be selected to perform the work is fully justified. The House-bill also contains provisions to establish a Pay Equity Study Council, which would include representatives from various employee organizations. This Council would make recommendations to OPM for the selection of the consultant and would assist in the design and methodology used in conducting the study.

Mr. President, I fully support the provisions of H.R. 5680 as they have modified and perfected the approach originally proposed in S. 1900 and strongly urge that the Senate conferees accept the House-passed provisions. I am writing to the Senate conferees to urge this result.

PAY EQUITY ISSUE

At the time I introduced S. 1900, I discussed in great detail the importance of the Federal Government assuming a leadership role in combatting what is one of the most serious problems facing women in the workforce seeking to attain economic equity and security. That statement appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S. 13095 on September 28, 1983. I do not intend to reiterate that entire discussion here. Briefly, the concept of pay equity or comparable pay for work of comparable worth stands for the relatively simple notion that the wages a worker earns should be based upon the value of the work performed, not the sex of the employees. Unfortunately, it is widely recognized that the wages paid in jobs and occupational fields dominated by female workers are lower than the wages paid in those jobs and occupational fields dominated by male workers that require comparable education, skills, training, effort, responsibilities, and working conditions.

It is generally agreed that the practice of paying lower wages in jobs and occupational fields dominated by female workers is the major factor contributing to the enormous gap between the average earnings of female workers and the average earnings of male workers. Despite slight improvements in the last statistics reported by the Department of Labor, the gap between the average earnings of male and female workers is greater today than it was three decades ago. In the 1950's, full-time female workers earned 64 cents on the average for every dollar earned by a full-time male worker. Today, they earn about 62 cents of the average for every dollar earned by males. The gap for minority women is even wider: The ratio is about 59 percent for black women and 55 percent for Hispanic women as compared to the earnings of white males.

Mr. President, the wage gap between male and female workers has been closely and repeatedly studied by researchers. Variables such as attachment to the workforce, level of experience, education, job commitment, and similar factors have been examined in various studies. These studies have attempted to explain the difference in earnings between male and female workers, but they have generally been able to account for less than one-fourth and never more than one-half of the earnings differentials on the basis of different labor force participation patterns of male and female workers. Virtually every research study has concluded that there remains a large gap which can be explained only by the existence of discriminatory employment practices.

FEDERAL LEADERSHIP NEEDED

Mr. President, the current administration has expressed its strong opposition to the pay equity study legislation. However, public officials at the State and local level have already begun an impressive effort to develop programs of self-evaluation and corrective action with respect to pay inequities. It is reported that over 20 States have already taken the initiative and begun efforts to examine their wage classification systems in order to uncover any sex-based bias. A number of private employers and local governmental entities have begun similar efforts. There is simply no excuse for continued inaction at the Federal level.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I strongly hope that the Senate conferees will accept the House-passed provisions. I also want to congratulate the House sponsors of title I, particularly Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR, the chief sponsor, for their success in moving this important initiative through the House of Representatives. It is now time for the Senate to respond appropriately.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, earlier I had a special order for 15 minutes. I was unable to be here because I was at a hearing. I would appreciate it if I could be given the opportunity to speak for 15 minutes on a subject related to what I was going to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE TRILLION-DOLLAR COST OF THE NUCLEAR STAR WARS PROGRAM

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this is the second in a series of speeches I am giving in response to Gen. Daniel Graham's protest against my opposition to the administration's antimissile program. In this speech I will respond to General Graham's contention that the antimissile program would not be excessively costly. First, here is the General's response to the contention that "It would be enormously costly."

I ask unanimous consent that the section of General Graham's argument on the cost of the antimissile or strategic defense initiative be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2. IT WOULD BE ENORMOUSLY EXPENSIVE

Answer. This is really part and parcel of the "can't be done" argument. Once again a perfect or almost perfect system is postulated, and once again it is possible to speculate about enormous costs to achieve it.

The arguments about costs of the simpler, less-than-perfect systems such as High Frontier are manageable because we can ascertain what the component pieces of the system would cost from the companies that would make them and add them up. For instance, we know that a High Frontier-type satellite would cost about $36 million including its transportation to space. (That is about one-tenth the cost of one MX missile deployed in Jimmy Carter's "Racetrack" system.) Thus we can state with conviction that the High Frontier defenses can be had for less than $5 billion per year expended over the next 10 years.

That is about 2.5% of the current DOD budget and should be offset by cancelling expensive programs no longer needed when strategic defenses are in place.

Perhaps the most telling argument about costs is this: Even if High Frontier cost $100 billion, it would, if deterrence ever failed, save the lives of 100 million Americans and we are surely worth $1,000 a head!"

Mr. PROXMIRE. From somewhere out of the blue, without giving one line of documentation or authority, General Graham tells us that an antimissile satellite can be built and deployed in space for $36 million. Leaping from that figure again with no documentation or data he asserts "with conviction" that a full antimissile system can be in place for an expenditure of "less than $5 billion per year over the next 10 years." That adds up to $50 billion. Mr. President, General Graham could have stated just as convincingly that the production and deployment of the antimissile system could, in total, have cost $2 billion, or $10 billion, or $1 trillion, or some multiple of a trillion. The fact is that General Graham has no more idea what such a system would cost than my 6-year-old grandson. This is not to demean General Graham. He is a retired lieutenant general with a fine record, but he has plucked his figures right out of the blue. The man in the Defense Department who is in the best position to know the cost of a nationwide antimissile defense is Under Secretary DeLauer. DeLauer is in charge of research and development and has been sent by Secretary of Defense Weinberger to testify before the Congress as the Defense Department's leading expert on this program and the estimated cost of the program.

Mr. President, the Defense Department wants this program. They are proponents of the program. Would they send their outstanding expert on the program up to the Hill to testify that the program would cost an immense amount of money if they did not believe that it would cost at least as much as they estimate? You do not have to be in the Senate for 27 years—and on the Appropriations Committee and the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee for almost all of that time as I have been—to understand that the Defense Department never, I repeat never, ever overestimates the cost of a program that they favor. Whether it is the C5A, the Trident submarine, an aircraft carrier, you name it, they will come in with a cost far below what we end up paying for it.

So what estimate did Under Secretary of Defense make for the cost of this antimissile program? Just listen. He testified: "When the time comes that you deploy any one of these technologies, you'll be staggered by the cost they will involve." DeLauer further estimated that the antimissile program could cost what we are now spending on nuclear forces every year. That translates into $45 billion a year for 10 years or nearly half a trillion dollars. To be fair to Secretary DeLauer, he resisted strenuously making any hard estimates. The Defense Department has argued that they will not be able to make any serious estimates of cost until well after the Congress has appropriated $25 billion for research and development alone over the next 5 years—not production, not deployment, but simply research and development will have to continue until 1992 with at least $50 billion for research and development on the program alone before we begin any production or deployment program and before we begin to get any nearly reliable estimates of the cost of the program in place. Until then, we will not know what the program will cost, we guess. But this Senator, who has closely observed military spending programs for more than a quarter century, would be astonished if the antimissile program would come under a trillion dollars.

Now Mr. President, this may shock some people, but this Senator, who has devoted much of his time in this body to fighting costly military programs, could and would enthusiastically vote for this program if there were any kind of real chance that it would achieve its objective. If there were any credible testimony that a defensive antimissile system would have any real chance to stay ahead of the dynamic technology of an offensive system or even the sheer numbers that the Soviets could build in offensive missiles, then I would vote to buy it. But what does the record show? In testimony before our Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, I have heard Defense Department officials concede that the system could be overwhelmed at will by the Soviets if they simply multiplied their offensive missiles.

These military experts have told us that this could be done at a far lower cost to the Soviets than out cost in building the antimissile defense. What answer do they have to this? It has been suggested by former President Nixon that we could "give the Soviet Union our immensely expensive antimissile technology" as the quid pro quo for their agreeing to an arms control treaty limiting offensive missiles on both sides. Of course, at this point all those who do not believe in arms control get off the train, joined by the considerable numbers who could not bear to spend $50 billion or so on military security research and development and then turn the results over to the Soviet Union.

What is left? Arms controllers. But arms controllers would then ask the very logical question: Why go through this fabulously expensive antimissile routine? Why not simply negotiate an offensive missile reduction agreement with the Soviet Union? We could get precisely the same result without spending a trillion dollars.

General Graham argues for the antimissile system, contending that by spending $100 billion we could save 100 million American lives at a cost of $1,000 per person. The general's saving depends upon an arms control agreement as well as spending $1 trillion—he says $100 billion—for the defensive arms buildup. Why not simply try arms control? We save lives. We also save a trillion dollars.

STATE DEPARTMENT: "NO ARMENIAN GENOCIDE"

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am very disappointed with the U.S. Department of State, which recently made public its opposition to congressional resolutions on the Armenian genocide and refrained from referring to the virtual annihilation of 1½ million Armenian people in 1915 as genocide.

On June 30, Assistant Secretary of State for Europe and Canadian Affairs Richard Burt testified in front of the House Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East. He cited three reasons for the administration's opposition to House Resolution 171, which affirms U.S. policy on the Armenian genocide, and House Joint Resolution 247, which, as amended, designates April 24, 1985, as a National Day of Man's Inhumanity to Man, a National Day of Remembrance. This day coincides with the 70th anniversary of the Armenian genocide in 1915.

The first reason is that the State Department "sees no value in characterizing the events of 1915." The Assistant Secretary referred to the Armenian genocide three times not as genocide, but as "the events of 1915."

The second reason is that, according to the State Department, the congressional resolutions would have "adverse implications on U.S. relations with Turkey."

According to the Assistant Secretary, "The Turkish Government views demands by Armenian groups for reparations and even territory to some kind of recompense for the events of 1915 as threatening the integrity of the Turkish State."

Subcommittee Chairman LEE HAMILTON disagrees with the State Department's claims, and observes that the resolutions "do not include anything about compensation to the victim."

The Assistant Secretary's third reason for opposition is that passage of the resolutions would promote terrorism. He maintained terrorist groups "could use such resolutions to argue that their campaigns are somehow paying off; that there is a heightened sensitivity and concern about the Armenian issue."

HAMILTON pointed out that the supporters of the congressional resolutions, and most in the Armenian community, are not terrorists.

Many label the Armenian genocide as the "forgotten genocide" of the 20th century. The tragic event is little known and seldom recognized.

In this age of mass communications, it is difficult to understand how the world could have taken so little notice of a crime of this enormity.

It is even more unfortunate that such ignorance continues to this day. The documentation of the Armenian genocide is clear and irrefutable. It is an historical fact, one which we cannot overlook for diplomatic expediency.

Mr. President, in light of the State Department's recent statements, it is more important than ever that the Senate ratify the Genocide Convention.

Ratification of this treaty would be the best reminder we could give to the State Department and the highest tribute we could give to the memory of the Armenian martyrs. The Genocide Convention would affirm our commitment to the right of all national, ethnic, racial, and religious groups to live free from fear of destruction. It would firmly establish in international law the principle that criminals who attempt such crimes will be severely punished.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in sending a clear message to the State Department by ratifying the Genocide Convention.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for morning business has expired.

COLLECTION OF FEDERAL DEBTS BY PRIVATE CONTRACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 1668, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1668) to amend Chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, to authorize contracts retaining private counsel to furnish collection services in the case of indebtedness owed the United States.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Governmental Affairs with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subsection (b) of section 3718 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or (e)" after "subsection (a)".

(b) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Attorney General may make contracts retaining private counsel to furnish collection services, including representation in negotiation, compromise, settlement, and litigation, in the case of any claim of indebtedness owed the United States and referred to the private counsel under paragraph (2) of this subsection. Each such contract shall include such terms and conditions as the Attorney General considers necessary and appropriate, including a provision specifying the amount of the fee to be paid to the private counsel under such contract or the method for calculating such fee.

"(2) The head of an executive or legislative agency may refer to a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection claims of indebtedness owed the United States arising out of activities of such agency. A referral under the preceding sentence may be made directly from the executive or legislative agency or from a collection agency which is under contract with the executive or legislative agency to provide collection services.

"(3) Notwithstanding sections 516, 518(b), 519, and 547(2) of title 28, United States Code, a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) may represent the United States in litigation in connection with collection services furnished pursuant to a contract entered into under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) A contract under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include—

"(A) a provision permitting the Attorney General to terminate such contract if he finds that termination of such contract is in the public interest;

"(B) a provision permitting the head of any executive or legislative agency which refers a claim under such contract to resolve a dispute regarding such claim, to compromise such claim, or to end a collection action on such claim; and

"(C) a provision requiring the private counsel to transmit monthly to the Attorney General and the head of the executive or legislative agency referring a claim under such contract a report on the services relating to such claim rendered under such contract during the month and the progress made during such month in collecting such claim under such contract.

"(5) Notwithstanding the fourth sentence of section 803(6) of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692a(6)), a private counsel performing collection services pursuant to a contract made under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be considered a debt collector for the purposes of such Act.

"(6) The Attorney General shall transmit to the Congress an annual report on the activities of the Department of Justice to recover indebtedness owed the United States and referred to the Department of Justice for collection. Each such report shall include a list of all uncollected indebtedness referred to the Department of Justice for collection, shall separately specify any uncollected indebtedness which was covered by a contract terminated by the Attorney General under paragraph (4)(A) of the subsection, and shall describe the progress made by the Department of Justice in collecting the indebtedness during the period covered by the report.".

SEC. 2. Not later than sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report on the actions taken under section 3718(e) of title 31, United States Code (as added by subsection (b) of the first section of this Act).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be authorized to control the time for this side of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time agreement has been unanimously agreed to. The Senator from New York controls the time.

AMENDMENT NO. 3395

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, pursuant to the order, I withdraw the reported committee substitute and send an amendment to the desk in the nature of a substitute to S. 1668 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] proposes an amendment numbered 3395.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 3718 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (d);

(2) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively;

(3) in subsection (d), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by inserting "or (b)" after "subsection (a)";

(4) in subsection (e), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by striking out "(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(d)"; and

(5) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Attorney General may make contracts retaining private counsel to furnish legal services, including representation in negotiation, compromise, settlement, and litigation, in the case of any claim of indebtedness owed the United States. Each such contract shall include such terms and conditions as the Attorney General considers necessary and appropriate, including a provision specifying the amount of the fee to be paid to the private counsel under such contract or the method for calculating that fee.

"(2) The head of an executive or legislative agency may refer to a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection claims of indebtedness owed the United States arising out of activities of that agency.

"(3) Notwithstanding sections 516, 518(b), 519, and 547 (2) of title 28, a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection may represent the United States in litigation in connection with legal services furnished pursuant to the contract entered into with that counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) A contract made with a private counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include—

"(A) a provision permitting the Attorney General to terminate the contract if the Attorney General finds that termination of the contract is in the public interest;

"(B) a provision permitting the Attorney General to have any claim referred under the contract returned to the Attorney General if the Attorney General finds such action to be in the public interest;

"(C) a provision permitting the head of any executive or legislative agency which refers a claim under the contract to resolve a dispute regarding the claim, to compromise the claim, or to terminate a collection action on the claim; and

"(D) a provision requiring the private counsel to transmit monthly to the Attorney General and the head of the executive or legislative agency referring a claim under the contract a report on the services relating to the claim rendered under the contract during the month and the progress made during the month in collecting the claim under the contract.

"(5) Notwithstanding the fourth sentence of section 803(6) of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692a(6)), a private counsel performing legal services pursuant to a contract made under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be considered a debt collector for the purposes of such Act.

"(c) The Attorney General shall transmit to the Congress an annual report on the activities of the Department of Justice to recover indebtedness owed the United States which was referred to the Department of Justice for collection. Each such report shall include a list, by agency, of the total number and amounts of collected and uncollected claims of indebtedness which were referred to the Department of Justice for collection, shall separately specify any uncollected claim of indebtedness which was covered by a contract (1) which was terminated by the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(A) of this section or (2) under which the claim was returned to the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(B) of this section, and shall describe the progress made by the Department of Justice in collecting uncollected claims of indebtedness during the one-year period covered by the report.".

SEC. 2. Not later than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report on the actions taken under section 3718 (b) of title 31, United States Code (as added by paragraph (5) of the first section of this Act).

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1668, the Federal Debt Recovery Act, introduced on July 21, 1983. This legislation will permit the Justice Department to contract with private law firms for legal services in connection with the recovery of debts owed the Federal Government.

I have a noncontroversial amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to offer to this bill. It has been cleared with the Government Affairs Committee and is designed to match, as closely as possible, legislation currently under consideration by the House of Representatives.

Before I discusss some of the aspects of this measure, I should like to thank my good friend and distinguished colleague, Senator PERCY, who cosponsored this bill with me. He has demonstrated his unwavering commitment to the improvement of the Federal Government's ability to reduce the staggering amount of delinquent debt now owed it.

The fine staff of the Subcommittee on Energy, Nuclear Proliferation, and Government Processes is also to be congratulated for their excellent work, particularly Elaina Newport. Alan Mertz, of Senator PERCY's staff, also made significant contributions to this bill. And Rick Nasti, formerly of my office, and now a regional administrator of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, played a pivotal role in the development of this bill.

Passage of S. 1668 will enable the Federal Government to significantly improve its efforts to collect the enormous amount of delinquent debt now owed the U.S. Treasury. According to the Office of Management and Budget, there are now more than $40 billion in defaulted debts, including $25 billion in defaulted loans, owed the Government.

Under current law, the Justice Department is responsible for litigating most Federal debt collection cases. However, the Justice Department is not adequately staffed or equipped to handle the tremendous volume of cases referred to it by other Federal departments and agencies, including the Departments of Education, Housing, and Urban Development, Agriculture, and the Small Business Administration.

A recent survey conducted by the Education Department of claims referred by it to collection agencies in metropolitan areas revealed that over 26,000 claims now are ripe for litigation by the Justice Department, but Justice lacks the capacity to handle them in a reasonable amount of time. The computer system at Justice is not sufficient to process the huge numbers of outstanding debt collection cases, and recalcitrant debtors know that refusal to repay their loans or other Federal debts is unlikely to result in legal action being brought against them.

Effective debt collection depends on debtors' certainty that a creditor will seek legal remedies in the case of nonpayment. Otherwise, there is little motivation for stubborn debtors to meet their obligations. The Federal Government currently faces a large obstacle to successful debt collection because many debtors, including many of these with the ability to pay, choose not to do so because they believe that no legal remedies will be pursued. Unfortunately, in tens of thousands of cases they are right.

The measure I am submitting today for approval by the Senate is the product of extensive discussion and deliberation with the Justice Department, the House of Representatives, the Department of Education, and many others interested in attacking the colossal problem of uncollected Federal debt. This amendment substitutes language similar to the text of H.R. 5196 for the text of S. 1668.

The House version contains a preferable provision regarding the details to be included in the required annual report to Congress by the Justice Department with respect to cases referred to private counsel. It also includes a provision stating that Justice may recall any claim referred to private counsel if such action is in the public interest. The latter provision is expected to be used when necessary. However, it is intended to be reserved for exceptional, rather than routine, cases. Other changes in the House version are technical or stylistic.

My substitute also changes the term "collection" services to "legal" services each time it appears in S. 1668. This change is agreeable to Congressmen MOODY and HALL, who have provided important leadership on this measure in the House. It is also acceptable to Senator PERCY. It is our intention to clarify that the role of collection agencies in helping to recover debts owed to the Federal Government is not to be replaced by litigation of such claims, except where litigation is necessary.

The substitute amendment will pave the way for more efficient, cost-effective debt collection by the Federal Government. It will also help to restore the good faith and integrity which should be present in successful debtor-creditor relationships.

Finally, Mr. President, with regard to S. 1668, the Committee on Governmental Affairs does not intend that this measure authorizes any additional budget authority for fiscal year 1984 than that already available to the Department of Justice. The committee intends that any fiscal year 1984 costs incurred from the bill will be absorbed from existing funds.

Mr. President, I know my good friend and colleague from Ohio is going after three amendments, to which I have no objection. Indeed, I think it sets the record clear that we intend to see to it that we do not simply give a reward to attorneys and put them to work on debt collection cases but, rather, that we intend to attack this problem prudently. We simply cannot allow people who borrow money from the Federal Government to walk out on their obligations.

The fact is that there is little, if anything, currently being done to collect these moneys. We talk about the deficits of the United States. Yet, we continue to lend money out without making serious efforts to collect delinquent debts. We literally give money away; we say to debtors: "Don't worry about it. No one is going to come after you to collect. If a collection agency calls you, hang up, because there will be no pursuance of legal remedies against you."

What U.S. attorney's office, inundated with substantial and serious Federal criminal and civil cases such as narcotics offenses, fraud, or tax evasion, has the time to pursue a debt collection case involving $1,000 or $2,000 or a student loan? That is why thousands of professionals borrow tens of thousands of dollars from the Federal Government and do not pay back. It was estimated at one time that 5,000 doctors had not paid back their student loans. That makes it possible for critics of the student loan program to say that it is not a loan program, rather it is a giveaway program. Particularly with respect to those who have the financial means to repay, it is shameful that we are simply encouraging them not to pay by our failure to enforce these debts.

Unfortunately, the attitude of the Federal bureaucracy responsible for collecting delinquent debt is rather shocking. The Justice Department has had referred to it many more than 100,000 delinquent cases which are now awaiting litigation; however, Justice cannot even begin to handle these cases. Justice's most recent attitude is one of: "No, we do not need to hire private law firms; we can handle this." They do not want to delegate authority. They would prefer that debtors beat the Government while the statute of limitations runs out; meanwhile, Justice does not have the computer capability or the technical ability to litigate this huge volume of cases. Can we afford to burden down assistant U.S. attorneys with thousands of collection cases that sometimes merely involve small dollar amounts. Should the Justice Department neglect essential tasks like fighting organized crime, narcotics trafficking, and income tax evasion, and apply more of their limited resources to debt collection? I think not.

As a result of the tens of thousands of failures to repay, we now have at least $16 billion of nontax debt owed to the Federal Government and no reasonable effort is being made to collect it. Let's look at the dollar volume of cases referred to the Justice Department by just a few agencies: Agriculture, $5.5 billion; Education, $3.4 billion; Small Business Administration, $2.5 billion; HUD, $1.7 billion. These four agencies are responsible for 85 percent of the delinquent debt owed to the Government. And the story goes on and on. Every year we are talking about more and more delinquent debt cases.

I suggest that this bill provides the Justice Department with ample authority to implement procedures—in terms of collection, in terms of which attorneys are retained, in terms of law firm competition, in terms of reasonable legal compensation—to greatly benefit the taxpayer. The Justice Department then can pursue the kinds of significant Federal cases that we want them to pursue. They will have more opportunity to handle their criminal case backlogs and civil case backlogs. This bill will help to ensure that people do not borrow from the Federal Government with the certainty that they will never be called upon to repay because the U.S. attorneys' offices do not have the capacity and motivation to sue them.

Mr. President, I hope this bill will give us the ability to say to people: "When you borrow from the Government, you have to make a good faith, reasonable effort to repay; and if you don't, we are going to pursue it and collect those moneys, because they are due and owing to the American taxpayer." This is one way to begin to deal with the massive deficit that has taken place.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I wholeheartedly support this substitute amendment to S. 1668, and I commend my colleague, Senator D'AMATO, for his role in sponsoring S. 1668 with me, as well as this amendment. The concept of allowing the Justice Department to contract its debt collection litigation with private counsel in one which I have advocated for some time, and I believe that this amendment represents the best legislative means to accomplish this goal. It is the result of many months of consultation with the House of Representatives, as well as the Justice Department, the Department of Education, the Department of Health and Human Services, and other Federal agencies involved in collecting the tremendous amounts of debt owed the Federal Government. I also commend Congressman MOODY and Congressman HALL for their leadership in the House.

Even as we speak, Mr. President, the Justice Department has tens of thousands of student loan cases and other Federal debts backlogged in U.S. attorneys' offices throughout the country. The Justice Department is simply not equipped to handle this volume. One might even question whether it should be the Justice Department's mandate to go after every small student loan. Certainly, the Department is juggling a variety of priorities, such as prosecution of serious Federal crimes such as narcotics offenses, fraud, income tax evasion, and antitrust violations. No one expects our U.S. attorneys to drop their major drug cases and go after $500 student loans.

At a legislative hearing I chaired last July, the Justice Department indicated their wholehearted support for the legislative authority to contract their debt collection litigation. They have assured me that they intend to use this authority extensively, and I would expect that they do so promptly. When the Debt Collection Act of 1982 was passed, giving the Federal Government authority to contract with private collection agencies, among other provisions, it took the Justice Department and the General Accounting Office a year and a half to promulgate regulations implementing the act. During that year and a half, clearly collectable Federal dollars were lost forever to the statute of limitations. I believe I speak for my colleague, Senator D'AMATO, and my other Senate colleagues, when I say that this type of delay will simply not be tolerated when this amendment becomes law. I expect that regulations to implement this bill will be published within 60 days from the time this amendment is signed into law. I believe this is a practical goal, and I intend to follow through on this point, and to see that this authority is used promptly and extensively.

This amendment will substitute for S. 1668, which was reported favorably and unanimously from the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on June 12 with the full support of the chairman, Senator ROTH. It is very similar to S. 1668, with four minor changes which I would like to briefly mention at this point. These are changes which are based on conversations with Members of the House of Representatives and Federal agencies involved in debt collection. Not only do I believe that these changes will make this bill completely acceptable to the House of Representatives, I believe these changes clarify and improve the legislation.

First, this amendment changes the word "collection" services to "legal" services each time it is used in S. 1668. The reason for this is that it has always been, and still is, our intent that Federal agencies not bypass the cost-effective use of collection agencies in the collection process. Litigation is intended to be a tool of last resort.

Second, this amendment deletes a provision in S. 1668 which gave collection agencies the explicit authority to send claims directly to private counsel. This provision was deleted so that the Federal agencies involved would have the option to decide, when making a contract with a collection agency, whether or not that contract would give the collection agency authority to make direct referrals. Nothing in this bill is intended to preclude the possibility of such a contract being written.

Third, the amendment adds a provision permitting the Attorney General to have any claim under the contract returned to the Attorney General if the Attorney General finds such action to be in the public interest. This provision acknowledges the fact that the Attorney General will continue to be the final authority on litigation of claims owed the Federal Government, but it is our intention that this authority to ask that a case be returned be used sparingly—it is to be the exception rather than the rule. Additionally, it is expected that if the Attorney General asks for a claim to be returned to the Attorney General, the Justice Department will act swiftly on the claim. We certainly do not think it is "in the public interest" for the Justice Department to pull back a case only to have it sit in a backlogged U.S. attorney's office.

A fourth change which this amendment makes is that it adopts the reporting requirement language included in its House counterpart, H.R. 5196. I believe that the House reporting requirement provision is superior to that which is found in S. 1668, and I enthusiastically support this change.

In summary, Mr. President, I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment. In doing so, we will tell the American taxpayer that we are dead serious about collecting the billions of dollars in delinquent debt owed the Federal Government. The real, credible threat of timely litigation is a necessary tool toward that end.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I know that my colleague from Ohio would like to offer some amendments. As I have indicated, I think his amendments clarify this bill and give assurance that this program will be of benefit to our taxpayers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York, a cosponsor, for bringing this measure to the floor.

It is almost amazing that we have taken so long to get to this point in our Nation's history, where the Government is owed billions of dollars—$25 billion in actual loans and $40 billion if you include other obligations—and it is not collected, and we have never authorized the Government to go forward with private counsel in order to collect those funds.

One wonders how this could be, when everybody is talking about balancing the budget and operating more efficiently and doing business as business does business. How could we get to this point with respect to doctors who are making good incomes, lawyers who are making good incomes, farmers who are in a position to repay, and business people who have made SBA loans to keep themselves afloat, and many others—even in HUD—without collections being made? No collections are made because no lawyers are there to bring the suits, and the debtors know that the suits are not going to be brought.

As the Senator from New York has pointed out, you cannot expect the U.S. attorney, who is involved in prosecuting criminal cases or major antitrust cases or matters of that nature, to become involved in collecting $400, or $4,000, or even $40,000, or $400,000.

So this measure goes in the right direction. It is one of the very positive steps in conducting Government as business might conduct it, more efficiently and more effectively.

So I commend the authors of the bill for having introduced it and sponsored it and for bringing it to the floor today.

I will shortly offer three amendments and ask for their immediate consideration. I offer those amendments not to detract from the bill but to make the measure tighter.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 3396, 3397, AND 3398

Mr. METZENBAUM. At this time, Mr. President, I send to the desk three amendments and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes amendments numbered 3396, 3397, and 3398, en bloc.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 3396

On the first page, line 19, after "States.", insert the following: "If the Attorney General makes a contract for legal services to be furnished in any judicial district of the United States under the first sentence, the Attorney General shall use his best efforts to retain, from among attorneys regularly engaged in the private practice of law in such district, more than one private counsel to furnish such legal services in such district.".

AMENDMENT No. 3397

On page 2, line 2, after the period, insert the following: "The amount of the fee payable for legal services furnished under any such contract may not exceed the fee that counsel engaged in the private practice of law in the area or areas where the legal services are furnished typically charge clients for furnishing legal services in the collection of claims of indebtedness, as determined by the Attorney General, considering the amount, age, and nature of the indebtedness and whether the debtor is an individual or a business entity.".

AMENDMENT No. 3398

On page 3, line 6, insert "(1)" after "(C)".

On page 3, line 15, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A)".

On page 3, line 16, strike out "(2)" and isnert in lieu thereof "(B)".

On page 3, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(2)(A) The Comptroller General of the United States shall carry out an annual audit of the actions taken by the Attorney General under subsection (b) of this section during the preceding twelve months. The Comptroller General shall determine the extent to which there is competition among private counsel to obtain contracts awarded under such subsection, the reasonableness of the fees provided in such contracts, and the results of the debt collection efforts of private counsel retained under such contracts.

"(B) After completing each audit under subparagraph (A), the Comptroller General shall transmit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions resulting from the audit.".

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, these amendments are not to do harm to this bill but, rather, to strengthen it, to see that the Government receives full value for its dollar, and that this measure not become known as the lawyers' enrichment bill but, rather, as the taxpayers' benefit bill.

They are designed to prevent potential abuse of the authority granted to the Federal Government to use private attorneys to litigate Government debt cases. The problem is there. It is an enormous problem: $40 billion of defaulted debt to the Federal Government; and of that amount, $25 billion is in the form of defaulted loans.

It is a fact that, for the past 2 years, the Federal Government has been able to use the services of private debt collection agencies, but that has not worked, and they have not been authorized to bring suit. As a consequence, we have hardly made a dent in this mountain of bad debt. If a debtor knows that the collecting agency or the collector can go only so far and then is precluded from going any further, that debtor, who is a deadbeat to begin with, in all likelihood is going to use every tactic available to him or her to keep from paying his or her obligation to the Government. Dunning by the collection agencies will not work with that kind of debtor.

Some of the most egregious cases in this country revolve around doctors, who are making very handsome incomes at the moment, who borrow the money in order to go through medical school and who have become rich in their profession, but who have not seen fit to meet their obligations to the U.S. Government.

They are not alone. There are many others as well. Thousands of debtors have flatly refused to pay the money that they owe to the Federal Government.

The Department of Justice, it is known, does not have the personnel and worse yet does not have the inclination to take a large number of debtors to court.

Let me share with you the statistics because the statistics tell the story. As of August 1982, the Justice Department had on file 65,000 debt cases worth $937 million. But by that date only 7 percent, only 7 percent, $73 million out of the $937 million, had actually been collected; $864 million remained outstanding.

The bill before us will strengthen our ability to collect by permitting the Justice Department to contract with private law firms to litigate some of these debt cases. The Justice Department would simply pay these firms a contingency fee based on the actual money collected.

On the face of it that is a constructive solution, and I support it. I support the thrust, but I believe that the bill falls short in two very important areas.

First, the bill does nothing to insure that the Justice Department will enter into contracts with private law firms on a competitive basis. And second, nothing in the bill prevents private law firms from charging the Justice Department exorbitant contingency fees for the successful litigation of debt cases.

As it is currently written, in other words, this bill could make one or two private law firms very, very, very wealthy and at the expense of the taxpayers of this country.

In other words, if the Attorney General were to see fit under the present bill as it is written to give one law firm all of this business and authorize that law firm to subcontract it out around the country, that would be legal and that would be permissible, and, knowing how politics works, that very well might be probable. I am not saying Republicans or Democrats; I am just saying it might be probable in any kind of an administration.

So I am offering three amendments which I believe will help guard against such abuses. The amendments are simple. They are straightforward. One will encourage competition in this area by requiring the Attorney General to use his or her best efforts to retain more than one private counsel within each geographical area within which a U.S. Attorney's office has jurisdiction. By that we are saying that assume we are talking about New York, where the proponent of the amendment lives, or Cleveland, where I live, the Attorney General would not alone designate one law firm but could designate 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, because there is not any question that there is going to be a sufficient volume of work for many more than one law firm to handle it all in each area.

We are talking about $25 billion in debt. And if the Attorney General finds, that, for example, in Cleveland, where I live, that it is appropriate to go into Toledo, or Youngstown, or Akron, or Canton, and choose separate counsel in those areas, that would be the right thing to do, as I see it.

The idea is to get as many lawyers as are necessary in order to do the job. And let us not kid ourselves there are two reasons to do it.

One is the statute of limitations runs on these obligations day in and day out and if the cases are not brought within a certain period of time the statute of limitations will outlaw them. So time is very much of the essence.

But the second thing is that you are going to get better service because no one law firm can handle a multitude of cases at the same time. It just would become bogged down.

Mr. President, unless this amendment is adopted, we would find total concentration in certain areas of all of the collection business of the U.S. Government. That would be wrong. That would be inappropriate and it would be a disservice to the U.S. Government.

Imagine the political favoritism that would come into play as one well-connected law firm after the next came knocking on the Justice Department's door for this lucrative contract.

Let me say that the law firms have already started to move. There is no secret about it. The law firms are calling and have indicated their interest in connection with this legislation. I do not fault them for that. It is purely legitimate business and I can well understand their wanting to get the business in order that they can go out and earn the fees involved. I am perfectly willing to have them earn the fees provided that the Federal Government profits as a consequence, and that comes to the next point.

According to the Congressional Budget Director, under this bill contingency fees for such legal services could go as high as 45 percent.

Mr. President, I practiced law all of my adult life prior to coming to the Senate, and I tell you that is not the going rate. That should not be the rate. And that is the kind of a rate that I am concerned could result if we do not adopt the amendments that I offer today.

Let me give you an example. The Justice Department currently has $1 billion worth of pending debt cases. Forty-five percent of that is $450 million. That is a hefty sum of money for one, two, three, or six law firms.

So, Mr. President, as I see it the Senate cannot permit this unwarranted and unprecedented giveaway to occur.

So I believe that it is necessary that the Attorney General go out and obtain a sufficient number of attorneys to do the job and not just select some favored few.

My second amendment goes to the question as to the amount of the contingency fees, as to the 45 percent that I previously mentioned, a 45-percent figure which on its face is preposterous, but I do want to point out that we did not make it up. It came from the Congressional Budget Director who indicated that these fees could run from 25 to 45 percent.

It is my view that they should not run in those areas, that that would be far too much and that it would be irresponsible if the Attorney General were to see fit to pay such fees except for the very smallest amounts collected.

Our amendment would require the Attorney General to set limits on contingency fees based on the local prevailing rates which private law firms charge for commercial debt cases.

That makes sense. Let the Government, not private law firms, reap the benefits of an improved collection system.

What we are talking about is an accepted reality in the business community. It is known what law firms charge for collection matters. It is not a figment of someone's imagination. You can find these figures by going to Dun & Bradstreet or going to the Commercial Law League or going to other debt collection agencies or lawyers associations and they are pretty much accepted figures and they are not 25 to 45 percent.

As a matter of fact, the Commercial Law League, I am told, has a figure of 8 percent when there are very large amounts being collected. I am not certain as to the accuracy of that figure but we have been informed to that effect.

As a matter of fact, Dun & Bradstreet is a good source to determine what are typical charges for attorney debt collection services. Their service agreement is what they use in the collection activities that it does on behalf of its commercial subscribers. In other words, Dun & Bradstreet is hiring lawyers for its commercial subscribers.

In addition to specifying the fees for charges of debt collection, the Dun & Bradstreet portfolio states as follows:

> Attorney's charges vary, but as a guideline, the following contingent charges are typical. Twenty percent on collections of $125 to $300, 18 percent of the next $1,700, and 13 percent in excess of $2,000. The minimum charges are $25 on collections of $75 to $125 and 33⅓ percent of the collection of less than $75.

Mr. President, I do not intend, and I know that the author of this legislation does not intend, to stand here on the floor and tell the Attorney General exactly what fees should be paid. But I do think we join in saying to the Attorney General—whether it is the one who is presently in office or some future one—that: "We expect you to conduct the business of government as a business. We expect you to pay lawyers that amount of fees which is the minimum that you can pay getting consistently good, high quality legal services. That is your responsibility."

But I am frank to admit not every Attorney General will accept that responsibility and some Attorneys General may see fit to play some favorites and to pay more than they should be paid.

So my third amendment would insure the soundness of the entire program by requiring the GAO to conduct an annual audit of contracts and fees that the Attorney General lets.

In addition to examining into those fees and reporting back, they are going to indicate whether or not the Attorney General has been responsible in not giving out term contracts. There should be no term contracts given out. When you turn over a certain collection matter to an attorney, that attorney will be judged upon his or her success or failure. And there is no reason to give out a contract for attorney's fees for 6 months, 1 year, 2 years, or 5 years. To do so would be the kind of thing that would not reflect well upon the Attorney General who did it.

(Mr. DANFORTH assumed the chair.)

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, will my colleague yield at this point so I might raise a question?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Yes.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, we have thoroughly discussed his amendments regarding this bill. I will be supportive of the Senator's amendments because I think that they assure the American public that we are interested in seeing that there is collection of these moneys and not the enrichment of lawyers, et cetera. However, lawyers have to be paid, obviously, for their work, and the use of flexible guidelines reflecting typical fees for similar work sets the proper standard.

I agree with my colleague that there are a number of measures to clarify regarding appropriate fees for the kind of cases being undertaken. In the cases involving smaller sums of money, obviously, the percentage should be higher as opposed to cases involving the collection of larger sums where, obviously, the percentage should be lower. Local standards and customs in the industry, et cetera, all govern these.

I support the three amendments because I think they are good. I think that they say to the Justice Department, "You have total control. There are reasonable standards to follow."

One question still concerns me. The question is whether or not we can get the Justice Department to do what they are supposed to do. Every Member of Congress, I believe, understands that there is a crying need to address the problem of delinquent debt owed to the Government and that the Justice Department has neglected to pursue these cases. You simply cannot demand that a U.S. attorney undertake the collection of a debt of $200 or, as the Senator from Ohio has indicated, even $40,000 where there are many, many more pressing matters with which the U.S. attorney is involved. Given the limited resources of the Justice Department, et cetera, they are not equipped for these kinds of matters.

I am wondering if the Senator would consider an amendment or expand his amendment to require the GAO to make a study with respect to how comprehensive, thorough or diligent the Justice Department has been in hiring outside attorneys pursuant to this legislation. I am afraid that we are going to pass this bill and that it will be signed into law and then the Justice Department will fail to implement it by noncommitment. I am concerned that the Justice Department may totally disregard legitimate legislative efforts, and defeat the will of the Congress by refusing to take prompt steps to devise and implement the necessary regulations. It is clearly just a matter of turf that they are reluctant to give up.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I think the author of the bill makes a very good suggestion. I am not certain what the parliamentary posture is, but I am in accord with him. I think what we very well might do is take a moment to have a quorum call and, in the interim, take a look at the pending amendment and see whether or not I can amend it. I certainly have the right to modify it while it is at the desk.

I, therefore, suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The time of the Senator from Ohio has now expired.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in my third amendment there be inserted in line 1 on page 2 after the word "contracts" and the comma the following additional wording: "the diligence and efforts of the Attorney General to retain counsel in accordance with the provisions of this act," comma and then continue on with the language as present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator will please send the modification to the desk.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 3, line 6, insert "(1)" after "(c)".

On page 3, line 15, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A)".

On page 3, line 16, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(B)".

On page 3, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(2)(A) The Comptroller General of the United States shall carry out an annual audit of the actions taken by the Attorney General under subsection (b) of this section during the preceding twelve months. The Comptroller General shall determine the extent to which there is competition among private counsel to obtain contracts awarded under such subsection, the reasonableness of the fees provided in such contracts, the diligence and efforts of the Attorney General to retain counsel in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the results of the debt collection efforts of private counsel retained under such contracts.

"(B) After completing each audit under subparagraph (A), the Comptroller General shall transmit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions resulting from the audit.".

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, my view is, as suggested by the author of the bill, that the Comptroller General should indeed be required to advise the Congress as to the diligence and efforts of the Attorney General in doing that which we are by this legislation directing him or her to do. So I feel with this we make a good bill, a better bill, we make the three amendments that I have offered better amendments, and I appreciate the cooperation of the Senator from New York in connection with this matter. I think this is good legislation. I think it is a good amendment.

At this time, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays in connection with the three amendments, which it is my understanding by unanimous consent has been agreed upon will be voted on en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. D'AMATO addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. D'AMATO. I thank my distinguished colleague from Ohio for amendments which I believe tightens this bill and make it more effective while setting out clearly the Congressional intent. Our intent today is to undertake the proper collection of those funds which are due and owing to the American taxpayer, and to clearly state for the record that when someone borrows from the Government that they, in fact, are borrowing and must repay those funds. People expect loans to be repaid, and indeed the Government is not going to shirk its responsibility.

In addition, Senator PERCY, I understand, is on his way to the floor to offer his comments. My distinguished colleague from Illinois has labored for 2 years in attempting to bring about a consensus on this issue. In hearing after hearing, he has worked diligently to get the Justice Department, the Education Department, and others to coordinate their efforts on debt collection. We have the Debt Collection Act of 1982, and today we reach the point where I think we will finally put some teeth in our efforts to collect moneys due and owing. I commend Senator, PERCY for his longstanding interest and efforts to improve Federal debt collection.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I would like to speak in support of the amendments offered by the Senator from Ohio. As he does, I want to make sure the taxpayers get a fair bargain out of this arrangement. But there should be no doubt in anyone's mind that delinquent debts collected by private litigators are "found money" for the taxpayers. As we decide what a reasonable fee may be, we must all keep in mind that—if the fee is large enough to provide an incentive for collection—the taxpayer can only come out ahead.

I have no objection to the conclusion of the Dun & Bradstreet guidelines for the record, but I would like to state very clearly for the benefit of those who may someday implement this act that I consider these guidelines to err on the modest side in delineating fees. I suspect that Dun & Bradstreet is referring to commercial accounts, for which fees of this size may be reasonable, and I also suspect that the Dun & Bradstreet figures do not include percentages for processing and handling which are typical in the private sector. For delinquent Federal loans, many of which are quite old and are owed by individuals of diverse circumstances, fees of this size may be too small to provide an incentive for collection.

I am sure the Senator from Ohio would agree with me that the fees should be large enough to get the job done, but no larger. Therefore, I strongly support the language in his amendment which specifies that those who are establishing "typical charges" consider the amount, age, and nature of the indebtedness, as well as the private practice in the area. It may be that, based on these criteria, the fees specified in the Dun & Bradstreet guidelines will not be typical, and will be too small to encourage collection.

With that caveat, I have no objection to the adoption of those amendments and the inclusion of the Dun & Bradstreet guidelines in the RECORD.

May I also say that I recall the hearings that the distinguished Senator from New York and I conducted on this very issue. He was in the forefront, pointing out the absolute necessity of going out and getting private sector help in collecting these accounts.

I began work on debt collection years ago, and I was thrilled when President Reagan and David Stockman saw the great virtue in this. I sat there with the President and with a board of directors meeting of the American Medical Association to point out the disgraceful situation that existed when doctors, who have had their entire medical expenses paid—in some cases $70,000 grants—refused to serve in an impacted area where they needed doctors even though they had agreed to do so when accepting the grant. I held hearings where Harvard Medical School testified regarding the high default rate among its graduates, and they have since shown tremendous improvement.

Since the enactment of the debt collection legislation using outside collectors, certainly we have done a much better job. But the number of cases in the Justice Department has risen substantially. Going to outside litigators to get that caseload down means that as soon as we collect that money we start getting interest on it.

Already the Comptroller General of the United States has reported that we have about $5 billion of brandnew money under this legislation that never would have been paid, and we are getting interest on that money today. The sooner we can get this money in, the better. So this outside assistance and help will be invaluable in bringing to the Treasury the funds that are needed.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I have just been advised by legislative counsel that in the modification that I sent to the desk I used the term "this act." I should have said "this section." I therefore ask unanimous consent that that change made in the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as further modified, is as follows:

On page 3, line 6, insert "(1)" after "(c)".

On page 3, line 15, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A)".

On page 3, line 16, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(B)".

On page 3, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(2)(A) The Comptroller General of the United States shall carry out an annual audit of the actions taken by the Attorney General under subsection (b) of this section during the preceding twelve months. The Comptroller General shall determine the extent to which there is competition among private counsel to obtain contracts awarded under such subsection, the reasonableness of the fees provided in such contracts, the diligence and efforts of the Attorney General to retain counsel in accordance with the provisions of this section, and the results of the debt collection efforts of private counsel retained under such contracts.

"(B) After completing each audit under subparagraph (A), the Comptroller General shall transmit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions resulting from the audit.".

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator METZENBAUM, for offering these amendments. The Senator from Ohio has authored three perfecting amendments which have been cleared by both the majority and the minority members of the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Senator METZENBAUM's proposals will help ensure that this measure is implemented in a fair and competitive manner and will help protect the public interest by keeping legal fees paid to firms with whom the Justice Department has signed contracts, at reasonable levels. I commend the Senator for his input on this issue.

I would also like to note that it is essential that attorney fees be kept reasonable under this legislation. I firmly believe that the prevailing industry standard in the relevant geographic area should establish proper and fair guidelines. Legal fees should reflect typical fees for the same type of work in various parts of this country.

Attorney fee schedules, such as those published by Dun & Bradstreet, while relevant for some commercial legal services, should not be used as an absolute measuring stick for services rendered under this bill. Some flexibility in negotiating fee arrangements with law firms will certainly be desired by the Justice Department to enable them to hire law firms to litigate the more difficult or ancient debt collection cases and, therefore, must be allowed. With the understanding that arbitrary fee schedules, such as that prepared by Dun & Bradstreet, are not explicitly incorporated in this legislation, I wholeheartedly support my distinguished colleague's amendments to my perfecting amendment to S. 1668 and urge their adoption.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I believe it is time for us to proceed to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate will now vote on three Metzenbaum amendments en bloc. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

So amendments Nos. 3396, 3397, and 3398, as modified, were agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to thank my able staff assistant Ellen Bloom for all of her assistance in connection with this measure. She helped to make this bill a far better one.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1668, a bill which will increase the ability of the U.S. Government to collect the overwhelming debt that it is owed. At this time, over $18 billion of debt owed this country is outstanding. This is an outrage. And I applaud this bill which will provide one more tool in the fight to collect this debt.

Beginning in February 1981, I introduced legislation calling for the collection of $1.75 billion of this debt. In addition, I have repeatedly offered amendments to reduce the deficit by means of debt collection. Most recently my amendment to collect an additional $2.1 billion of debt was overwhelmingly approved as a part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

This bill will provide an additional tool for the collection of this mountain of debt. Clearly the branches of the Government currently charged with collecting much of the debt do not have the resources to do so. The Justice Department is hard pressed to put a priority on debt collection when it must battle the ever growing drug trade. We cannot ask the Attorney General to give precedence to pursing a $500 or $5,000 unpaid debt when he could be better using his time to prosecute criminals.

Let me close in commending the sponsors of this bill for bringing the bill to the floor. Additionally, I would like to commend Senator METZENBAUM's effort to tighten the provisions of this bill and to make sure that the Government is getting the best bang for its buck. Senator METZENBAUM has taken the time to closely review this legislation and more importantly made the effort to amend the language to make a good bill a better bill.

So the bill (S. 1668), as amended, was passed, as follows:

S. 1668

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3718 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (d);

(2) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively;

(3) in subsection (d), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by inserting "or (b)" after "subsection (a)";

(4) in subsection (e), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by striking out "(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(d)"; and

(5) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Attorney General may make contracts retaining private counsel to furnish legal services, including representation in negotiation, compromise, settlement, and litigation, in the case of any claim of indebtedness owned the United States. If the Attorney General makes a contract for legal services to be furnished in any judicial district of the United States under the first sentence, the Attorney General shall use his best efforts to retain, from among attorneys regularly engaged in the private practice of law in such district, more than one private counsel to furnish such legal services in such district. Each such contract shall include such terms and conditions as the Attorney General considers necessary and appropriate, including a provision specifying the amount of the fee to be paid to the private counsel under such contract of the method for calculating that fee. The amount of the fee payable for legal services furnished under any such contract may not exceed the fee that counsel engaged in the private practice of law in the area or areas where the legal services are furnished typically charge clients for furnishing legal services in the collection of claims of indebtedness, as determined by the Attorney General, considering the amount, age, and nature of the indebtedness and whether the debtor is an individual or a business entity.

"(2) The head of an executive or legislative agency may refer to a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection claims of indebtedness owed the United States arising out of activities of that agency.

"(3) Notwithstanding sections 516, 518(b) 519, and 547(2) of title 28, a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection may represent the United States in litigation in connection with legal services furnished pursuant to the contract entered into with that counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) A contract made with a private counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include—

"(A) a provision permitting the Attorney General to terminate the contract if the Attorney General finds that termination of the contract is in the public interest;

"(B) a provision permitting the Attorney General to have any claim referred under the contract returned to the Attorney General if the Attorney General finds such action to be in the public interest;

"(C) a provision permitting the head of any executive or legislative agency which refers a claim under the contract to resolve a dispute regarding the claim, to compromise the claim, or to terminate a collection action on the claim; and

"(D) a provision requiring the private counsel to transmit monthly to the Attorney General and the head of the executive or legislative agency referring a claim under the contract a report on the services relating to the claim rendered under the contract during the month and the progress made during the month in collecting the claim under the contract.

"(5) Notwithstanding the fourth sentence of section 803 (6) of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692a(6)), a private counsel performing legal services pursuant to a contract made under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be considered a debt collector for the purposes of such Act.

"(c)(1) The Attorney General shall transmit to the Congress an annual report on the activities of the Department of Justice to recover idebtedness owed the United States which was referred to the Department of Justice for collection. Each such report shall include a list, by agency, of the total number and amounts of collected and uncollected claims of indebtedness which were referred to the Department of Justice for collection, shall separately specify any uncollected claim of indebtedness which was covered by a contract (A) which was terminated by the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(A) of this section or (B) under which the claim was returned to the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(B) of this section, and shall describe the progress made by the Department of Justice in collecting uncollected claims of indebtedness during the one-year period covered by the report.

"(2)(A) The Comptroller General of the United States shall carry out an annual audit of the actions taken by the Attorney General under subsection (b) of this section during the preceding twelve months. The Comptroller General shall determine the extent to which there is competition among private counsel to obtain contracts awarded under such subsection, the reasonableness of the fees provided in such contracts, the diligence and efforts of the Attorney General to retain counsel in accordance with the provisions of this section, and the results of the debt collection efforts of private counsel retained under such contracts.

"(B) After completing each audit under subparagraph (A), the Comptroller General shall transmit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions resulting from the audit.".

SEC. 2. Not later than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report on the actions taken under section 3718(b) of title 31, United States Code (as added by paragraph (5) of the first section of this Act).

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the Treasury appropriations bill, H.R. 5798, which the clerk will state by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office to the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, third reading; vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments?

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, when we were ready to leave last night, the Senator from Florida had an amendment which he was ready to propose. I was told at that time that there would not be time to take it up, and that I would be scheduled sometime today.

I do not know where the ranking Democrat is, and usually it is appropriate before a bill moves too far to allow the ranking minority Member to be on the floor to have something to say. I came over because I want to be timely. It looks like it is a nice time to be timely. I am here. I am getting my materials.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. CHAFEE]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in a very short moment I hope to offer an amendment to the bill now before us having to do with the appointment by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of the two public members to the Board of Trustees of the Social Security Administration that Congress provided for early in 1983.

In April 1983, the Social Security Reform Act was passed which was the first major restructuring of the system in a very long while. It put the long-term finances of the Social Security Administration in adequate condition such that Robert J. Myers, for a long while the Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration, and the chief adviser under President Reagan of the President's Commission on Social Security Reform, recently attested in a very formal address that the 75-year prospects for the retirement system funds indicate that they are in excellent condition and should achieve all of the objectives that had been hoped for and that we hopefully have provided for in the 1983 legislation. As we look at the record of the present Congress, it will be clear to us that surely among the very most important things we have done in this Congress was to restructure the finances of the Social Security program such that the actuaries in their most recent annual report find the situation quite satisfactory in all save the most pessimistic of the forecasts.

We recognize that we have a fairly narrow margin in the trust funds—a situation that will continue for the remainder of this decade. Then the trust funds go very rapidly into a considerable surplus. It may be that the only real prospect for dealing with the Federal deficit is the surplus in the retirement funds of the 1990's, and it takes hold with extraordinary rapidity and, if memory serves, the fund accumulates by the year 2025 a reserve of $13 trillion. This $13 trillion will be a lesser sum than now due to inflation, but it will be a very considerable sum in either event.

This longrun surplus is something we have anticipated for a long while. It is built into the demography of the system, assuming that our economy continues at a reasonable rate of growth and productivity.

In any event, the change in the condition of the funds has been such that even though Mr. Stockman of the Office of Management and Budget 3 years ago was predicting the largest bankruptcy in history for the first of October 1983, and even though as recently as this spring, the Secretary of the Treasury described the funds as somehow being inadequate and indicated that some major changes would have to be made in the next 4 years if the administration is reelected, nonetheless in his press conference yesterday, the President stated a happily new found confidence in the security of these funds, in the solvency of these funds. He has every right to take a full measure of credit; the bill was signed by him. It was negotiated with his staff in the White House—Mr. Baker, Mr. Darman, Mr. Stockman—in a series of meetings at Blair House in which the distinguished Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Finance Committee, and I were present, along with Members of the House of Representatives. The President said yesterday, it will be recalled, that he would ask Congress to adjust the benefits by whatever change there has been in the price index even if the Consumer Price Index does not exceed the 3-percent cutoff point for which the reform measures of April last year provide. Members will recall that the provision states that unless the CPI grows by more than 3 percent in the relevant period there will be no adjustment in Social Security payments.

Now, the simple idea was that if we wanted the payments, insurance payments, under Social Security to be responsive to price changes, we felt that in the interest of preserving the solvency of the fund, it was desirable that we not respond to every change that takes place, when the price changes were basically minimal.

The President said yesterday in his press conference that should the price level change not be sufficient to trigger the change in benefit payments, he would ask the Congress, if he has been reelected, to make the change to adjust the benefits by whatever change there has in fact been in the price index.

Now that surely is a measure of confidence by the President in the condition of these funds which certainly will reassure this body and Americans generally. I remind my colleagues of the extraordinary finding of a series of commissions and studies in the late 1970's that a majority of the American people did not think they were going to receive their Social Security benefits. This was a skewed majority. Persons very young did not think so. As the persons got older, and perhaps had very little option otherwise, they began to believe the system would in fact provide benefits for them, which invariably and without exception it has done for almost one-half century.

There is something the matter in a society where something as basic as the social insurance system is not trusted by a majority of the population. And part may be ascribed, without rancor, I say at this some distance from the events, to the constant harping on the insolvency and the impending bankruptcy and the inadequate return and the private initiatives which would be superior, that came from a certain part of the political spectrum which I do not have to identify here.

In July 1981, the President spoke on Social Security and taxes in a nationwide address, and it fell to me to respond. I had originally been given to understand the address would be on the subject of Social Security and so addressed myself principally to the question of Social Security and made the assertion, which was not mine but rather the collective judgment of persons who had been involved with the system for a very long time that, yes, there was a very short-term problem, the result of a period which was unprecedented in economic history during which prices had risen faster than wages. For about a 4-year period at the end of the 1970's we had this experience.

The result very simply was that benefits being tied to prices grew faster than the revenues in the system which were tied to wages. To be more explicit, the outlays which were being tied to prices grew faster than the income of the system. Indeed there was an imbalance and it had to be set right by setting the economy right. And that has happened, in the sense that wages again are rising faster than prices, which has been the historic experience in the country for two centuries. But even so, we built mechanisms into the payment systems for Social Security which ensured that this situation would not happen again, and minimized the adjustments for small price increases such as are occurring in this year, which is a year of near deflation, at least in some sectors of the economy.

Mr. President, I said that if we can make the few changes necessary to address the short-term problems, and the President will accept them, he will be entitled to his full share of credit for those changes made. In effect, I think the President accepted that credit at his news conference yesterday. The President's remarks are a happy, though somewhat belated, expression of confidence in the solvency of the Social Security funds. In effect, he has said the funds are strong enough to provide benefit increases beyond those required by law. Perhaps now, the constant harping we have heard about the failings and possible demise of the Social Security retirement system is at an end.

To repeat, we provided that under 3 percent there would be no change simply because we regarded the change as de minimis. The President is now sufficiently comfortable with the solvency of the fund that regardless of whether the CPI is below 3 percent, benefits will be adjusted to take account of any change.

I think we can welcome that. I suggest that we welcome the President to our view that a good bill was passed.

He thought it was a good bill, and said so when he signed it. There is no disagreement among us on that score. However, Mr. President, the members of his administration continue to need to be persuaded. The President is of the view that we have a solvent fund. The Secretary of the Treasury is not of that view at all.

On May 6 of this year for example, in an interview on "Meet the Press" Secretary Regan while praising the Social Security reform which we adopted in April 1983 as "good for the time" said that the Government would have to revisit the issue sometime in the late 1980's, went on to talk about "mammoth costs," and questioned whether the persons in the higher income ranges—which is a very small proportion of beneficiaries—should continue to receive benefits.

Why do I raise these questions? Mr. President, it is because in the Social Security Reform Act of 1983 we specifically provided for the addition of two public trustees for the Social Security funds. The current trustees are, of course, as they have been: the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Secretary of Labor. The managing trustee is the Secretary of the Treasury, whose duty it is to invest the trust funds. These funds are invested in Treasury securities. That is as it should be, and that certainly works well.

But, Mr. President, it is unsettling to this Senator, who worked hard on that legislation, to know that 15 months after we provided for the appointment of two public trustees, these trustees have not been appointed. Their appointment was to be confirmed by the Senate, of course. And they were to be, as you would expect, a member each from the two major political parties. That some time would pass before the appointments would be made was totally to be expected. Indeed no one was troubled when 1983 passed and no appointments were made. But the year 1984 commenced, and the issue arose as to whether the administration was responding in a good-faith manner to the requirements of statute. The statute is not an advisory option. These are not advisory provisions. This is not an optional provision. There is to be the appointment of two public members to serve as full and equal trustees of the Social Security system.

There have emerged two candidates for this position who are both logical and worthy candidates. I do not make a claim that they are exclusively so. But it was thought by many of us that the Honorable Wilbur J. Cohen, former Secretary of HEW, could be an admirable choice for a Democratic trustee. Wilbur Cohen, who is a friend of a generation in my case, was a staff member of the committee which drafted the original legislation.

Among his colleagues at that time was Mr. Robert J. Myers, the distinguished Chief Actuary and staff director of the National Commission on Social Security Reform. Robert Myers could also be a choice, a Republican trustee. So we would have two persons not only immensely learned in the system, but absolutely present throughout its development.

On February 24, Mr. President, I wrote the President suggesting these appointments might be made. I wrote in February and I received a courteous reply from Mr. M.V. Oglesby, the assistant to the President, thanking me for these suggestions and saying "Please know that your supportive comments are being shared with the appropriate officials within the Office of Presidential Personnel for careful consideration."

On the very day that Mr. Oglesby wrote me, Mr. John O'Shaughnessy, Assistant Secretary for Health and Human Services, appeared before the Senate Finance Committee. I asked him about these appointments. He said the nominations would be made without delay.

On May 22 Mr. O'Shaughnessy called our office to say that the President would be proposing these nominations within the month. Yet, here it is July, and we have not heard from him.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am sending to the desk an amendment which very simply states that:

"None of the funds appropriated for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be expended after October 3, 1984, that do not include appointed officials for all the positions as public members of the board of trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, as provided under the amendments made by section 341 of the Social Security Amendments of 1983.".

AMENDMENT NO. 3399

(Purpose: Relating to the appointment of the public members of the boards of trustees of the social security trust funds)

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], proposes an amendment numbered 3399.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, at the end of line 21, add the following: "None of the funds appropriated for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be expended after October 3, 1984, that do not include appointed officials for all the positions as public members of the board of trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, as provided under the amendments made by section 341 of the Social Security Amendments of 1983.".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I have a final statement.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I would like to hear it. I did not quite catch that. This is the first I have known about this. The Senator from New York, for whom I have great respect, has made a very eloquent speech.

You are one of the real authorities. But I would like to know. I do not have a copy. As a matter of fact, I could not determine whether you were offering an amendment or making some good points here.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I offer my apologies to the manager of the legislation. It was my understanding that this was discussed with their respective staffs. I could be wrong.

Mr. ABDNOR. I do not think so.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Can we discuss it here?

Mr. ABDNOR. I did earlier. If the Senator will continue to yield, I did know that there was some concern about the appointment of a couple of positions on the Commission. I had the understanding that maybe we could get together, that the Senator from Arizona, the ranking member of the subcommittee, myself and you and write a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury requesting something along this line.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, is there other business of some urgency that the distinguished chairman would like to get to so that this could be set aside so we might discuss it?

Mr. ABDNOR. I wish we could. Yes. Senator CHILES was getting ready, and working out some details.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. If we could do that with the understanding that this would be the pending business.

Mr. ABDNOR. Fine. Then we can see a copy of the amendment, too.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I do not want to delay, but I feel certain that the distinguished manager will find this a wholly acceptable measure. It simply says that the law should be complied with here.

Mr. ABDNOR. It probably will. It would be great, if we can do that.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the measure I have pending at the desk be temporarily laid aside, but that it be the pending business following the matters to be handled by the managers of the legislation and the distinguished Senator from Florida, and that I be recognized at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3400

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. This amendment is offered on behalf of Mr. ROTH, Mr. PRYOR, and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], for himself, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 3400.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 60, beginning with line 22, strike out through line 2 on page 61 and insert the following:

"(3) Former Presidents and their spouses, widows, widowers, or minor children, in accordance with sections 731 and 732 of the Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations Act, 1985.

"(4) Former Vice Presidents, in accordance with section 733 of such Act.".

On page 64, after line 22, insert the following:

TITLE VII—FORMER PRESIDENTS

PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. For purposes of this title, the term "former President" means an individual—

(1) who has held the office of President of the United States of America;

(2) whose service in such office has terminated other than by removal pursuant to section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States of America; and

(3) who does not currently hold such office.

PART B—PRESIDENTIAL LIBRARIES

SEC. 711. (a) The first paragraph of section 2101 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the semicolon a comma and "and may include research facilities and museum facilities in accordance with this chapter".

(b) Section 2108(a) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) When the Administrator of General Services considers it to be in the public interest he may, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, accept for and in the name of the United States, land, buildings, and equipment offered as a gift to the United States for the purpose of creating a Presidential archival depository, take title to the land, buildings, and equipment on behalf of the United States, and maintain, operate, and protect them as a Presidential archival depository and as a part of the national archives system.

"(2) The Administrator, in consultation with the Archivist of the United States and the Commissioner of the Public Buildings Service, shall promulgate architectural and design standards applicable to Presidential archival depositories in order to ensure that such depositories (A) preserve Presidential records subject to chapter 22 of this title and papers and other historical materials accepted for deposit under section 2107 of this title and (B) contain adequate research facilities.

"(3) The Administrator shall accept and take title to only such land, buildings, and equipment under paragraph (1) as are necessary to establish, for each President or former President, a single Presidential archival depository in one building not in excess of sixty thousand square feet in one geographic location, in the case of a President or a former President who served as President for not more than one term of four years, or not in excess of seventy thousand square feet in one geographic location in the case of a President or a former President who served as President for more than one term of four years, including museum space.

"(4) The Administrator may make agreements, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph and paragraph (5) and upon such other terms and conditions he considers proper, with a State, political subdivision, university, institution of higher learning, institute, or foundation to use as a Presidential archival depository land, buildings, and equipment of the State, subdivision, university, or other organization, to be made available by it without transfer of title to the United States. Any such agreement shall provide that any such Presidential archival depository shall comply with the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(5)(A) Prior to accepting and taking title of any land, buildings, and equipment under paragraph (1), and prior to entering into any agreement under paragraph (4) or any other agreement to accept or establish a Presidential archival depository, the Administrator shall submit a prospectus for the proposed Presidential archival depository to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives. The prospectus shall include—

"(i) a description of the land, buildings, and equipment offered as a gift or to be made available without transfer of title;

"(ii) a statement of the terms of the proposed agreement, if any;

"(iii) a general description of the types of records, papers, documents, or other historical materials proposed to be deposited in the Presidential archival depository so to be created, and of the terms of the proposed deposit;

"(iv) a statement of the additional improvements and equipment, if any, necessary for the satisfactory operation of the depository, together with an estimate of the cost of such improvements;

"(v) an estimate of the annual cost to the United States of maintaining, operating, and protecting the depository; and

"(vi) a statement indicating whether or not a proposed Presidential archival depository complies with the architectural and design standards promulgated pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(B) The Administrator may not take title to land, buildings, and equipment or make an agreement, until the expiration of the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress following the date on which the report is transmitted.

"(6) No physical or material changes in or additions to a Presidential archival depository may be made unless—

"(A) the Presidential archival depository, after any such change or addition, complies with the architectural and design standards established pursuant to paragraph (2);

"(B) the Presidential archival depository, after any such change or addition, is one building not in excess of sixty thousand square feet in one geographic location, including museum space; and

"(C) the Administrator has submitted a prospectus to the Congress describing any such change or addition and a period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress has expired after the date on which the prospectus was submitted.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

"(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of any period of time in which Congress is in continuous session.

"(8)(A) The Administrator may provide technical assistance to any private organization of institution establishing a museum or memorial for a President or former President and may provide such institution with microfilm copies of historically significant Presidential and personal records contained in a Presidential archival depository.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'Presidential records' has the same meaning as in section 2201(2) of this title; and

"(ii) the term 'personal records' has the same meaning as in section 2201(3) of this title.".

SEC. 712. Section 2203(c) of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(C) During his term of office, the President shall substantially complete the disposal of his Presidential records which no longer have administrative, historical, informational, or evidentiary value. Prior to disposing of any such records, the President shall obtain the written views of the Archivist concerning the proposal disposal of such Presidential records and may not dispose of any record with respect to which the Archivist notifies the President that the Archivist intends to take action under subsection (e).".

SEC. 713. The amendments made by this part shall take effect on January 20, 1985 and shall not apply to any President who leaves office on or before such date.

PART C—FORMER PRESIDENTS

SEC. 721. Subsection (e) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide retirement, clerical assistants, and free mailing privileges to former Presidents of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1958 (72 Stat. 838; 3 U.S.C. 102 note) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The spouse of a deceased former President shall be entitled to receive from the United States a monetary allowance at a rate per annum, payable monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is equal to two-thirds of the rate which is payable under subsection (a) to a former President. The monetary allowance of such spouse—

"(1) commences on the day after the former President dies;

"(2) terminates on the last day of the month before such spouse—

"(A) dies; or

"(B) remarries before becoming sixty years of age; and

"(3) is not payable for any period during which such spouse holds an appointive or elective office or position in or under the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia to which is attached a rate of pay other than a nominal rate.".

SEC. 722. (a) Subsections (b) and (c) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide retirement, clerical assistants, and free mailing privileges to former Presidents of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1958 (72 Stat. 838; 3 U.S.C. 102 note) are amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Administrator of General Services (hereinafter referred to as the 'Administrator') is authorized to provide to each former President, upon request, necessary services and facilities, including—

"(A) one suitable office, not to exceed four thousand square feet in area, appropriately equipped with furniture, furnishings, office machines and equipment, and office supplies, as determined by the Administration, after consultation with the former President or his designee provided for in subsection (c), at such place within the United States as the former President shall designate;

"(B) payment of the compensation of members of an office staff designated by the former President at rates determined by the former President which are not in excess of the rate provided for level II of the Executive Schedule under section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, except that notwithstanding any other provision of law, persons receiving compensation as members of an office staff of a former President under this subsection shall not be considered to be employees of the Federal Government except for purposes of chapters 81, 83, 87, and 89 of title 5, United States Code;

"(C) payment of travel expenses and subsistence allowances, including rental of Government or hired motor vehicles, found necessary by the former President, as authorized for persons employed intermittently or for persons serving without compensation under section 5703 of such title;

"(D) when authorized by the President, the use of Government aircraft or Government chartered aircraft by a former President solely for the purpose of completing the affairs of his office and otherwise as required incidentally for protective purposes. The costs allocable to the use of such aircraft under this Act shall be paid with funds authorized under the Former President's Act and any collections from the Secret Service or others for the use of space on Government aircraft or Government chartered aircraft deposited to the credit of the Former President's Act appropriation;

"(E) communications services found necessary by the former President;

"(F) except as provided in subsection (f) and notwithstanding the provisions of section 501 of title 44, United States Code, payment of expenses for necessary printing and binding;

"(G) movement of the personal effects and household goods of a former President and his family from Executive Residence in Washington, D.C., to a location in the United States selected by such former President; and

"(H) movement of the personal effects and household goods of a former Vice-President and his family from their residence at the seat of Government to a location in the United States selected by him.

"(2) Any Federal employee may be detailed to the office staff of a former President on a reimbursable basis with the consent of the head of the agency involved. Any such detail shall not extend beyond the eight months and ten days beginning on the date on which the former President leaves office. An employee detailed to the office of a former President shall be responsible only to the former President for the performance of his duties during the period of such detail. An employee detailed under this subsection is deemed, for the purpose of preserving his allowances, privileges, rights, seniority, and other benefits, an employee of the agency from which detailed, and he is entitled to pay, allowances, and benefits from funds available to that agency. The authorization and payment of such allowances and other benefits from appropriations available therefor is deemed to comply with section 5536 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) Each former President may designate to the Administrator an assistant authorized to make on his behalf such designations or findings of necessity as may be required in connection with the services and facilities to be provided under subsection (b).".

(2) Such section is amended by inserting immediately before subsection (1) the following new subsections:

"(f) Funds provided for necessary services and facilities for a former President under this Act shall be used for activities which are the direct result of such former President having held the office of President. Such funds may not be used for partisan political activities or income generating activities, except that a former President may use such funds for the preparation of his memoirs if the former President signs an agreement with the Administrator of General Services which provides that such memoirs will only be printed and distributed by the Public Printer in accordance with section 1345 of title 44, United States Code.

"(g)(1) The Administrator is authorized to provide necessary services and facilities to a former Vice President for use in connection with winding up the affairs of his office. Such services and facilities shall be of the same general character as the services and facilities provided to a former President under subsection (b). Each former Vice President shall be entitled to conveyance within the United States and its territories and possessions of all mail matter, including airmail, sent by him under his written autograph signature in connection with his preparations for winding up of his official duties as Vice President.

"(2) No funds for necessary services and facilities provided to a former Vice President under this Act shall be used for partisan political activities or income generating activities, as determined under standards established by the Administrator.

"(h) The Administrator shall expend no funds for the provision of services and facilities under this Act with respect to a former President at any time beyond ninety days after the date on which such former President dies.

"(i) Except for expenditures from an imprest fund consisting of such amounts as the Administrator shall determine any expenditure of funds under this Act may be made only with the prior approval of the Administrator or his designee.

"(j) By March 1 of each year, each former President shall prepare and transmit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report concerning activities carried out with the assistance of the funds for necessary services and facilities provided under this Act.

"(k)(1) To carry out the provisions of subsections (b) and (q), there are authorized to be appropriated with respect to a former President and former Vice President a total of $750,000 for the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expires, except that no funds appropriated pursuant to this clause shall be available for expenditure until the day on which such term expires.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraphs (3) to carry out the provisions of subsection (b) with respect to each former President, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of General Services—

"(A) $300,000 for each of the first four fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired;

"(B) $250,000 for the fifth and each of the three succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired; and

"(C) $200,000 for the ninth and each of the succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired.

"(3) To carry out the provisions of subsection (b) with respect to any individual who is a former President on the date of enactment of this subsection, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of General Services—

"(A) $300,000 for each of the four fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted;

"(B) $250,000 for the fifth and each of the three succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted; and

"(C) $200,000 for the ninth and each succeeding fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted.

"(4) The provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) shall lapse ten years after the date of enactment of this paragraph.".

(c) Section 4 of the Presidential Transition Act of 1963 (3 U.S.C. 102 note) is repealed.

(d) Section 5 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator such funds as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this Act, except that with respect to any one Presidential transition not more than $2,000,000 may be appropriated for the purposes of providing services and facilities to the President-elect and Vice-President-elect under section 3. The President shall include in the budget transmitted to Congress, for each fiscal year in which his regular term of office will expire, a proposed appropriation for carrying out the purposes of this Act.".

SEC. 723. (a) Chapter 13 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1345. Presidential memoirs

"The Public Printer shall cause to be printed as many copies of the memoirs of a former President who has entered into an agreement with the Administrator of General Services under subsection (1) of the first section of the Act of August 25, 1958

(72 Stat. 838), as may be necessary for the distribution and sale of such memoirs. Such memoirs shall be distributed and sold by the Superintendent of Documents in accordance with chapter 17 of this title.".

(b) The table of sections for such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"1345. Presidential memoirs.".

PART D—PROTECTION OF FORMER PRESIDENTS, FORMER VICE PRESIDENTS, AND THEIR FAMILIES

SEC. 731. (a) On or after the effective date of this part, no Secret Service protection shall be provided to a former President or to the spouse, widow, widower, or minor child of any such former President, unless such protection is authorized by subsection (b) or is extended or reinstated by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President in accordance with section 732.

(b) The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of a former President after the effective date of this part for a period of five years beginning on the effective date of this part or on the date on which such individual becomes a former President, whichever is later, and for such additional periods as the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize under section 732. The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of the spouse or minor child of any former President after the effective date of this part to the extent that such protection is incidental to the protection of such former President or if such protection is authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President under section 732. The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of any individual who becomes a widow or widower of a former President after the effective date of this part for a period of six months after the date on which such former President dies and for such additional periods as the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize under section 732.

SEC. 732. (a)(1) After the expiration or termination of Secret Service protection to a former President or the spouse or minor child of a former President, the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the reinstatement of such protection—

(A) in the case of a former President, for one one-year period; and

(B) in the case of the spouse or minor child of a former President, for one six-month period, upon a finding that a serious threat warranting such protection exists to the individual.

(2) The Secretary may extend Secret Service protection reinstated under paragraph (1) or provided under section 3056 of title 18, United States Code, prior to the effective date of this part or under section 731 after the effective date of this part—

(A) in the case of a former President, for additional consecutive one-year periods; and

(B) in the case of a spouse or minor child of a former President, for additional consecutive six-month periods, upon the written request of the person eligible for such protection.

(b) No extension of Secret Service protection under subsection (a)(2) shall become effective unless the Secretary of the Treasury submits the request for such extension to the Congress and a period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress has expired after the date on which the request is submitted. For purposes of this subsection, continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment sine die, but the days on which either House is not in session because of adjournment of more than three days to a day certain are excluded.

(c) The President is authorized to direct the United States Secret Service to protect a former president, spouse, widow, widower, or minor child upon a determination that a threat warrants emergency action. The President shall notify Congress of any such action. Such authorization shall not extend beyond sixty calendar days or, in the case of the submission by the Secretary of Treasury for extension under subsection (b) within such sixty day period, not beyond the time needed for sixty calendar days of continuous session of Congress to expire.

SEC. 733. (a) The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of a former Vice President if such protection is authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with subsection (b).

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the provision of Secret Service protection to a former Vice President upon written request of such former Vice President and upon a finding that a threat warranting such protection exists to such former Vice President. The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the provision of such protection for a period beginning on the date on which the Vice Presidential term of such former Vice President expired and ending on the last day of the fiscal year in which such term expired.

SEC. 734. This part shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the amendment I, Senator ROTH, the distinguished chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, and Senator PRYOR offer amounts to the Former Presidents Facilities and Services Reform Act of 1983. That bill, which has been reported out by the Committee on Governmental Affairs has 22 cosponsors.

As Senators ROTH, PRYOR, and myself made known on the Senate floor last June 13, Senator HATFIELD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee had placed a hold on the legislation at the request of the White House.

Before the recent recess we followed up on the floor statements we made expressing our disappointment with the hold with a letter to the President asking for any suggested amendments which would make the bill more acceptable to the administration.

The response from Mr. Oglesby, the Director of Legislative Affairs for the White House, does not contain any suggested amendments. My conclusion is the administration remains uninterested in seeing any further action on this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the correspondence I have referred to between the White House and myself be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, June 14, 1984.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On Wednesday of this week Senators ROTH, PRYOR, and I spoke on the Senate floor and expressed our disappointment over the "hold" that has been placed on S. 563, "The Former Presidents Facilities and Services Reform Act of 1983." This legislation redefines the benefits to be provided former Presidents.

Senator HATFIELD indicated to us he has placed the hold on the legislation on request from the White House. Our question, Mr. President, is whether the purpose of the request to Senator HATFIELD is to prevent the legislation from being voted upon by the Senate, or whether there are specific problems in the bill you want to highlight and bring to the Senate's attention for modification?

We are aware of Director Stockman's comments on the bill prior to the Committee on Governmental Affairs mark-up of the legislation. Several of the concerns he made known have been accommodated. We would like to know what outstanding issues remain that led to the White House request for a hold.

Our mail indicates the public is deeply concerned about excessive, unnecessary spending and recognizes this legislation applies needed restraint. We urge you to work with us to pave the way for Senate action.

Given the likelihood this session of Congress will be abbreviated, we would appreciate hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Sincerely yours,

LAWTON CHILES.
WILLIAM ROTH.
DAVID PRYOR.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 28, 1984.

Hon. LAWTON CHILES,
Committee on Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CHILES: On the President's behalf, I would like to thank you for your June 14 letter concerning S. 563, the "Former Presidents Facilities and Services Reform Act of 1983."

As you know, the Administration has, during both the 97th and 98th Congresses, consistently opposed legislation, such as S. 563, that would impinge in any major way on the perquisites that are afforded former Presidents under current law. In our view, the benefits conferred upon former Presidents are reasonable, sensible, and necessary and cannot accurately be described as either excessive or extravagant.

David Stockman's letter of November 16, 1983, to Chairman Roth set forth the Administration's specific objections to S. 563 in some detail. Our broad, underlying objection to the bill—that it unwisely and unnecessarily restricts the privileges and prerogatives of former Presidents—has not been adequately addressed.

I do want to stress that the Administration does support efforts to encourage the participation of the private sector in the development and operation of the libraries of former Presidents. You are probably aware that H.R. 5584, concerning the management and preservation of Presidential materials, passed the House on June 25. We believe that bill would, if enacted, provide us with a useful tool to encourage greater public participation in the contruction and operation of Presidential libraries and to help defray day-to-day operating costs. Accordingly, the Administration supports early Senate consideration and passage of H.R. 5584.

Thank you for taking the time to apprise the President of your views.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

M.B. OGLESBY, Jr.,
Assistant to the President.

Mr. CHILES. However, today, as we were proposing talking about offering this amendment, we have been in touch with Senator HATFIELD. He, in turn, tells us that he has been in touch with the White House. Senator HATFIELD has now said that he will withdraw his hold on the legislation, which has been worked on for three separate Congresses, has been reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs, this Congress and which has, as a principal cosponsor, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Governmental Affaris. On that basis I am prepared, as I think my distinguished cosponsor is, to say that we will not pursue putting this amendment on the appropriations bill. That was not our first choice. It would amount to legislating on an appropriations bill. We felt that we were forced to do that because we did not know how else to turn, when the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee had placed a hold on the bill that we had on the calendar.

I hope, and I am confident my cosponsor does, too, that this means that the White House is withdrawing its objection, that we can then get this bill scheduled, and bring it up in the regular process.

I now yield to my distinguished colleague, Senator ROTH, who has been so helpful in this legislation and in helping shape this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida. As he well knows, I think this is a very important piece of legislation which has been reported by our committee. It deserves to be brought up on the floor as a separate bill.

I, too, felt strongly that since there was a hold on the legislation by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that we had to use the only vehicle that appeared to be available to us and, therefore, was ready to proceed with offering it as an amendment to the appropriations bill now before the Senate. This is something I ordinarily do not like to do because I think the practice of offering authorizations in the appropriations process is not a desirable one and one that we should resist doing.

However, when the procedural situation developed that one has no alternative, it seemed to be it was important that we would go ahead. I must confess that this piece of legislation I have found has strong support among my constituency, as I know it has from the constituency of the Senator from Florida.

I would say to those who have any questions about the provisions, and that would include the White House, we would be very willing to listen to any specific proposals or amendments. I think it is a safe statement to say that both of the principal sponsors feel very strongly that we want former Presidents to be treated generously and with dignity, but that in these times of critical financial problems, we must use restraint and good sense, just as we must in other areas.

So it is my intent, and I know it is the intent of the Senator from Florida, that we will proceed very agressively in trying to raise this bill, hopefully before the next recess. But in any event, it is a matter which must be brought to the floor before we adjourn for the year. I join my colleague in agreeing not to bring it forth at this time.

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, taxpayers spent $27 million in fiscal year 1983 taking care of former Presidents and maintaining the libraries which are constructed in their honor. The legislation which Senator CHILES and I have introduced, S. 563, the Former Presidents Facilities and Services Reform Act, tightens constraints for such expenditures. From the mail my office has been receiving, I would say the bill has the support of the people of my home State of Arkansas, and across the Nation.

I have worked on this issue since I came to the Senate in 1979. Bills have been introduced during each Congress since then, and concern has increased as the public has become more aware of the problem which we seek to correct. Numerous articles in national magazines and newspapers have focused attention on the expanding costs to taxpayers associated with former Presidents. These articles, as well as congressional hearings, have indicated that at least three types of expenditures for former Presidents need immediate reform.

First, and most expensive, is the Presidential library program. Under current law, these libraries are built with private funds. Problems occur, however, because there are no statutory size limits for these libraries. The practical effect of this can be to give the Federal Government a structure, which because of its excessive size, is unreasonably costly to maintain. Since upkeep and maintenance of these facilities is the responsibility of the Federal Government, we have incorporated language into the bill which would limit the size of all new Presidential libraries to 60,000 square feet, with a 70,000 square feet limit for a two-term President. We believe this restriction will allow ample space for excellent libraries and at the same time will reduce Government expenditures by millions of dollars for future years.

Secret Service protection for former Presidents and their families cost more than $12 million during fiscal year 1983. Under current law, this protection is extended to a former Chief Executive for life, regardless of whether a threat exists to his or her safety. Our bill replaces lifetime protection with automatic 5-year protection, and provides for emergency and extended protection in excess of 5 years if such protection is necessary.

Finally, the bill implements a staff allowance of $300,000 a year, to be reduced to $200,000 over the course of 9 years. It also makes clear the restrictions on the use of Federal funds. This provision adds much-needed certainty into the budget of a former President and will help reduce costs in the future.

Mr. President, this proposal has broad bipartisan support, with 21 cosponsors. I urge my colleagues to support this important proposal. Taxpayers are demanding that we take action on this matter, and I hope the Senate will act expeditiously.●

● Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I am pleased today to cosponsor this amendment to regain control of the funds American taxpayers must pay to support the activities of our former Presidents. I would like to extend my sincere congratulations to the principal sponsors of the amendment, my good friends, the Senators from Florida and Delaware, for their fine work in developing this legislation.

Mr. President, I have been a longtime supporter of S. 563, the bill that contains the essence of this amendment. As my friends have noted in the past, the current state of the law justifies the charge that we have created an "imperial former Presidency." The costs of supporting our former Presidents have skyrocketed in recent years, from $65,000 in 1955 to over $27 million per year today, Mr. President, how can we ask the man on the street, the farmer in the fields, or the employees of the Government to bite the bullet for our budget deficits when we spend such enormous sums to support the activities of only three men?

What kind of example does this set? I think we all agree that the status of a President of the United States of America requires that we provide a dignified retired life. But does a dignified retired life for three people require over $27 million per year? I do not think so, and I know that the many constituents who have written to me on this matter agree that we are spending too much on our former Presidents.

In adopting this amendment, I do not believe we would be unduly restricting our former Presidents and we certainly would not be pushing them into the poorhouse. We would simply be restricting the costs associated with staff and office allowances, Presidential libraries, and Secret Service protection. For example, the original staff allowance would be set at $300,000 per year, and would be reduced over a 9-year period to a ceiling of $200,000 per year. I am certain that a person with enough drive and resourcefulness to become President of the United States can develop the means to "squeeze by" on a staff allowance in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars per year. Correspondingly, the provisions affecting libraries and Secret Service protection limit spending in ways that demonstrate our commitment to equity in controlling these costs without diminishing the stature of a former President.

Mr. President, I will not belabor the points made by the other supporters of this amendment. I will finish by saying that issues such as these have a very real symbolic importance to the people of this country. It is true that the savings achieved by this amendment may seem small to us when we speak too casually about millions and billions of dollars as a matter of course in our daily routine. Perhaps that is part of the problem. We find it too easy to think in terms of billions of dollars, overlooking the numerous small spending issues that can "nickel and dime" us to death. I can guarantee my colleagues this: The numbers contained in this amendment do not seem small to the people of this country, and they are looking to the distinguished Members of this body to correct a situation that they believe to be clearly inequitable.

Mr. President, I would like to commend again the sponsors of the amendment for their fine work on this measure, and I hope we may have an opportunity to vote up or down on this matter very soon. I yield the floor.●

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I must say to the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Delaware that, as chairman of the subcommittee, I am very pleased that they are doing it this way, because this is the right way. I did not want to discuss a bill which I have not even looked at. It is good to know that we can work problems out without taking almost unfair advantage of another committee, a term I do not like to use. I thank them for their action today and wish them good luck on their legislation.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3399

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I believe that the pending business is the amendment I offered earlier concerning the appointment of public trustees to the Social Security fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, we have had a very helpful discussion of this matter in the interim. I see my distinguished friend from South Dakota on the floor, and I am happy to yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ABDNOR. I thank the Senator from New York for yielding.

Mr. President, after checking with the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator DOLE, I am willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. The amendment forces action on the appointment of public trustees for the Social Security trust funds. These public trustees were required by the 1983 Social Security bill, but no appointments have been forthcoming. I understand that these appointments are in the works, and I believe that the amendment of the Senator from New York will move these appointments along a little more quickly.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friend for his statement. If the amendment is acceptable to him, I believe it is acceptable to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ABDNOR. It is acceptable.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, since the Senator has been so generous as to suggest that this might encourage the nominating process, which I suspect has been stopped in the glue factory, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my letter of February 24 to the President, suggesting that Wilbur J. Cohen and Robert J. Myers might be admirably suited for this task, together with a response from Mr. M.B. Oglesby, Jr., assistant to the President, in response to my letter.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, February 24, 1984.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am writing to recommend two distinguished persons, Wilbur J. Cohen and Robert J. Myers, for appointment as the public members of the Boards of Trustees of the Federal Old Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund. Both men have dedicated much of their lives to the Social Security system.

Wilbur Cohen, currently Professor of Public Affairs at the University of Texas, spent more than twenty years with the Social Security Administration, including service as Director of the Division of Research and Statistics. He was chairman of President Eisenhower's Task Force on Health and Social Security and the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under President Johnson. He also has served as President of the American Public Welfare Association.

Robert Myers spent more than thirty-five years with the Social Security Administration, including service as the Chief Actuary. More recently, he served as your Deputy Commissioner of Social Security for Programs and Policy, and as Executive Director of the Commission on Social Security Reform.

As a former member of that Commission, and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Social Security and Income Maintenance Programs of the Senate Finance Committee, I am pleased to urge you to appoint these two fine public servants to serve as public members of the Boards of Trustees of the trust funds of the Social Security system.

Respectfully,

DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, March 15, 1984.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: Thank you for your recent letter to the President indicating your interest in the appointments of Wilbur J. Cohen and Robert J. Myers as public members of the Federal Old Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund.

We appreciate your contacting us and we welcome receiving your recommendations for these positions. Please know that your supportive comments are being shared with the appropriate officials within the Office of Presidential Personnel for careful consideration.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

M. B. OGLESBY, Jr.,
Assistant to the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3399) was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. ARMSTRONG]. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3401

(Purpose: To limit the use of funds appropriated for Presidential archival depositories)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 3401.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 36, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

SEC. 406. (a) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act for the operation, maintenance, and protection of Presidential archival depositories shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to establish in the National Archives Trust Fund a separate endowment for the maintenance, operation, and protection of each Presidential archival depository, to which shall be credited any gifts or bequests received under section 2108(g) of title 44, United States Code, that are offered for such depository. Income to each such endowment shall be available to cover the cost of maintenance, operation, and protection of such depository, but not the cost of the performance of archival functions under such title.

(b) Funds appropriated by this Act may not be used by the Administrator of General Services to accept or take title to any land, building, or equipment under section 2108(a) of title 44, United States Code, or to make any agreement to use any land, building, or equipment under such section, for the purpose of creating a Presidential archival depository, unless the Administrator determines that there is available, by gift or bequest for deposit under subsection (a) in an endowment with respect to that depository, an amount to cover, or insure sufficient income to cover—

(A) the total cost of acquiring or constructing the buildings and of acquiring and installing the equipment for such depository;

(B)(i) if title to the land is to be vested in the United States, the cost of acquiring the land upon which such buildings are situated, or such other measure of the value of such land as is mutually agreed upon by the Administrator and the donor; or

(ii) If title to the land is not to be vested in the United States, the cost to the donor of any improvements (other than such buildings and equipment) to the land upon which such buildings are situated; and

(C) the costs of maintaining, operating, and protecting such depository in each fiscal year, but not of performing the archival functions under title 44, United States Code, for such depository in each fiscal year.

(c) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act for the operation, maintenance, and protection of Presidential archival depositories shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to negotiate and enter into an agreement, for each Presidental archival depositor in existence on the date of enactment of this Act, which provides that, within 10 years after the date of enactment of the Act—

(1) the General Services Administration will be reimbursed for the costs of maintaining, operating, and protecting such depository in each fiscal year but not the costs of performing the archival functions under title 44, United States Code, for such depository for each fiscal year;

(2) the endowment established under subsection (a) for such depository will contain an amount of funds to cover, or to insure sufficient income to cover, the costs of reimbursing the General Services Administration under paragraph (1) for each fiscal year, but these costs shall not include archival costs.

(d) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to conduct a study to plan for the establishment, in the General Services Administration, of a National Archival Center for Presidential Papers, in which may be deposited all Presidential records and historical materials of former Presidents who leave office after 1989. The Administration of General Services shall transmit such study to the Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the amendment that I have sent to the desk is a modification of amendment No. 3390 which I submitted yesterday. I will explain the modification in due course.

Mr. President, the amendment which I am offering; that is, the amendment that has just been read, would fundamentally change the method by which Presidential libraries are now created and funded.

At the present time former Presidents, with the aid of foundations or friends, raise money to build libraries to serve as repositories for their official papers and their memorabilia.

When built, these libraries are then deeded to the Federal Government—to the General Services Administration—for eternal maintenance at public expenses.

The result to date has been the creation of seven such libraries. This is a relatively recent phenomenon. We do not have a Presidential library for Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and so forth, all of the Presidents of the 19th century. There are no libraries in their memory. The library of Franklin D. Roosevelt was the first; the Herbert Hoover Library was established after Roosevelt's. There are a total now of seven, stretching across the country from Hyde Park, NY, to Austin, TX, West Bend, IA, and there are three more that plans are underway for, one for Mr. Nixon in San Clemente, one for Mr. Carter in Atlanta, and one for President Reagan in Palo Alto.

Mr. President, let us look briefly at these libraries and the functions that they actually perform. They were intended to be such as the name describes, libraries, repositories for the papers of the Presidents—research centers dedicated to advancing scholarship.

Instead, the libraries are not research centers but museums and exhibition halls serving mainly as tourist attractions. To be accurate, they are really Government-supported monuments to the memory of former Presidents. They are not primarily or to a major degree research centers.

Just to back up that statement, Mr. President, let me illustrate: fewer than 1 percent of the visitors to the seven existing libraries are researchers. In 1983 there were 8,800 research visits; that is, a researcher coming in the door for 1 day, a total of 8,800 of those visits to all seven libraries. But there are nearly 1½ million museum visitors, in other words, visitors who came in to see the chair that the President sat in, to see a replica of his office, to see the present that the King of Morocco gave him, or the Shah of Iran, or what was given to him by the Queen of England, or the Emperor of Japan.

A further example: The Johnson Library in Austin, TX, received 1,800 research visits in 1983; 1,800 researchers spent 1 day in the library compared to 409,000 museum visitors.

The Ford museum had less than 500 researcher visits and 182,000 museum visitors.

The seven Presidential libraries average 70,000 square feet and only about 20,000 of that, on average, 20,000 of the 70,000 is needed for research and storage.

If the cost to the public of operating these institutions were prorated to each researcher visit the cost would be $1,700 per research visitor. Now we are just talking about operating expenses because, Mr. President, as I pointed out, the construction of these institutions comes from bequests, gifts, endowments, foundation grants that the President or his friends have arranged. The total construction of the libraries typically is paid by private funds. When they are built, they are turned over to the Federal Government and the Federal Government then operates them.

Now as a result of the proliferation of libraries, the cost of their maintenance in the current fiscal year has reached an estimated $15 million. That does not seem too much when you are running an $800 billion budget. But compare it to what it was when these libraries started, just 30 years ago: The cost then was $63,000 a year. Now it has risen to $15 million. Because the Federal Government has the responsibility for the papers and for the archival functions, there are now 149 employees who are devoted to those activities in the seven libraries and those activities cost about $5 million.

The costs of the libraries are increasing and will continue to increase, in part because the Government has actually spent $6.5 million making capital improvements to four of the existing libraries. So it has become well established that the Government will not only operate but also make capital improvements to the libraries. In fact, in the Treasury/Postal bill, that has passed the House, there is an appropriation for $5 million for an addition to the Kennedy Library in Boston.

In 1955, it was estimated, based on the cost of the Roosevelt Library that each additional library would cost $100,000 a year for operation. But by 1978 the seven libraries did not cost $100,000 a year but they cost over $1 million apiece to operate and now they cost over $2 million apiece to operate.

A GSA study in 1980 estimated that in the coming 100 years we will create a new Presidential library once every 5 years. This is based on the GSA calculation that the average term of past Presidents was 5 years.

Three more libraries are already on stream, as I mentioned, one for President Nixon, one for President Carter, and one for President Reagan.

It seems to me that there is a serious question as to whether it makes sense to have Presidential archives scattered across the country. Forget the memorabilia, forget the Presidential chair, and the gifts, and all the rest. Does it make sense to have the archives, the research material spread all over the map?

Is it a good system and does it really advance historic research and scholarship to have each President have his library, his records, in a separate place, instead of being able to go to one central point to see how a President or a series of Presidents have handled our relations, for example, with NATO or how a series of Presidents have dealt with the problem of youth unemployment, or how a series of Presidents have dealt with the growing number of senior citizens who are unemployed and what can be done about them?

Instead of having those records in one central place now, a researcher has to go to West Bend, IA, or to Boston, MA, or to Hyde Park, NY, or way out to California.

But I am not going to argue about that. That is where the Presidents seem to want their papers to be, and scholars can travel there, although I am not sure that is a very good system.

But what I am asking in this amendment, Mr. President, is that those activities in the libraries that are not devoted to scholarly or archival functions—that those activities that are solely to operate a museumlike attraction, they should be paid for by sources other than the Federal Government. When the new libraries come on stream and are presented to the Federal Government I ask that there be sufficient private endowment to cover the costs of operating that portion of the library that is devoted to the general public's use of it. The Federal Government would continue to assume the financial burden of those activities which are devoted to the records of the President for research purposes.

Now why do I divide this up, Mr. President? I think it would be a genuine shame if the records of the President were scattered and lost, in somebody's barn or indeed destroyed for lack of a place to store them. This was the problem, indeed, before Roosevelt. So, therefore, I think that is a proper governmental function to provide for maintenance of Presidential records. Just as we have the Federal Archives that maintain records of the activities of the various departments, just as we have in the Defense Department records of every soldier, marine, Navy man that served the defense of our Nation, so it seems to me we should, as a people, preserve the records of our Presidents.

But I do not believe that it is a proper financial burden for the taxpayers of the country to preserve all the memorabilia, the plaques, the chairs, the office furniture, the gifts that were given to a President during his term of office.

Now this is a burden that can properly be carried either by those who set up the library or through admissions fees to the library or by support from the community or the State that benefits from it.

For example, if in Austin, TX, as the records show, over 400,000 people visited the Johnson Library, or in effect, museum, then obviously Austin, TX, got something out of it. People came and they stayed in the hotels, people used the restaurants, people enjoyed the other activities in Austin and spent money there. And so, therefore, the city of Austin, or it might be the county, or perhaps the State of Texas or the University of Texas where the library is located, should carry the burden of responsibility for housing the memorabilia in the museum part of that library.

What my amendment does, Mr. President, is provide that for new libraries there would have to be sufficient endowment to cover the nonarchival functions of the library. For the seven existing libraries, at the end of 10 years—we give them a phase-in time—sufficient endowment or sufficient revenues from admission fees, or whatever it might be, must be available to carry the nonarchival functions of these museums.

Now that is hardly an unreasonable requirement. And for some peculiar reason some of the museums do not now charge admission while others do. Some libraries charge an admission of $1.50, and they have special arrangements for tour groups of schoolchildren and so forth, while others choose to charge nothing. Well, that is all right if they want to do it, but let us not have the taxpayers of the United States footing the bill. If the Johnson Library chooses to charge nothing, then they will not raise sufficient funds under this legislation unless they raise it from gifts or elsewhere to provide for the carrying of the nonarchival functions of the library.

So, Mr. President, this is striking a small blow for the taxpayer of the United States. I know that the amendment that Senator CHILES and Senator ROTH has goes far deeper into the perquisites of former Presidents. I think we have all seen examples of the taxpayers providing, in my opinion, somewhat lavishly for former Presidents, all sorts of Secret Service protection that I think is beyond necessity. But I am not going to get into that. If the Senators want to deal with that when the Chiles-Roth amendment comes to the floor, that is up to them. And I presume that that amendment will come forward sometime either in this session or when we come back after Labor Day in September.

My amendment solely deals with the libraries. It solely deals with the nonarchival or museum portion of those libraries. It solely says that other than the taxpayers will provide for the maintenance and operation of that portion of those libraries devoted to nonarchival functions.

You might say it is impossible to make the distinction. That is not so. As an example, I will cite to you the Kennedy Center. It is supported partly by revenues and partly by Federal appropriations. That portion of the Kennedy Center that is devoted to the public coming just to see the center is carried by the GSA. That portion of the Kennedy Center that is devoted to the opera house and to the symphony hall, the smaller performing arts centers, that cost is required to be carried by the admissions to those functions. And those of us who serve on the Environment and Public Works Committee are quite familiar with this because this constantly comes up.

But there is a distinction made. It is imprecise, surely. And so the division between the archival functions and the museum functions and these Presidential libraries will be somewhat imprecise. But it can be arrived at with some accuracy, accuracy based perhaps on the floor space devoted to the archival functions, versus the floor space devoted to the museum. Some logical way can be arrived at just like a system is arrived at for the Kennedy Center today, and which operates rather happily up to the present time.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, we are today considering the Treasury, Postal Service, and general Government appropriations bill which contains approximately $29 million in funding for Presidential libraries, allowances and office staff for three former Presidents and one Presidential widow in fiscal year 1985.

I am a cosponsor of legislation, S. 563, currently being held at the desk at the request of the President, to trim this spending to more reasonable levels. As many of you may know, spending on ex-Presidents has grown from a mere $64,000 in 1955 to $29 million in the current fiscal year. Our ex-Presidents are not poor men. They do not need this money. This spending is out of control.

I, therefore, rise in support of Senators CHILES and ROTH's efforts to dislodge the hold on this bill and offer it as an amendment to the Treasury, Postal Service appropriations bill. We have already wasted too much time merely talking about reducing this area of the budget. The time to act is now. I urge my colleagues to support Senators CHILES and ROTH in this effort.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, let me say, I am not any authority on the Senator's amendment. I have great, great respect for him. I work closely with Senator CHAFEE on the Environmental and Public Works Committee, and I know of the great ability he has. So I have to assume this is good legislation. I guess it is difficult for any of us to oppose something that could be a savings to our U.S. Government and the taxpayers of this country.

But let me say from the very outset, as I have said on a number of occasions since this bill has come to the floor. This is not authorizing legislation. We are working an appropriations bill. Here we are apparently changing the concept for the Presidential libraries of this Nation. I do not know a great deal about how they operate; whether they operate good or bad. I am sure there is probably a lot of question on this. Some have come to my mind. First, has this sort of thing ever had a hearing?

Mr. President, could I ask the Senator who offered the amendment? Have you had hearings on this?

Mr. CHAFEE. No, we have not on this specific amendment, but we, of course, have dealt with the Kennedy Center, and there have been Governmental Affairs Committee hearings on the problem.

Mr. ABDNOR. I would suggest something. Today, about an hour ago, with Senator CHILES and Senator ROTH, we had a similar situation. Here we are about to go into a whole new program on perks for former Presidents. There is much needed review and change. This could well be. But it should not be done by the five-man committee that deals with appropriations, and knows nothing about the library. We can put it to a vote, have it soon come to the floor, everybody will wonder what we are voting on, and not really know what they are voting on when the time comes.

It would seem to me we were able to work out an agreement with the sponsors—Mr. CHILES and Mr. ROTH were able to persuade the administration and Chairman HATFIELD of the Appropriations Committee to withdraw the hold on the bill—so they could proceed with it. Evidently there is going to be a hearing on that because I think they also agreed to some changes. That would be a good time to put this proposal and that one together. Both amendments deal with libraries. They are both dealing with members of the committee that are familar with the problem.

I do not want to put down my staff at all. But I do not think the authorizing committee staff has a great deal of experience when it comes to Presidential libraries.

I think that is where it belongs. I think because we do have the opportunity to work with the Governmental Affairs Committee that that is the place to do it. I have to oppose it as much as I hate to.

Again, I say I have the greatest respect for the Senator and his ability. Any time we can save money, I suppose I ought to grab it. But I would like to see the proper committee that looks over it make sure that we are going in the right direction to come forth not only with this part of the measure that the Senator is interested in but the entire review of past President's perks, if I can call it that.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to pursue the suggestion made by the distinguished manager of this legislation. He indicated that the Chiles-Roth legislation will come before the Senate when? Is there some suggestion that it would come up in September?

Mr. ABDNOR. I have not gotten that far. I was relieved to find that they must have thought so. They withdrew their amendment, and will vote on the bill itself in committee. I would have to believe they think it will. The chairman of the committee was a part of the discussion. But I must confess that I could not tell the Senator, nor can I give him the assurance it is going to come up. It is true there are a lot of bills yet to come up. But the point I did make is that they ought to go hand in hand, and be worked out together because they are closely related; that is, your proposal on libraries and Senator CHILES' proposal on libraries. I guess you two gentleman must have discussed this so one does not interfere with the other. I do not know. But it looks to me like they ought to be intermeshed and it would be better if they had it before the committee that fully understood the subject, and bringing up one bill out of the two will do the job we want done. That is all.

I can assure you. To have a piece of legislation dealing with Presidential libraries here of all places on an appropriation bill runs counter to our wishes. The basic proposal we think may pass some day. Apparently the administration and Mr. HATFIELD think it has a great prospect for passage now that they have agreed to go along with certain conditions. It can all be brought together. That is where it belongs. That is the only point I make. But I cannot tell you whether or not they have had the assurances that it is going to come up. You might ask the majority leader. I see he walked on the floor.

Mr. DECONCINI. Would the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. DECONCINI. The Senator has a good idea. I think the majority leader is on the floor right now. Maybe he can give us the answer to the question.

Mr. Leader, the question has been asked regarding the Chiles-Roth bill that was withdrawn as an amendment to this appropriation bill, whether or not there was some commitment to bring it up and when?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, would the Senator yield? I do not know. [Laughter.] I just walked through the Chamber.

I am caught unaware. But I can promise my friend I will look at it and see. As he knows, the time we have remaining before the Republican Convention—which is about 2½ weeks—is pretty well spoken for by appropriation bills, and then other matters that we can move in between appropriations bills. But I will be glad to try to do that. You know there is always the time after Labor Day when we can attempt to schedule it.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. DECONCINI. Am I correct in assuming that the Senator from Oregon withdrew his hold on that bill so there is no known opponent or opposition that would delay that bill coming forward?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, we only have one hold on the calendar at this time. If it comes off, I can give no guarantee there will not be another one. But as of this moment, I do not know of another one. Let me do this. I have not given a very satisfactory answer. But I just do not know yet. Let me check into that, and I will find out.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. With the amendment that is before us now, what happens if after 10 years these existing libraries fail to raise the fold-in money?

It is up to them to curtail and manage within whatever they raise, or make a decision to close them? Does the Senator have any escape hatch, any emergency provisions, or something assuming the library cannot raise the money logically?

Mr. CHAFEE. I thought of that question. I thought the keenminded Senator from Arizona might raise that point. It seems to me that at the end of 10 years—after all we are sending out the signal—either those libraries would have to be carried themselves through admission or that portion of the library devoted to the museum-like functions would have to be vastly reduced. In other words, the Federal Government is just going to get out of that business. We have wrestled with the Kennedy Center for many, many years and ever since I have been on the committee for some 7 years the Kennedy Center, the parking garage, the leaking roof have been before us.

We seem to always relent and come up with the money.

So I will just have to finesse in answer to that specific question and hope that the fear, if you would, that something drastic might happen would encourage the existing seven libraries to get hustling, and some of the libraries are far more museum-like than others. For example, the Hoover Library, I have not visited it, but it is my understanding that it is primarily a research center. Hyde Park is much the same, whereas the Johnson Library, as I understand it, is much more of a museum-like edifice than archival.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island. Let me say that I think the Senator has a good point, and something that ought to be looked at. I do have that concern. But dropping the ax even after 10 years—because I think these are of a national nature—there ought to be a way to fund them. Hopefully they could be funded from revenues charged to admission and what have you. But I hate to see it.

The other point is that I agree with the chairman of the subcommittee. Does the Senator from Rhode Island have a problem of putting this on the Chiles bill? It seems as if, particularly if we wait a little bit here, we might get some very encouraging news; that that bill is going to come up for a vote, and will be at least brought up here without any strong opposition that would indicate a delayed tactic.

Would the Senator be satisfied to put that on there if, in fact, that bill was coming forward before we adjourned sine die?

Mr. CHAFEE. I think the Senator makes a good suggestion. I am tempted by that.

The majority leader said he might look into this.

Let me inquire of the manager of the bill. Perhaps we could set this aside. Are there other matters that could be considered?

Mr. DECONCINI. The chairman advises that we are prepared to set this aside temporarily and go to the Levin amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. I then ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that I might temporarily set this aside and have it come up after the Levin amendment.

Mr. ABDNOR. That will be the last amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. Well, we might know something better by that time.

Would that be the correct parliamentary method of proceeding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the request is to temporarily lay aside the pending amendment, to recur after the disposition of the Levin amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. That is correct. I so ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3402

(Purpose: To express the Sense of the Congress that the use of the ZIP Code of a person's place of residence or work should not be used in the determination of such person's credit worthiness; and to request a report to the Congress on what statutory and regulatory measures are needed to prohibit such practice)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] proposes an amendment numbered 3402.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 17, after line 12, add the following new section:

REDLINING STUDY

It is the sense of the Congress that the use of the ZIP Code of a person's place of residence or place of work should not be used in the determination of such person's credit worthiness. The Federal Trade Commission, the four Federal financial supervisory agencies specified in section 803 of the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977 (12 U.S.C. 2902), and the United States Postal Service are requested to consider and report to the Congress by March 31, 1985, what statutory and regulatory measures are needed to prohibit such practice.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this amendment simply expresses the sense of the Congress that the ZIP code where a person happens to live should not be used to determine a person's creditworthiness. The amendment also requests that a report be made to the Congress by March 31, 1985, on what statutory and regulatory measures are needed to prohibit such a practice.

The stereotyping of people based on where they live is a social evil with very negative social consequences. The Congress has been instrumental in formulating legislation that insures equal credit opportunity. As long as a creditworthy person can be rejected on account of his or her place of residence, our work is incomplete.

When people in a neighborhood or other geographical area are told that the place where they live is the reason or a reason for their being denied credit, that neighborhood or that other geographical area is hurt as well as the people living in it.

Credit applicants should be considered on the basis of their individualized creditworthiness and not on the basis of spurious statistical correlations which a few companies have decided to utilize as part of a point system in establishing whether or not somebody gets credit. The resulting stereotyping and generalizing about certain regions of the country and particular neighborhoods contribute to a vicious cycle which adds to further decay of our cities and communities.

Mr. President, the Postal Service has no objection to this amendment. I hope we will hear something similar at this point from my friend from Alaska, Senator STEVENS. I have not heard back from him on this. What I would like to do, if I could, with the manager of the bill, is the following:

I do not believe that Senator STEVENS will have an objection, though I do not want to speak for him because we have not heard back officially. Something similar to this was adopted in the Governmental Affairs Committee a few years ago.

If the managers have no objection to this sense-of-the-Congress resolution, as I understand they do not, I would be happy, if Senator STEVENS has an objection later, that the matter be dropped in conference.

Mr. ABDNOR. I appreciate the offer of the Senator from Michigan because Senator STEVENS, I know, feels strongly about this. We have had problems in the past which have arisen concerning postal matters, and I feel we need his input.

With that understanding, if Senator STEVENS does not have an objection, I am happy to go along with this. We will drop it in conference if Senator STEVENS objects.

With that understanding, I would be more than happy to move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. I appreciate that. I would not want to make any representation I did not know was representing the opinion of the Senator from Alaska.

I would also like to thank Jackie Parker of my staff for all her work on this issue over the past several years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion of the amendment?

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept the amendment on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment (No. 3402) was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chafee amendment be temporarily laid aside to allow me to send an amendment to the desk.

Mr. SYMMS. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, does the Senator ask unanimous consent that the Chafee amendment be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. ABDNOR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3403

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, does the Senator from South Dakota have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota has the floor. He has sent an amendment to the desk. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] proposes an amendment numbered 3403.

Strike section 107 and strike section 110 of the bill, renumber the remaining sections as appropriate.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I am proposing an amendment that simply strikes redundant language contained in H.R. 5798 as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The language deals with matters within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I would strike both section 107 and section 110 of H.R. 5798. Section 107 attempts to repeal the capitalization limitation contained in 31 U.S.C. section 332 for the capital fund in the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is essentially a housekeeping matter for the Treasury Department, but it has already been achieved by enactment of section 442 of H.R. 4170, which the President signed into law last week. That section also repeals the capitalization limit, so there is no need for the present section 107.

Section 110 of H.R. 5798 prohibits use of funds to carry out any regulation taxing or collecting a tax under the Superfund program on certain copper, lead, and zinc compounds. Again, the purpose of this section has already been achieved, because section 1019 of H.R. 4170 made clear that these compounds are not taxed when they are in a transitory state during the process of smelting, refining, or otherwise extracting. The language is not identical, but the intent is the same. So again we have a redundant provision in section 110, and I move to strike both section 107 and section 110.

I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion on the amendment?

The amendment (No. 3403) was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, yesterday my colleagues from the State of Washington and the distinguished floor manager of the bill [Mr. ABDNOR] expressed some concern about the interest in our State for redistricting the customs district in the Northwest area to include southern Idaho in the Portland, OR, district, which would have a material impact on the number of Customs Service personnel in the Seattle Customs Service office. I think Senator BAUCUS also expressed a similar concern with regard to the Great Falls, MT, Customs Service office when this issue was discussed in the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I appreciate the concern of my colleagues. We are not going to offer any amendment on this bill. But I would like to assure my colleagues that it is not the intention of those of us who are seeking redistricting to cause any changes in the services that are now being provided in the Seattle or the Great Falls offices. There would probably be no diminution of the staff in Great Falls, and there would probably be no necessity for increasing the staff in Portland. I think it is important to recognize that our concern in Idaho is the port of Lewiston; everything that comes out of southern Idaho flows naturally into Portland. It is all down the Snake River—the transportation system, the communications system—to Portland. We have a great deal of paper products, wood pulp, and grain shipped out of Lewiston. It is just so much more natural for the people in southern Idaho to clear it through Portland, OR, than it is for us to clear it through Great Falls, MT, which is now the case.

As I said, Mr. President, we are not going to offer an amendment on this bill, but we would like Senators from the neighboring States to be aware of this fact. Senator PACKWOOD and I have discussed it at great length in the Finance Committee and elsewhere. We are not trying to diminish the available customs services for those people who use Seattle and Great Falls. But it would be a great convenience to the people in the Snake River Basin, which drains into the Columbia Basin, to have their customs work transferred from Great Falls, MT, to Portland, OR.

That is what the people in my State would like to have. I assure my colleagues that is our intent.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3401, AS MODIFIED

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment I have at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Rhode Island that until the Senator has lost the right to modify his amendment, which he may do as a matter of right, he may not offer an amendment to his own amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. I ask that I may modify my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. CHAFEE. I so ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The initial amendment of the Senator is modified by the language sent to the desk at this time.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Delete current subsection (c) and replace it with a new subsection as follows:

The terms of this amendment shall not apply to the libraries built or to be built by the incumbent or past Presidents of the United States.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask that that modification be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been modified as the Senator has requested.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that my amendment is acceptable to the managers of the bill, and if that is so, I will be extremely gratified.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for making his modification. I think it is a much better perspective, and so far as we are concerned on this side, we are ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I also thank the sponsor of the legislation for the modification. I think it helps the legislation considerably. I still question whether it belongs in this bill, but we are happy to accept it and go along with it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, we will not get bogged down in trivia like that.

Let us move on.

Mr. President, I move adoption of my amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment (No. 3401), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank all parties.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3404

(Purpose: To strike legislating language)

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] proposes an amendment numbered 3404.

Strike all of section 106, beginning on page 12, line 10 through page 13, line 8.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment strikes section 106 of the bill for the reason that section 106 includes in the bill, which, of course, is an appropriations bill, certain legislative matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. The provision is obscure, and in fact the Finance Committee staff has been trying to ascertain precisely what the meaning and the effect of the provision is. It relates to the liquidation of imported articles and practices of the U.S. Customs Service with respect to entry procedures for certain articles.

We believe that this is especially a case where the Finance Committee should take a look at a provision which does have some substantive significance so that we can better understand what is involved in this provision of the law. So basically it is a matter of committee jurisdiction, and for our purpose of trying to understand exactly what is involved in this provision, we would move to strike it from the bill.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I have to agree that this section is legislation. But I do want to make a note here that we included this particular language in the bill because we were asked to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was included in the fiscal year 1985 budget at the request of the administration.

I do know it is very necessary. I do know that Treasury and Customs need it. So I would certainly urge the passage of this in the Finance Committee as quickly as possible. And with that I, do accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The amendment (No. 3404) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to clarify that the statement of the Committee on Appropriations, regarding the broker reporting regulations under the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, does not reflect the statutory provisions adopted in 1982, and does not reflect the understanding of the Committee on Finance or the House and Senate conferees in approving the provision.

The statute gives broad authority to the IRS to require brokers to file returns, including returns regarding gross proceeds of sales effected for the broker's customers. The term broker is defined broadly to include dealers, barter exchanges, and any other person who, for consideration, regularly acts as a middleman with respect to property or services.

The report of the Committee on Finance explaining this provision states quite clearly that—

A broker or commodity dealer would be subject to the broker reporting requirement whether the sales effectuated for a customer were sales between the customer and a third party in which the broker acted as a middleman or sales between the broker and the customer in which the broker acted as a principal for its own account.

The Treasury regulations that require brokers to report their own purchases from their customers are entirely consistent with the statute and the congressional intent. Indeed, given the explicit statement in the Finance Committee report, the Treasury would be derelict in its duty if it failed to include this requirement.

The effect is simply not to exclude from gross proceeds reporting sales made through a broker or dealer that happen to be made to the broker or dealer for his or her own account. Since the purpose of the gross proceeds reporting requirement is to improve capital gains reporting by sellers of stock and commodities who sell through a broker or dealer, an exception for sales to a broker or dealer for his or her own account would make little sense, and could become a loophole that could be exploited by unscrupulous taxpayers.

I believe the rule adopted in 1982 makes sense. But if members of the Committee on Appropriations, or other members, are committed to modifying the provision, I believe the only appropriate course of action would be to seek a legislative change.

Despite the explicit statement in the Finance Committee report to which I referred, it is my understanding that some taxpayers have been advised that this requirement of the regulations is likely to be invalidated as being inconsistent with congressional intent. Taxpayers and tax advisers should be aware that they are proceeding at their own peril if they violate a requirement of the regulations which is both reasonable and clearly consistent with the congressional intent in enacting the provision.●

CUSTOMS SERVICE REORGANIZATIONS

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, it is important that we continue to tighten our rein on the Customs Service, by requiring that customs notify the appropriate congressional committees before it closes customs stations, reassigns customs officers, or otherwise reorganizes customs operations. After that haphazard reorganization schemes Customs has hatched over the past few years, we need to keep Customs under control.

I am glad that the Appropriations Committee report contains language requiring that Customs notify Congress, and receive our approval, before undertaking any significant reorganization plans. I intend to monitor the Customs Service closely to make sure that the report language is adhered to, and I hope that other concerned Senators will do the same.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, the Customs Service performs many important trade-related functions. These functions are especially important in Montana, which has a 300-mile border with Canada, our major trading partner. Customs operates 21 border stations in Montana, which process all kinds of imports, including ore concentrates, roofing materials, fertilizer, farm machinery, and oil field equipment. Many of these imports are critical to Montana's economy.

As a result, we are very concerned about the organization and operation of the Customs Service.

REORGANIZATION

Over the past few years, Customs has shifted resources from import processing to drug interdiction. To accomplish this, it's tried to reorganize some of its import-processing operations. For example, last year Customs undertook a so-called centralized appraisement plan that supposedly would have increased efficiency.

But it backfired. For Montana, centralized appraisement meant that two import specialists were moved from a city of 80,000 served by five commercial airlines and a bus system, to a city of 600 served by no commerical transportation whatsoever. What's more, the import specialists were moved to an entirely different customs district located hundreds of miles away from the district director who ostensibly supervises them.

This confusing shift was not isolated. A GAO report found that:

"Customs officials * * * have not prepared an official cost/benefit study for the proposed centralization," that "Customs has not prepared an official estimate of savings," that "the total cost of Government will be unknown until a cost/benefit study is prepared," that "the impact of centralized appraisement activities is unknown," and that Customs "did not conduct an analysis regarding the impact of removing import specialists from a given location."

THE BAUCUS AMENDMENT

Given these programs, we must keep a tight rein on Customs, to prevent more haphazard reorganizations.

To accomplish this, last year I offered an amendment to the Finance Committee's Customs Service authorization bill, requiring that Customs notify the appropriate congressional committees 3 months before it makes any significant reorganization.

The Finance Committee adopted my amendment. Subsequently, similar provisions were included in last year's Treasury appropriations bill and continuing resolution. This year, I offered the amendment again, and it is included in the Customs Service authorization bill that is pending on the calendar.

THIS YEAR'S APPROPRIATIONS BILLS

At the same time, the appropriations committees have reemphasized their own concern about Customs reorganization plans.

The House appropriations bill contains a provision prohibiting the use of appropriated funds to reorganize regions, districts, and stations or to centralize duty assessment or appraisement functions.

The bill we are considering today also places limits on Customs' reorganization authority. The Appropriations Committee report says that before Customs undertakes any significant reorganization, it should notify the Appropriations Committee, notify and consult with the affected Congressmen, and receive final approval from the Appropriations Committee.

This report language essentially assures that the Congress will be notified of, and approve, any significant reorganizations before they occur.

That's what we must continue to do if we are to prevent haphazard Customs Service reorganization plans from impairing the operation of our border ports and impeding the free flow of trade.

I thank the distinguished floor managers and other members of the Appropriations Committee for their work on this issue. I look forward to working further with them, to maintain strict oversight of the Customs Service, in the future.●

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the statement of the Committee on Appropriations regarding the Tax Code's penalty for frivolous returns is in accord with the intent of Congress when the penalty was added to the law by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. Indeed, the statutory language of section 6702 of the Internal Revenue Code is clear on its face in this regard. The penalty only applies to a tax return or purported tax return, that "does not contain information on which the substantial correctness of the self-assessment may be judged, or contains information that on its face indicates that the self-assessment is substantially incorrect."

Writing a comment in the margins of the tax return, or including a protest with the return, is not within the scope of the provision unless the writing or protest itself indicates that the return is substantially incorrect. For example, a marginal comment or protest stating that the taxpayer had intentionally omitted wage income from the return as a protest would be information indicating on its face that the tax return is substantially incorrect. However, a comment merely protesting the income tax, a specific provision of the income tax or its administration by the IRS, could not give rise to the penalty. Moreover, this penalty is not applicable to a return indicating the correct tax where the taxpayer refuses to pay the tax.

Moreover, I am pleased to report that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has assured me that the IRS has already established procedures to ensure that the IRS applies the provisions of section 6702 in accord with this understanding of Congress' intent.●

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I support the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government appropriation bill as reported by the committee.

I would like to commend the distinguished chairman, Senator HATFIELD, and the subcommittee chairman, Senator ABDNOR, for reporting this bill so expeditiously after House action.

H.R. 5798 provides $12.7 billion in budget authority for the Department of the Treasury, the Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and other Government agencies, such as the Office of Personnel Management and the General Services Administration.

With outlays from prior-year budget authority and adjustments to conform mandatory programs to budget resolution assumptions, fiscal year 1985 outlays associated with this bill would be $12.9 billion.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has not yet made its 302(b) allocations to subcommittees under a first budget resolution.

When Appropriations Committee subcommittee allocations are available, I will insert into the RECORD tables comparing the spending in this bill to this subcommittee's allocation.

Nondefense discretionary spending in the bill is consistent with the guidance of $7 billion in budget authority given to the subcommittee by the full Senate Appropriations Committee on June 14, 1984. Mr. President, I ask that a table showing this relationship be inserted into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Again, Mr. President, I support this bill as reported by the committee.

The table follows:

Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Subcommittee—Fiscal year 1985 non-defense discretionary budget authority

	In billion of dollars
Senate-reported bill (H.R. 5798)	7.0
Subcommittee total	7.0
Committee guidance [1]	7.0
House-passed level [2]	6.9
President's request	6.6
Subcommittee total compared to:
Committee guidance [1]

	In billion of dollars
House-passed level [2]	+0.1
President's request	+0.4

[1] Non-defense discretionary cap guidance approved by the Appropriations Committee on June 14, 1984.

[2] Adjusted for possible later requirements.●

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I know of no other amendment, and I would therefore move to third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAKER], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] would vote "nay."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 78, nays 15, as follows:

NOT VOTING—7

So the bill (H.R. 5798), as amended, was passed.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DECONCINI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing of the two Houses thereon and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer [Mr. COCHRAN] appointed Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. STENNIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, the action just taken by the Senate represents a red letter day. It marks the first time since September 1979 that the Senate has passed a Treasury-Postal Service appropriation bill on its own. It is good to know that it is not going to be part of a continuing resolution. I hope the passage of this bill will set the tone for future Treasury-Postal Service bills and we continue to receive their passage.

Mr. President, again I thank Senator DECONCINI for his assistance. We work extremely well together. I think that is one of the reasons we were able to get this bill passed. He is the most cooperative gentleman I have ever had to work with on the committee, and I thank him from the bottom of my heart. He certainly deserves the highest accolades for his indepth knowledge of the agencies funded in this bill. Of course, we could not have gotten along without him.

I also thank the subcommittee staff, Bobby Mills and Olga Trollinger, and Chuck Parkinson. They are the ones who have had to iron out the wrinkles as we went along. They did a great job, devoting long and dedicated hours to producing what I think is a great piece of legislation.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ABDNOR. Yes.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman. I think credit goes to the staff. They did a lot of work. They spent a lot of time before the chairman and I got into it. But, quite frankly, this would not have happened without Senator ABDNOR's willingness to take the leadership role and insist that we move expeditiously in bringing this bill before the full committee and, with Chairman HATFIELD's backing, to the floor.

The chairman is a bit modest in passing around the applause, but he is that type of individual. I thank him very much. It is a pleasure to work with him on his committee.

Mr. President, it is a red-letter day that we passed the bill. I hope this is a precedent for the future. I thank the chairman and the staff.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to congratulate the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] for his capable management of the bill and his colleagues on the other side of the aisle, especially the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI]. They managed one of the regular appropriations bills in the record time, and I thank them and congratulate them. I also express my appreciation to Senator HATFIELD, chairman of the full Appropriations Committee.

This is the first Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill to pass the Senate, I am told, in the last 3½ years. The last time a postal bill was passed was in fiscal year 1980. I think that is another measure of the diligence and success of the distinguished managers of the bill.

Mr. President, as has been widely advertised and announced previously, it is the intention of the leadership on this side to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the RCRA bill, so-called, at the conclusion of the Treasury-Postal bill.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I should like to join in the commendation for the fine job Senator ABDNOR did as chairman of that committee. The reason why I voted against the bill was strictly because of the language in the bill dealing with Mrs. Burford. But I certainly feel that the Senator from South Dakota did an excellent job in bringing the bill to the Senate and to final passage, and he deserves our commendation.

Mr. BAKER. I agree with the Senator, and I thank him for his remarks.

SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 757) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize funds for fiscal years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983".

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 2. Section 2007(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "and" immediately following "1981," and by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof ", $43,628,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, $47,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, September 30, 1986, and September 30, 1987".

SEC. 3. Section 3011(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "and" immediately following "1981" and by inserting immediately following "1982" the following: "$45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1983, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, and $52,500,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years 1986 and 1987".

SMALL QUANTITY GENERATOR REGULATION AND STUDY

SEC. 4. Section 3002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) STANDARDS.—" after "SEC. 3002." and by adding the following new subsection:

"(b) HAZARDOUS WASTE FROM SMALL QUANTITY GENERATORS.—(1) Beginning two hundred and seventy days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, any hazardous waste listed or identified under section 3001 which is part of a total quantity generated by a generator generating greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms during one calendar month and which is shipped off the premises on which such waste is generated shall be accompanied by a copy of the Environmental Protection Agency uniform hazardous waste manifest form signed by the generator. This form shall contain the following information:

"(A) the name and address of the generator of the waste;

"(B) the United States Department of Transportation description of the waste, including the proper shipping name, hazard class, and identification number (UN/NA), if applicable;

"(C) the number and type of containers;

"(D) the quantity of waste being transported; and

"(E) the name and address of the facility designated to receive the waste.

If subparagraph (B) is not applicable, in lieu of the description referred to in such subparagraph (B), the form shall contain the Environmental Protection Agency identification number, or a generic description of the waste, or a description of the waste by hazardous waste characteristic. Additional requirements related to the manifest shall apply only if determined necessary by the Administrator to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator is authorized to apply the requirements of this paragraph to hazardous waste which is part of a total quantity generated by a generator generating less than one hundred kilograms during one calendar month.

"(2)(A) Any hazardous waste identified in accordance with section 3001 on the basis of the characteristic of ignitability, reactivity, or corrosivity or listed under section 3001, which is part of a total quantity generated by a generator generating greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms during one calendar month when such waste is transported off the premises on which such waste is generated, shall be placed in suitable, sound, nonleaking containers as follows:

"(i) off-specification materials, residual materials, and materials from spill cleanup may be placed in the original containers of such materials, or in equivalent containers labeled with the same information as the original containers and suitably constructed to contain such materials;

"(ii) a waste may be placed in a Department of Transportation specification hazardous material container with prescribed labeling in compliance with the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act; and

"(iii) other wastes may be placed in a container or otherwise handled by a method (including a method of identification or labeling consistent with this subparagraph) mutually agreed by the generator and the transporter of such wastes.

Wastes that are not incompatible may be aggregated in such suitable containers. For the purpose of this subparagraph, aggregation means the mixing of two or more types of wastes within the innermost container.

"(B) Except as provided in paragraph (7) or under State law, a generator generating waste subject to this paragraph shall not be subject to additional requirements for manifesting, recordkeeping, or reporting beyond those in regulations promulgated prior to January 1, 1983.

"(3) Until the effective date of regulations promulgated under paragraph (7), or as specified in paragraph (7)(C), any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, which is not treated, stored, or disposed of at a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005, shall be disposed of only in a facility which is permitted, licensed, or registered by a State to manage municipal or industrial solid waste.

"(4) The provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) shall take effect on the date two hundred and seventy days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983.

"(5) Requirements under section 3004 for storage of hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms shall provide for onsite storage in tanks and containers of such hazardous waste for up to one hundred and eighty days, unless the generator must ship or haul such waste over two hundred miles in which case such requirements shall provide for onsite storage for up to two hundred and seventy days of up to six thousand kilograms of such hazardous waste.

"(6) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect, modify, or render invalid any requirements applicable to any acutely hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, in regulations promulgated prior to January 1, 1983. Any additional acutely hazardous waste listed under section 3001 after January 1, 1983, shall be subject to all regulations applicable to acutely hazardous wastes.

"(7)(A) The Administrator in cooperation with the States shall conduct a study of hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 of this Act which is generated by individual generators in total quantities for each generator during any calendar month of less than one thousand kilograms. The Administrator may require from such generators information as may be necessary to conduct the study. Such study shall include a characterization of the number and type of such generators, the quantity and characteristics of hazardous waste generated by such generators, State requirements applicable to such generators, the individual and industry waste management practices of such generators, the potential costs of modifying those practices and the impact of such modifications on national treatment and disposal facility capacity, and the threat to the protection of human health and the environment and the employees of transporters or others involved in solid waste management posed by such hazardous wastes or such management practices. Such study shall specifically address whether the requirements of paragraph (2) should apply to hazardous wastes identified on the basis of the characteristic of extraction procedure toxicity or additional characteristics promulgated under section 3001(b)(5). Such study shall be submitted to the Congress not later than March 31, 1985.

"(B) Based upon the study required by subparagraph (A) and other information available to the Administrator and after consultation with the States, the Administrator shall promulgate not later than March 31, 1986, additional regulations establishing such requirements under this section and sections 3003, 3004, and 3005 of this Act for hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such requirements may supplement the requirements of paragraphs (1) through (5) of this subsection and may distinguish among classes and categories of generators or waste, and may vary from the requirements applicable to hazardous waste generated in quantities greater than one thousand kilograms during any calendar month, to the extent the Administrator determines such standards are adequate to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator shall consider State requirements applicable to generators of hazardous wastes which generate such wastes in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms per month in promulgating such regulations and shall explain differences between State requirements and regulations promulgated under this subparagraph. Except as provided in paragraph (5), regulations promulgated under this paragraph shall provide that treatment, storage, or disposal of a hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms occur only at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005. The Administrator may establish in such regulations a total quantity of wastes generated by a generator during any calendar month, not to exceed one hundred kilograms, for which disposal may occur in compliance with paragraph (3) rather than the preceding sentence, if the Administrator determines that such compliance will be adequate to protect human health and the environment. Such quantity may vary for different wastes or classes of wastes.

"(C) In the case no regulations in accordance with subparagraph (B) of this paragraph have been promulgated prior to March 31, 1986, after such date—

"(i) all treatment, storage, or disposal of any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms shall occur only at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005;

"(ii) generators of such waste shall file manifest exception reports as required of generators producing quantities greater than one thousand kilograms per month except that such reports shall be filed by January 31, for any waste shipment occurring in the last half of the preceeding calendar year, and by July 31, for any waste shipment occurring in the first half of the calendar year; and

"(iii) generators of such waste shall retain for three years a copy of the manifest signed by the designated facility that has received the waste.

"(D) The Administrator shall undertake activities to inform and educate waste generators of their responsibilities under this section during the period after enactment to help assure compliance.".

LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) STANDARDS.—" after "SEC. 3004." and by adding the following new subsections:

"(b) LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS.—(1) The Congress finds that certain classes of land disposal facilities are not capable of assuring long-term containment of certain hazardous wastes, and that to avoid substantial risk to human health and the environment, reliance on land disposal should be minimized and land disposal, particularly landfill and surface impoundment, should be the least favored method for managing hazardous wastes. Therefore, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for hearings and after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, promulgate regulations prohibiting the land disposal of hazardous wastes, except for methods of land disposal of one or more such wastes which the Administrator determines will be protective of human health and the environment. If the Administrator determines that a method of land disposal of a hazardous waste will be protective of human health and the environment, he shall promptly publish in the Federal Register notice of such determination together with an explanation of the basis for such determination. The Administrator shall take into account the persistence, toxicity, mobility, and propensity to bioaccumulate of such hazardous waste, and the potential effect of such waste on the integrity of containment mechanisms.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, if a specified waste contains significant concentrations of one or more hazardous constituents that is highly toxic, highly mobile, or has a strong propensity to bioaccumulate, a method of land disposal may not be determined to be protective of human health and the environment for such specified hazardous waste, unless upon application by an interested person it has been demonstrated to the Administrator, to a reasonable degree of certainty, that there will be no migration of such constituents from the disposal unit or injection zone for as long as the wastes remain hazardous.

"(3) A prohibition in regulations under this subsection shall be effective immediately upon promulgation, unless the Administrator establishes another effective date with respect to a specific hazardous waste on the basis of the earliest date on which adequate alternative treatment, recovery, or disposal capacity which protects human health and the environment will be available, which shall in no event be later than two years after the date of promulgation. The Administrator, after notice and opportunity for comment and after consultation with appropriate State agencies in all affected States, may grant an extension of such effective date on a case-by-case basis for up to one year, renewable for no more than one additional year, where the applicant demonstrates that there is a binding contractual commitment to construct or otherwise provide such alternative capacity but due to circumstances beyond the control of such applicant such alternative capacity cannot reasonably be made available by such effective date.

"(4) Not later than July 1, 1985, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for dioxin-containing hazardous wastes and those hazardous wastes numbered F001, F002, F003, F004, and F005 in regulations promulated by the Administrator under section 3001 (40 C.F.R. 261.31), as those regulations are in effect on July 1, 1983;

"(5) Not later than thirty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for the following hazardous wastes:

"(A) Liquid hazardous wastes, including free liquids associated with any solid or sludge, containing free cyanides at concentrations greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/l.

"(B) Liquid hazardous wastes, including free liquids associated with any solid or sludge, containing the following dissolved metals (or elements) or compounds of these metals (or elements) at concentrations greater than or equal to those specified below:

"(i) arsenic and/or compounds (as As) 500 mg/l;

"(ii) cadmium and/or compounds (as Cd) 100 mg/l;

"(iii) chromium (VI and/or compounds (as Cr VI)) 500 mg/l;

"(iv) lead and/or compounds (as Pb) 500 mg/l;

"(v) mercury and/or compounds (as Hg) 20 mg/l;

"(vi) nickel and/or compounds (as Ni) 134 mg/l;

"(vii) selenium and/or compounds (as Se) 100 mg/l; and

"(viii) thallium and/or compounds (as Th) 130 mg/l.

"(C) Liquid hazardous waste having a pH less than or equal to two (2.0).

"(D) Liquid hazardous wastes containing polychlorinated biphenyls at concentrations greater than or equal to 50 ppm.

"(E) Hazardous wastes containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/kg.

When necessary to protect human health and the environment, the Administrator shall substitute more stringent concentration levels than the levels specified in subparagraphs (A) through (E).

"(6)(A) Not later than twelve months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall publish a schedule for deciding whether or not to prohibit in accordance with paragraph (1) the land disposal of each hazardous waste listed under section 3001. Such schedule shall require that the Administrator must make such decisions for at least one-third of all such listed wastes by the date thirty-two months after the date of such enactment, for at least two-thirds of all such listed wastes by the date forty-two months after the date of such enactment, and for all such listed wastes by the date fifty-two months after the date of such enactment.

"(B) Not later than the date specified in subparagraph (A) for each waste on the schedule published under such subparagraph, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for each such waste.

"(C) Not later than fifty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for each hazardous waste identified on the basis of any toxicity characteristics.

"(D) Not later than thirty-two months after the listing of a hazardous waste listed after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for such waste.

"(7) Simultaneously with the promulgation of regulations under paragraph (1) prohibiting one or more methods of land disposal of a particular hazardous waste, and as appropriate thereafter, the Administrator shall, after notice and an opportunity for hearings and after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, promulgate regulations specifying those methods of treatment, if any, which are necessary before such method or methods of disposal of such hazardous waste would be protective of human health and the environment. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection 3010(b), immediately upon the promulgation of regulations under this paragraph, the disposal of such hazardous waste by such method or methods is allowed if such hazardous waste has first been treated by a method specified in regulations promulgated under this paragraph.

"(8)(A) Any hazardous waste prohibited under this subsection from disposal in a surface impoundment may be treated or stored in a surface impoundment only if that impoundment is equipped with at least one liner.

"(B) For the purposes of this section, 'disposal' shall include the placement of hazardous waste in a surface impoundment or a waste pile for a period of more than six months, regardless of whether it is intended that the hazardous waste will be removed before closure of the facility.

"(9) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under paragraph (1) with respect to a waste referred to in paragraph (4) or in paragraph (5) by the deadline specified in such paragraph, effective six months after such deadline, and until the Administrator promulgates regulations under paragraph (1), such waste may be disposed of in a landfill or a surface impoundment only if such facility is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f)(1) of this Act. This paragraph shall not apply to contaminated soil and debris from the cleanup or removal of any release of a hazardous substance.

"(c) LIQUIDS IN LANDFILLS.—Not later than one year after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate final regulations which minimize the disposal of liquid containerized hazardous waste in landfills (including the minimization of free liquids by other means than the addition of absorbent material, where technologically feasible), and which prohibit the disposal of bulk or noncontainerized liquid hazardous wastes in landfills. Prior to the promulgation of such final regulations, the requirements in regulations under this section respecting the disposal of landfills of liquid hazardous waste and free liquids contained in hazardous waste in effect as of October 1, 1982, shall remain in effect.

"(d) BAN ON DUST SUPPRESSION.—The use of waste or used oil or other material, which is contaminated or mixed with dioxin or any other hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 (other than a waste identified solely on the basis of ignitability), for dust suppression or road treatment is prohibited.

"(e) BAN ON CERTAIN WELLS.—Effective one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, no hazardous waste may be disposed of by underground injection into or above any formation which contains, within one-half mile of the well used for such underground injection, an underground source of drinking water.".

(b) Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following: "The owner or operator of a waste pile qualifying for the authorization to operate under this subsection shall be subject to the same requirements for liners and leachate collection systems or equivalent protection provided in regulations promulgated by the Administrator under section 3004 before October 1, 1982, or revised under section 3004(f), for new facilities receiving individual permits under subsection (c) of this section, with respect to each new unit, replacement of an existing unit, or lateral expansion of an existing unit that is within the waste management area identified in the permit application submitted under this section, and with respect to waste received beginning six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983. The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment qualifying for the authorization to operate under this subsection shall be subject to the requirements of section 3004(f), with respect to each new unit, replacement of an existing unit, or lateral expansion of an existing unit that is within the waste management area identified in the permit application submitted under this section, and with respect to waste received beginning six months after such date of enactment. The owner or operator of each such unit shall notify the Administrator (or the State, if appropriate) at least sixty days prior to receiving waste. The Administrator (or the State) shall require the filing of a completed permit application within six months of receipt of such notice, for each facility submitting such notice. In the case of any unit in which the liner and leachate collection system has been installed pursuant to the requirements of this subsection and in good faith compliance with the Administrator's regulations and guidance documents governing liners and leachate collection systems, no liner or leachate collection system which is different from that which was so installed pursuant to this subsection shall be required for such unit by the Administrator when issuing the first permit under this section to such facility. The Administrator may, under section 3004, amend the requirements for liners and leachate collection systems required under this subsection as may be necessary to provide additional protection for human health and the environment.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(g) The standards concerning ground water monitoring, unsaturated zone monitoring, and corrective action, which are applicable under section 3004 to new landfills, surface impoundments, land treatment units, and waste-pile units required to be permitted under subsection (c) shall also apply to any landfill, surface impoundment, land treatment unit, or waste-pile unit qualifying for the authorization to operate under subsection (e) which receives hazardous waste after July 26, 1982.".

MINIMUM TECHNOLOGICAL REQUIREMENTS AND PERMIT LIFE

SEC. 6. (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following additional new subsection:

"(f) MINIMUM TECHNOLOGICAL REQUIREMENTS.—The regulations under subsection (a) of this section shall be revised from time to time to take into account improvements in the technology of control and measurement. At a minimum, such regulations shall require, and a permit issued after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983 by the Administrator or a State shall require—

"(1) for each new landfill or surface impoundment, each new landfill or surface impoundment unit at an existing facility, each replacement of an existing landfill or surface impoundment unit, and each lateral expansion of an existing landfill or surface impoundment unit, for which a completed application for a permit under section 3005(c) is received after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, with respect to all waste received after the issuance of such permit, the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above (in the case of a landfill) and between such liners (unless the owner or operator demonstrates to the Administrator, and the Administrator finds for such landfill or surface impoundment, that alternative design and operating practices, together with location characteristics, will prevent the migration of any hazardous constituents into the ground water or surface water at least as effectively as such liners and leachate collection systems), together with ground water monitoring; and

"(2) for each incinerator which receives a permit under section 3005(c) after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the attainment of the minimum destruction and removal efficiency required by regulations in effect on June 24, 1982.

In addition, such regulations shall specify criteria for the acceptable location of new and existing treatment, storage, or disposal facilities as necessary to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator shall determine whether to modify the requirements of paragraph (1) for liners and leachate collection systems in the case of landfills or surface impoundments receiving solid waste from the extraction, beneficiation or processing of ores and minerals, including phosphate rock and overburden from the mining of uranium ore, if such solid waste is subject to regulation under this subtitle, and shall, if he so determines, so modify such requirements to the extent such modified requirements assure protection of human health and the environment.".

(b) Section 3005(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following: "Any permit under this section shall be for a fixed term, not to exceed ten years in the case of any land disposal facility, incinerator or other treatment facility. Each permit for a land disposal facility shall be reviewed five years after date of issuance or reissuance and shall be modified as necessary to assure that the facility continues to comply with the currently applicable requirements of this section and section 3004. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude the Administrator from reviewing and modifying a permit at any time during its term. Review of any application for a permit renewal shall consider improvements in the state of control and measurement technology as well as changes in applicable regulations. Each permit issued under this section shall contain such terms and conditions as the Administrator (or the State) determines necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

CONTINUING RELEASES AT PERMITTED FACILITIES

SEC. 7. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following additional new subsection:

"(g) CONTINUING RELEASES AT PERMITTED FACILITIES.—Standards promulgated under this section shall require, and a permit issued after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983 by the Administrator or a State shall require, corrective action for all releases of hazardous waste or constituents from any solid waste management unit at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility seeking a permit under this subtitle, regardless of the time at which waste was placed in such unit. Permits issued under section 3005 shall contain schedules of compliance for such corrective action (where such corrective action cannot be completed prior to issuance of the permit) and assurances of financial responsibility for completing such corrective action.".

LISTING/DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

SEC. 8. Section 3001(b) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4)(A) The regulations promulgated under paragraph (1) shall provide that, when evaluating a petition to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste, the Administrator shall consider criteria, constituents, or other related factors, other than those for which the waste was listed, if the Administrator has a reasonable basis to believe that such additional criteria, constituents, or other related factors could cause such waste to be listed as a hazardous waste. The Administrator shall grant or deny such petitions only after notice and opportunity for public hearing. If the basis for denial of such petition is the presence of additional constituents which could cause such waste to be hazardous, the Administrator shall amend the basis for the listing of such waste to indicate the additional constituents.

"(B) The temporary granting of such a petition prior to the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983 without the opportunity for public comment and the full consideration of such comment shall not continue for more than twelve months after the date such petition is granted or six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, whichever is later. If a final decision to grant or deny such a petition has not been promulgated after notice and opportunity for public comment within the time limit prescribed by the preceding sentence, any such temporary granting of such petition shall cease to be in effect.

"(C) Any petition to exclude from regulation a waste generated at a particular facility shall be accompanied by adequate information to evaluate such petition, including information on samples of such waste determined to be representative on the basis of guidelines for the development and submission of such information published by the Administrator. Such information shall be certified by a responsible official of such facility (as determined under regulations promulgated under section 3005) to be accurate, complete, and representative, within the knowledge of employees or contractors of such facility.

"(5) For the purpose of assuring the timely completion of regulations identifying the characteristics of hazardous waste and the listing of additional particular hazardous wastes, as required by paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Administrator shall—

"(A) not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, identify those particular wastes for which the Agency intends to decide whether to list as hazardous waste within two years after such date of enactment, and those particular wastes for which the Agency intends to decide within five years after such date of enactment;

"(B) not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, promulgate regulations listing chlorinated dioxin- and dibenzofuran-containing wastes as hazardous wastes in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(C) not later than two years after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, (i) promulgate regulations identifying additional characteristics of hazardous waste, including measures or indicators of toxicity; and (ii) reach decisions on all wastes identified in accordance with subparagraph (A) for decision within two years and for each such waste either promulgate regulations listing such particular hazardous waste or publish a statement as to why such waste should not be listed as hazardous waste; and

"(D) not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, determine the appropriateness of using the extraction procedure toxicity characteristic for evaluating petitions to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste, and, not later than two years after such date of enactment, make such changes as are necessary in the extraction procedure toxicity characteristic to predict the leaching potential of wastes upon exposure to leaching media more aggressive than the media utilized in the regulation in effect as of such date of enactment.

"(6) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and the National Toxicology Program, shall also identify or list those hazardous wastes which shall be subject to the provisions of this subtitle solely because of the presence in such wastes of certain constituents (such as identified carcinogens, mutagens, or teratogens) at levels in excess of levels which endanger human health.".

BURNING AND BLENDING OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

SEC. 9. (a) NOTICE.—(1) Section 3010 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following after the first sentence thereof: "Not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983—

"(1) the owner or operator of any facility which produces a fuel (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, (B) from such hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material, (C) from used oil, or (D) from used oil and any other material;

"(2) the owner or operator of any facility (other than a single- or two-family residence) which burns for purposes of energy recovery any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and shall file with the Administrator (and with the State in the case of a State with an authorized hazardous waste program) a notification stating the location and general description of the facility, together with a description of the identified or listed hazardous waste involved and, in the case of a facility referred to in paragraph (1) or (2), a description of the production or energy recovery activity carried out at the facility and such other information as the Administrator deems necessary. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' also includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (i) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (ii) distributed for use as a fuel, or (iii) burned as a fuel. Notification shall not be required under the second sentence of this subsection in the case of facilities (such as residential boilers) where the Administrator determines that such notification is not necessary in order for the Administrator to obtain sufficient information respecting current practices of facilities using hazardous waste for energy recovery. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). Nothing in this subsection shall affect regulatory determinations under section 3014 (as amended by the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980).".

"(3) any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001

(2) Section 3010 of such Act is amended by striking out "the preceding sentence" each place it occurs and substituting "the preceding provisions".

(b) STANDARDS.—(1) Section 3004 of such Act is further amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(h) HAZARDOUS WASTE USED AS FUEL.—(1) Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, and after notice and opportunity for public hearing, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing such—

"(1) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which produce a fuel, (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or (B) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material;

"(2) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which burn, for purposes of energy recovery, any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and

"(3) standards applicable to any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001

as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such standards may include any of the requirements set forth in paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (a) as may be appropriate. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). For purposes of this subsection, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (A) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (B) distributed for use as a fuel, or (C) burned as a fuel.

"(2)(A) This subsection, subsection (i), and subsection (j) shall not apply to petroleum refinery wastes containing oil which are converted into petroleum coke at the same facility at which such wastes were generated, unless the resulting coke product would exceed one or more characteristics by which a substance would be identified as a hazardous waste under section 3001.

"(B) The Administrator may exempt from the requirements of this subsection, subsection (i), or subsection (j) facilities which burn de minimis quantities of hazardous waste as fuel, as defined by the Administrator, if the wastes are burned at the same facility at which such wastes are generated; the waste is burned to recover useful energy, as determined by the Administrator on the basis of the design and operating characteristics of the facility and the heating value and other characteristics of the waste; and the waste is burned in a type of device determined by the Administrator to be designed and operated at a destruction and removal efficiency sufficient such that protection of human health and environment is assured.".

"(i) LABELING.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, until such time as the Administrator promulgates standards under subsection (h) specifically superceding this requirement, it shall be unlawful for any person who is required to file a notification in accordance with paragraph (1) or (3) of section 3010 to distribute or market any fuel which is produced from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 if the invoice or the bill of sale fails—

"(A) to bear the following statement: 'WARNING: THIS FUEL CONTAINS HAZARDOUS WASTES', and

"(B) to list the hazardous wastes contained therein.

Beginning ninety days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, such statement shall be located in a conspicuous place on every such invoice or bill of sale and shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layouts, or color with other printed matter on the invoice or bill of sale.

"(2) Unless the Administrator determines otherwise as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, this subsection shall not apply to fuels produced from petroleum refining waste containing oil if (A) such materials are generated and reinserted onsite into the refining process; (B) contaminants are removed; and (C) such refining waste containing oil is converted along with normal process streams into petroleum-derived fuel products at a facility at which crude oil is refined into petroleum products and which is classified as a number SIC 2911 facility under the Office of Management and Budget Standard Industrial Classification Manual.

"(3) Unless the Administrator determines otherwise as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, this subsection shall not apply to fuels produced from used oil, resulting from normal petroleum refining production and transportation practices, if (A) contaminants are removed; and (B) such used oil is converted along with normal process streams into petroleum-derived fuel products at a facility at which crude oil is refined into petroleum products and which is classified as a number SIC 2911 facility under the Office of Management and Budget Standard Classification manual.

"(j) RECORDKEEPING.—Not later than twelve months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations requiring that any person who is required to file a notification in accordance with subparagraph (1), (2), or (3), of paragraph 3010(a) must maintain such records regarding fuel blending, distribution, or use as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

(2) Section 3003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) FUEL FROM HAZARDOUS WASTE.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983 and after opportunity for public hearing, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing standards, applicable to transporters of fuel produced (1) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or (2) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such standards may include any of the requirements set forth in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (a) as may be appropriate.".

MANDATORY INSPECTIONS

SEC. 10. Section 3007 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following new subsection after subsection (a) and by redesignating succeeding subsections accordingly:

"(b) MANDATORY INSPECTIONS.—(1) Beginning twelve months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, every facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste for which a permit is required under section 3005 of this title shall be thoroughly and regularly inspected no less often than every two years as to its compliance with this subtitle and the regulations promulgated thereunder. The Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, promulgate regulations governing the minimum frequency and manner of such inspections, including the manner in which records of such inspections shall be maintained. The Administrator may distinguish between classes and categories of facilities commensurate with the risks posed by each class or category.

"(2) Not later than six months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall submit to the Congress a report on the potential for inspections of hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facilities by nongovernmental inspectors as a supplement to inspections conducted by officers, employees, or representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency or States having authorized hazardous waste programs or operating under a cooperative agreement with the Administrator. Such report shall be prepared in cooperation with the States, insurance companies offering environmental impairment insurance, and independent companies providing inspection services, and other such groups as appropriate. Such report shall contain recommendations on provisions and requirements for a program of private inspections to supplement governmental inspections.".

FEDERAL FACILITIES

SEC. 11. (a) Section 3007 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended by section 10 of this Act, is further amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(d) FACILITIES OPERATED BY A FEDERAL AGENCY.—Beginning twelve months after enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall, and the State, in the case of a State with an authorized hazardous waste program, may undertake no less often than every two years a thorough inspection of each facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste which is operated by a Federal agency as to its compliance with this subtitle and the regulations promulgated thereunder. The records of such inspections shall be available to the public as provided in subsection (c).

"(e) STATE-OPERATED FACILITIES.—The Administrator shall undertake a thorough inspection of every facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste which is operated by a State or local government for which a permit is required under section 3005 of this title. The records of such inspection shall be available to the public as provided in subsection (c).".

(b) Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"INVENTORY OF FEDERAL AGENCY HAZARDOUS WASTE FACILITIES

"SEC. 3015. (a) FEDERAL AGENCY INVENTORY.—Each Federal agency shall, within one year after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, undertake a continuing program to compile, publish, and submit to the Administrator and the State (in the case of States having an authorized hazardous waste program) an inventory describing the location of each site which the Federal agency owns or operates where hazardous waste has at any time been treated, stored or disposed of. Such inventory shall contain—

"(1) a description of the location of the sites at which any such treatment, storage, or disposal has taken place before the date on which permits are required under section 3005 for such storage or disposal;

"(2) such information relating to the amount, nature, and toxicity of the hazardous waste at each such site as may be practicable to obtain and as may be necessary to determine the extent of any health hazard which may be associated with such site;

"(3) the name and address and responsible agency for each such site, determined as of the date of preparation of the inventory;

"(4) an identification of the types or techniques of waste treatment, storage, or disposal which have been used at each site; and

"(5) information concerning the current status of the site, including information respecting whether or not hazardous waste is currently being treated, stored, or disposed of at such site (and if not, the date on which such activity ceased) and information respecting the nature of any other activity currently carried out at such site.

"(b) ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY PROGRAM.—If the Administrator determines that any Federal agency under subsection (a) is not adequately providing information respecting the sites referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall notify the chief official of such Agency. If within ninety days following such notification, the Federal agency has not undertaken a program to adequately provide such information, the Administrator shall carry out the inventory program for such agency.".

FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 12. (a) Section 3008(d) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended as follows:

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) insert after "knowingly transports" the following: "or causes to be transported", and

(B) strike out "section 3005 (or 3006 in the case of a State program)" and substitute "this subtitle";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) strike out "either";

(B) strike out "section 3005 (or 3006 in the case of a State program)" and substitute "this subtitle"; and

(C) strike out subparagraph (B) and substitute:

"(B) in knowing violation of any material condition or requirement of such permit; or

"(C) in knowing violation of any material condition or requirement of any applicable interim status regulations or standards;"; and

(3) strike out all after paragraph (2) and substitute:

"(3) knowingly omits material information or makes any false material statement or representation in any application, label, manifest, record, report, permit, or other document filed, maintained, or used for purposes of compliance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator (or by a State in the case of an authorized State program) under this subtitle;

"(4) knowingly generates, stores, treats, transports, disposes of, exports, or otherwise handles any hazardous waste (whether such activity took place before or takes place after the date of the enactment of this paragraph) and who knowingly destroys, alters, conceals, or fails to file any record, application, manifest, report, or other document required to be maintained or filed for purposes of compliance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator (or by a State in the case of an authorized State program) under this subtitle;

"(5) knowingly transports without a manifest, or causes to be transported without a manifest, any hazardous waste required by regulations promulgated under this subtitle (or by a State in the case of a State program authorized under this subtitle) to be accompanied by a manifest shall upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $50,000 for each day of violation, or imprisonment not to exceed two years (five years in the case of a violation of paragraph (1) or (2)), or both. If the conviction is for a violation committed after a first conviction of such person under this paragraph, the maximum punishment under the respective paragraph shall be doubled with respect to both fine and imprisonment.".

(b) Section 3008(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended to read as follows:

"(e) KNOWING ENDANGERMENT.—Any person who knowingly transports, treats, stores, disposes of, or exports any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle in violation of paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (d) of this section who knows at that time that he thereby places another person in imminent danger of death or serious bodily injury, shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $250,000 or imprisonment for not more than fifteen years, or both. A defendant that is an organization shall, upon conviction of violating this subsection, be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000,000.".

EXPORT OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

SEC. 13. (a) Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"EXPORT OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

"SEC. 3016. (a) GENERAL.—Beginning twenty-four months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, no person shall export any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle unless (1) such person has provided the notification required in subsection (c) of this section, (2) the government of the receiving country has consented to accept such hazardous waste, (3) a copy of the receiving country's written consent is attached to the manifest accompanying each waste shipment, and (4) the shipment conforms with the terms of the consent of the government of the receiving country required pursuant to subsection (e), or (5) the United States and the government of the receiving country have entered into an agreement as provided for in subsection (f).

"(b) REGULATIONS.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate the regulations necessary to implement this section. Such regulations shall become effective one hundred and eighty days after promulgation.

"(c) NOTIFICATION.—Any person who intends to export a hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle beginning twelve months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, shall, before such hazardous waste is scheduled to leave the United States, provide notification to the Administrator. Such notification shall concern the following information:

"(1) the name and address of the exporter;

"(2) the types and estimated quantities of hazardous waste to be exported;

"(3) the estimated frequency or rate at which such waste is to be exported; and the period of time over which such waste is to be exported;

"(4) the ports of entry;

"(5) a description of the manner in which such hazardous waste will be transported to and treated, stored, or disposed in the receiving country; and

"(6) the name and address of the ultimate treatment, storage or disposal facility.

"(d) PROCEDURES FOR REQUESTING CONSENT OF THE RECEIVING COUNTRY.—Within thirty days of the Administrator's receipt of a complete notification under this section, the Department of State, acting on behalf of the Administrator, shall—

"(1) forward a copy of the notification to the government of the receiving country;

"(2) advise the government that United States law prohibits the export of hazardous waste unless the receiving country consents to accept the hazardous waste;

"(3) request the government to provide the Secretary with a written consent or objection to the terms of the notification; and

"(4) forward to the government of the receiving country a description of the Federal regulations which would apply to the treatment, storage, and disposal of the hazardous waste in the United States.

"(e) CONVEYANCE OF WRITTEN CONSENT TO EXPORTER.—Within thirty days of receipt by the Department of State of the receiving country's written consent or objection (or any subsequent communication withdrawing a prior consent or objection), the Administrator shall forward such a consent, objection, or other communication to the exporter.

"(f) INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS.—Where there exists an international agreement between the United States and the government of the receiving country establishing notice, export, and enforcement procedures for the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of hazardous wastes, only the requirements of subsection (g) shall apply.

"(g) REPORTS.—After the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, any person who exports any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle shall file with the Administrator no later than March 1 of each year, a report summarizing the types, quantities, frequency, and ultimate destination of all such hazardous waste exported during the previous calendar year.

"(h) OTHER STANDARDS.—Nothing in this section shall preclude the Administrator from establishing other standards for the export of hazardous wastes under section 3002 or section 3003 of this subtitle.".

(b) PENALTIES.—Section 3008(d) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended by section 12(a) of this Act, is amended by adding after paragraph (5) ", or" and the following new paragraph:

"(6) knowingly exports a hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle without the consent of the receiving country".

SUBTITLE D IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 14. (a) Section 4004(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "LANDFILLS.—" and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2) Not later than twenty-four months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate revisions of the criteria promulgated under paragraph (1) and section 1008(a)(3) to reflect improvements in the state of control and measurement technology and the need to protect human health and the environment. Such revisions shall take into account the potential receipt by such facilities of hazardous waste in household waste and from small quantity generators under section 3002(b), and the possibility of illegal dumping of hazardous wastes in such facilities. At a minimum such revisions for facilities potentially receiving such wastes should require groundwater monitoring, and provide for corrective action as appropriate.".

(b) Section 4004(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking all after "subsection (a)" through "later".

(c) Section 4005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) CONTROL OF HAZARDOUS DISPOSAL.—Not later than forty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, each State shall adopt and begin to enforce a permit program or other system of prior approval and conditions, to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous waste in household waste or due to the provisions of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005 of this Act) will comply with the criteria revised under section 4004(a)(2). In any State which does not adopt such a program for such facilities by the date forty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall use the authorities available under sections 3007 and 3008 of this title to enforce the prohibition in subsection (a) of this section with respect to such facilities. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'requirement of this subtitle' in section 3008 shall be deemed to include criteria promulgated by the Administrator under sections 1008(a)(3) and 4004(a) of this title, and the term 'hazardous wastes' in section 3007 shall be deemed to include solid wastes received at such facilities.".

BIENNIAL REPORT

SEC. 15. Section 2006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) ACTIVITIES OF THE OFFICE.—" after "SEC. 2006." and by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) HAZARDOUS WASTE.—(1) The Administrator shall transmit to the Congress and the President, periodically but no less often than every two years a report describing quantities and types of hazardous waste generated, stored, treated, and disposed of. The Administrator shall compile and update such information comparable to that required under section 3002(a)(6) and section 3004(a) (1) and (2).

"(2) States with authorized programs under section 3006 shall make available those reports they have received or compiled to assist the Administrator in preparing such report for Congress. The first such report shall cover calendar year 1983 and shall be transmitted to the Congress no later than March 31, 1985.

"(3) The authority of section 3007 of this Act shall be available in the implementation of this subsection.".

AWARD OF FEES

SEC. 16. Section 7002(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "prevailing or substantially prevailing" before "party" in the first sentence thereof.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 17. Section 7006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7006. (a) REVIEW OF FINAL REGULATIONS AND CERTAIN PETITIONS.—A petition for review of the promulgation of final regulations under this Act and the Administrator's denial of any petition for the promulgation, amendment, or repeal of any regulation under this Act may be filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia or in any United States Court of Appeals for a circuit in which the petitioner resides or transacts business which is directly affected by such promulgation or denial, and such petition shall be filed within one hundred and twenty days from the date of such promulgation or denial, unless such petition is based solely on grounds arising after such one hundred and twentieth day. Any action of the Administrator with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in civil or criminal proceedings for enforcement.

"(b) REVIEW OF CERTAIN ACTIONS UNDER SECTIONS 3005 AND 3006.—A petition for review of the Administrator's action (1) in issuing, denying, modifying, or revoking any permit under section 3005, or (2) in granting, denying, or withdrawing authorization or interim authorization under section 3006, may be filed by any interested person in the United States Court of Appeals for a circuit in which the petitioner resides or transacts business which is directly affected by such action, and such petition shall be filed within one hundred and twenty days from the date of such issuance, denial, modification, revocation, grant, or withdrawal, or after such date only if such petition is based solely on grounds which arose after such one hundred and twentieth day. Any action of the Administrator with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in civil or criminal proceedings for enforcement.

"(c) In any judicial proceeding brought under this section in which review is sought of a determination under this Act required to be made on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing, if a party seeking review under this Act applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that the information is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Administrator, the court may order such additional evidence (and evidence in rebuttal thereof) to be taken before the Administrator, and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper; the Administrator may modify his findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file with the court such modified or new findings and his recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order, with the return of such additional evidence.

"(d)(1) If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of the first such petition more than thirty days before receiving written notice of the filing of the second petition, then the record shall be filed in that court in which the first petition was filed. If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of one or more petitions within thirty days or less after receiving written notice of the filing of the first petition, then the Administrator shall promptly advise in writing the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that petitions have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals, and shall identify each court for which he has written notice that such petitions have been filed within thirty days or less of receiving written notice of the filing of the first such petition. Pursuant to a system of random selection devised for this purpose, and within three business days after receiving such notice from the Administrator, the Administrative Office thereupon shall select the court in which the record shall be filed from among those identified by the Administrator. Upon notification of such selection, the Administrator shall promptly file the record in such court. For the purpose of review of agency action which has previously been remanded to the Administrator, the record shall be filed in the United States Courts of Appeals which remanded such action.

"(2) Where petitions have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals with respect to the same agency action and the record has been filed in one of such courts pursuant to paragraph (1), the other courts in which such petitions have been filed shall promptly transfer such petitions to the United States Courts of Appeals in which the record has been filed. Pending selection of a court pursuant to subsection (1), any court in which a petition has been filed may postpone the effective date of the agency action until fifteen days after the Administrative Office has selected the court in which the record shall be filed.

"(3) Any court in which a petition with respect to any agency action has been filed, including any court selected pursuant to subsection (d)(1), may transfer such petition to any other United States Courts of Appeals for the convenience of the parties or otherwise in the interest of justice.

"(e) In any judicial proceeding under this section, the court may award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to any prevailing or substantially prevailing party whenever it determines that such award is appropriate.".

CITIZEN SUITS

SEC. 18. (a) Section 7002(a)(1) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "prohibition," immediately after "requirement,";

(2) inserting "(A)" immediately after "(1)"; and

(3) inserting the following at the end thereof:

"(B) against any person, including the United States and any other governmental instrumentality or agency, to the extent permitted by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, and including any past or present generator, past or present transporter, or past or present owner or operator of a treatment, storage, or disposal facility, who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment; or".

(b) Section 7002(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "or the alleged endangerment may occur" immediately after "the alleged violation occurred" in the first sentence following paragraph (2); and

(2) striking "to enforce such regulation or order, or to order the Administrator to perform such act or duty as the case may be" in the portion following paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "to enforce the permit, standard, regulation, condition requirement, prohibition, or order, referred to in paragraph (1)(A), to restrain any person who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste referred to in paragraph (1)(B), to order such person to take such other action as may be necessary, or both, or to order the Administrator to perform the act or duty referred to in paragraph (2), as the case may be, and to apply any appropriate civil penalties under section 3008 (a) and (g).".

(c) Section 7002(b) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) ACTIONS PROHIBITED.—No action may be commenced under subsection (a)(1) of this section—

"(1) prior to sixty days after the plaintiff has given notice of the violation or prior to one hundred and twenty days after the plaintiff has given notice of the endangerment (A) to the Administrator; (B) to the State in which the alleged violation occurs or in which the alleged endangerment may occur; and (C) to any alleged violator of such permit, standard, regulation, condition, requirement, prohibition, or order, or any person alleged to have contributed or to be contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, except that such action may be brought immediately after such notification in the case of an action under this section respecting a violation of subtitle C of this Act; or

"(2) with respect to an action under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, if the Administrator or State has commenced and is diligently prosecuting a civil or criminal action in a court of the United States or a State to require compliance with such permit, standard, regulation, condition, requirement, prohibition, or order: Provided, however, That in any such action in a court of the United States, any person may intervene as a matter of right; or

"(3) with respect to an action under subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, if the Administrator has commenced and is diligently prosecuting an action under section 7003 of this Act or has settled such action to restrain or abate acts or conditions which may have contributed or are contributing to the activities which may present the alleged endangerment, or if the State has commenced and is diligently prosecuting an action under subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section: Provided, however, That in any such action in a court of the United States, any person may intervene as a matter of right when the applicant claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and he is so situated that the disposition of the action may, as a practical matter, impair or impede his ability to protect that interest, unless the Administrator or the State shows that the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties. No action may be commenced under subsection (a)(1)(B) by any person (other than a State or local government) with respect to the siting of a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or a disposal facility, nor to restrain or enjoin the issuance of a permit for such facility".

IMMINENT HAZARD

SEC. 19. Section 7003(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "past or present" after "evidence that the";

(2) striking "to immediately restrain any person" and inserting in lieu thereof "against any person (including any past or present generator, past or present transporter, or past or present owner or operator of a treatment, storage, or disposal facility) who has contributed or who is";

(3) striking "to stop" and inserting in lieu thereof "to restrain such person from"; and

(4) striking "or to take such other action as may be necessary" and substituting ", to order such person to take such other action as may be necessary, or both".

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION IN SETTLEMENTS

SEC. 20. Section 7003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) Whenever the United States or the Administrator proposes to covenant not to sue or to forbear from suit or to settle any claim arising under this section, notice, and opportunity for a public meeting in the affected area, and a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposed settlement prior to its final entry shall be afforded to the public. The decision of the United States or the Administrator to enter into or not to enter into such Consent Decree, covenant or agreement shall not constitute a final agency action subject to judicial review under this Act or the Administrative Procedure Act.".

COMPATIBILITY OF RECYCLING AND ENERGY RECOVERY

SEC. 21. (a) Section 4001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "In developing such comprehensive plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

(b) Section 4003 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(d) SIZE OF WASTE-TO-ENERGY FACILITIES.—Notwithstanding any of the above requirements, it is the intention of this Act and the planning process developed pursuant to this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

CLARIFICATION OF HOUSEHOLD WASTE EXCLUSION

SEC. 22. (a) Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(d) CLARIFICATION OF HOUSEHOLD WASTE EXCLUSION.—A resource recovery facility recovering energy from the mass burning of municipal solid waste shall not be deemed to be treating, storing, disposing of, or otherwise managing hazardous wastes for the purposes of regulation under this subtitle, if such facility—

"(1) receives and burns only (A) household waste (from single and multiple dwellings, hotels, motels, and other residential sources) and (B) solid waste from commercial or industrial sources that does not contain hazardous waste identified or listed under this section, and

"(2) such facility does not accept hazardous wastes identified or listed under this section and the owner or operator of such facility has established contractual requirements or other appropriate notification or inspection procedures to assure that hazardous wastes are not received at or burned in such facility.".

REQUIREMENTS IN AUTHORIZED STATES

SEC. 23. Section 3006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(f) IMMEDIATE IMPLEMENTATION.—The requirements of sections 3002(b)(1), 3002(b)(7)(C), 3004 (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (i), 3005 (c) and (e), and 3007(b)(1) shall apply directly in all States, including each State with a program authorized under this section, until the program of such State is authorized to operate in lieu of the Federal program with respect to such requirement.".

AIR EMISSIONS FROM LAND DISPOSAL FACILITIES

SEC. 24. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(k) AIR EMISSIONS.—Not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, the Administrator shall promulgate such regulations for the monitoring and control of air emissions at hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities, including but not limited to open tanks, surface impoundments, and landfills, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

GROUND WATER MONITORING

SEC. 25. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(l) GROUND WATER MONITORING.—The standards under this section concerning ground water monitoring which are applicable to surface impoundments, waste piles, land treatment units, and landfills shall apply to such a facility whether or not—

"(1) the facility is located above the seasonal high water table;

"(2) two liners and a leachate collection system have been installed at the facility; or

"(3) the owner or operator inspects the liner (or liners) which has been installed at the facility.".

WASTE MINIMIZATION

SEC. 26. (a) Section 1003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding "AND NATIONAL POLICY" to the title, by inserting "(a) OBJECTIVES.—" after "SEC. 1003.", and by adding the following new subsection:

"(b) NATIONAL POLICY.—The Congress hereby declares it to be the national policy of the United States that, wherever feasible, the generation of hazardous waste is to be reduced or eliminated as expeditiously as possible. Waste that is nevertheless generated should be treated, stored, or disposed of so as to minimize the present and future threat to human health and the environment.".

(b) Section 3002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended as follows:

(1) by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) WASTE MINIMIZATION.—Effective September 1, 1984, the manifest required by subsection (a)(5) shall contain a certification by the generator that—

"(1) the generator of the hazardous waste has a program in place to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of such waste to the degree determined by the generator economically practicable; and

"(2) the proposed method of treatment, storage, or disposal is that practicable method currently available to the generator which minimizes the present and future threat to human health and the environment."; and

(2) by amending subsection (a)(6) to read as follows:

"(6) submission of reports to the Administrator (or the State agency in any case in which such agency carries out a permit program pursuant to this subtitle) at least once every two years, setting out—

"(A) the quantities and nature of hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle that he has generated during the year;

"(B) the disposition of all hazardous waste reported under subparagraph (A);

"(C) the efforts undertaken during the year to reduce the volume and toxicity of waste generated; and

"(D) the changes in volume and toxicity of waste actually achieved during the year in question in comparison with previous years, to the extent such information is available for years prior to enactment of this subparagraph.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(h) WASTE MINIMIZATION.—Effective September 1, 1984, it shall be a condition of any permit issued under this section for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste on the premises where such waste was generated that the permittee certify, no less often than annually, that—

"(1) the generator of the hazardous waste has a program in place to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of such waste to the degree determined by the generator to be economically practicable; and

"(2) the proposed method of treatment, storage, or disposal is that practicable method currently available to the generator which minimizes the present and future threat to human health and the environment.".

(d)(1) Section 8002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(r) MINIMIZATION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE.—The Administrator shall compile, and not later than October 1, 1986, submit to the Congress, a report on the feasibility and desirability of establishing standards of performance or of taking other additional actions under this Act to require the generators of hazardous waste to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of the hazardous waste they generate, and of establishing with respect to hazardous wastes required management practices or other requirements to assure such wastes are managed in ways that minimize present and future risks to human health and the environment. Such report shall include any recommendations for legislative changes which the Administrator determines are feasible and desirable to implement the national policy established by section 1003.".

(2) Section 301(a)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking out "four years" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty-two months".

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

SEC. 27. (a) Section 3012 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, entitled "Restrictions on Recycled Oil," shall be redesignated as section

3014 of such Act, together with all references thereto, and relocated after section 3013 of such Act.

(b) Subsection (b) of section 4003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, entitled "Discretionary Plan Provisions Relating to Recycled Oil," shall be redesignated as subsection (c) of such section, together with all references thereto.

(c) Section 303 of Public Law 96-510, 94 Stat. 2808, is amended by inserting after "conferred by this Act" the phrase "(other than under section 4681 of the Internal Revenue Code"). Section 232(c) of such public law is amended by inserting after "223" the phrase "(other than section 223(c)(2)(D))".

REPORT TO CONGRESS

SEC. 28. Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"UNDERGROUND INJECTION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

"SEC. 1426. (a) The Administrator, in cooperation with the States, shall compile and, not later than March 15, 1984, submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, an inventory of all wells in the United States which inject hazardous wastes. The inventory shall include the following information:

"(1) the location and depth of each well;

"(2) engineering and construction details of each, including the thickness and composition of its casing, the width and content of the annulus, and pump pressure and capacity;

"(3) the hydrogeological characteristics of the overlying and underlying strata, as well as that into which the waste is injected;

"(4) the location and size of all drinking water aquifiers penetrated by the well, or within a one-mile radius of the well or within two hundred feet below the well injection point;

"(5) the location, capacity, and population served by each well providing drinking or irrigation water which is within a five-mile radius of the injection well;

"(6) the nature and volume of the waste injected during the one-year period immediately preceding the date of the report;

"(7) the dates and nature of the inspections of the injection well conducted by independent third parties or agents of State, Federal, or local government;

"(8) the name and address of all owners and operators of the well and any disposal facility associated with it; and

"(9) such other information as the Administrator may, in his discretion, deem necessary to define the scope and nature of hazardous waste disposal in the United States through underground injection.

"(b) In fulfilling the requirements of subsections (a)(3)-(5), the Administrator need only submit such information as can be obtained from currently existing State records and from site visits to at least twenty facilities containing wells which inject hazardous waste.

"(c) The States shall make available to the Administrator such information as he deems necessary to accomplish the objectives of this section.".

COMMUNITY RELOCATION

SEC. 29. (a) The second sentence of paragraph (23) of section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-510) is amended by inserting after "not otherwise provided for," the phrase "costs of permanent relocation of residents where it is determined that such permanent relocation is cost effective or may be necessary to protect health or welfare," and by striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "In the case of a business located in an area of evacuation or relocation, the term may also include the payment of those installments of principal and interest on business debt which accrue between the date of evacuation or temporary relocation and thirty days following the date that permanent relocation is actually accomplished or, if permanent relocation is formally rejected as the appropriate response, the date on which evacuation or temporary relocation ceases. In the case of an individual unemployed as a result of such evacuation or relocation, it may also include the provisions of the assistance authorized by sections 407, 408, and 409 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974;".

(b) Section 104(c)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-510) is amended by inserting before "authorized by subsection (b) of this section," the phrase "for permanent relocation or".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I see that the distinguished managers on both sides are here, and it is my hope that this bill can be finished very promptly.

I inquire of them especially of the chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, if there is a likelihood that he could finish this bill today, say, by the normal recess hour of 6 o'clock, or if it is likely that we will have to go until tomorrow to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Senate could suffer a temporary case of lockjaw, we could do it in the next hour. I am very optimistic that we can complete it by 6 o'clock, from reports on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

In view of that, I announce that we will try to finish; and if it is necessary to stay a little past 6 o'clock, the leadership on this side is prepared to ask the Senate to do that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield the floor, and I hope the Chair will then recognize the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber, and I did not hear all that was said, except that I understand there will be an effort to pass this bill in approximately 1 hour. Is that correct?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have not been privy to the conversations between the two managers, but the question I put was whether or not the manager on this side thought it possible that we could finish the bill this afternoon, by 6 or thereabout, and the answer was in the affirmative.

The leadership on this side is prepared to devote whatever reasonable time is required in order to complete this measure.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I say to the majority leader and the chairman of our committee that Senator MITCHELL, who will handle the measure on behalf of the minority, will be most cooperative in doing what the majority leader desires, as will others. However, it is my understanding that if we cannot complete it by 6 o'clock, it is to go over. Is that so?

Mr. BAKER. Yes. I announced that I would be willing to ask the Senate to stay a little past 6 in order to finish. Otherwise, it is the intention to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. RANDOLPH. All of us on the minority will work closely with the able chairman of our committee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia always does that, and I am always grateful.

He was once chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee. I have often said that my first exposure to Senate procedure and the essence and substance of Senate deliberations was while he was chairman. I learned a great deal from him, and I continue to do so. I never tire of expressing my appreciation to him for his good service to the Senate.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The majority leader is very kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I should like to echo what the majority leader has said.

During the early years I served on the Committee on Environment and Public Works, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] was an exceptionally able chairman; and whatever I have learned of committee work I learned at his side. So I am also grateful for all the guidance he has given to our committee and to me over the years in the work of the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I could speak at greater length to the majority leader and to my friend the present excellent chairman, but I will say only this: Thanks very much.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, the manager on our side for this bill will be Senator CHAFEE. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I will turn over that task to him. Senator CHAFEE is the chairman of our Subcommittee on Pollution, which has handled this measure, and it is appropriate that he be the manager for this side of the aisle, just as Senator MITCHELL, the ranking minority member, will be the manager on the minority side. Senator RANDOLPH and I will be here for whatever backup we can offer.

Mr. President, the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 have been a long time in the making.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works began work on these amendments in the 97th Congress. We reported S. 757, the pending bill, on October 28, 1983. Refinements and adjustments have continued to be made since then and will be part of the committee's proposals today.

The bill reflects intensive deliberation by the committee, extensive consultations with current officials at the Environmental Protection Agency, with the whole spectrum of outside interests, and with Members of the Senate who are not on the Environment and Public Works Committee.

The product of this exhaustive process is a balanced bill that will enhance protection of public health and the environment against harm from the toxic wastes so pervasive in our society.

By clarifying existing law in several respects, the bill closes some major gaps in the Nation's hazardous waste disposal program—gaps created, in some instances, by overly lenient regulatory interpretations.

It sets realistic—and I emphasize the word "realistic"—schedules according to which both regulators and those who generate or handle hazardous waste must take specific, protective actions.

The distinguished chairman of the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee, Mr. CHAFEE, has outlined what we know at this time to be the dimensions of the hazardous waste problem in this country. I would like simply to note that the more we learn, the bigger we find the problem to be.

In this bill we are putting into place measures to reduce the likelihood of future tragedies such as those at Love Canal, Times Beach, and Woburn, MA. Investments made as a result of this legislation will, I believe, not only reduce future human suffering but also the tremendous costs of responding to releases of toxic substances into the environment after they have occurred.

The statement by the distinguished subcommittee chairman has also provided a clear and comprehensive description of the bill before us. There is only one section of the bill I would like specifically to discuss.

Section 26, the waste minimization provision, amends the Solid Waste Disposal Act in several ways. First, it sets out as national policy that hazardous wastes are to be reduced or eliminated as expeditiously as possible and that wastes that are nonetheless generated are to be disposed of in the most environmentally sound manner.

Second, it requires generators of hazardous waste to certify that they are reducing the quantity or toxicity of their wastes to the maximum extent they determine is economically practicable. Generators must also certify that they are employing those practicable methods of disposal that minimize threats to health and the environment and must report every 2 years on their production and management of hazardous wastes.

Finally, the bill requires the Administrator to submit to Congress a report on methods in addition to those in current law to reduce the quantity and toxicity of wastes generated in this country and to assure that the wastes that are generated are managed so as to minimize their threats to human beings and the environment.

Mr, President, I believe we are making some headway in protecting this Nation from the harm caused by hazardous wastes. But the fact remains that neither existing law nor S. 757 guarantees anything like truly safe disposal of the vast quantities of hazardous waste generated in this Nation.

We need to find ways to greatly reduce the amount of harmful wastes. At the Federal level we must look for ways to encourage the development of alternative production processes, the substitution of less hazardous materials for more toxic ones, and other means to reduce both the quantity and toxicity of wastes.

We must also provide incentives for development of treatment and disposal practices that minimize threats from those hazardous wastes that continue to be produced.

The waste minimization provisions in S. 757 are a step in that direction. They represent a starting point, not the last word.

It is my hope that the certification required of hazardous waste generators will elicit from them serious and successful reduction efforts.

It is my expectation that the report required from EPA, together with information from the biennial reports submitted by generators, will provide the basis for sound future changes in the direction and emphasis of a national hazardous waste program. Those changes will, I believe, emphasize waste reduction, with the goal of eliminating disposal of hazardous wastes where they might in any way harm public health or the environment.

Mr. President, as I said at the start of my remarks, action on S. 757 is needed now. The bill is a good and balanced one. I urge my colleagues to pass it quickly so that conference with the House can proceed and a bill can be sent to the President before summer's end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following staff members be granted floor privileges:

Steve Shimberg, Bob Hurley, Curtis Moore, Vic Maerki, Phil Cummings, Charlene Sturbitts, Jimmie Powell, Bill Fay, Boyd Hollingsworth, Brent Erickson, Jim Curtiss, and Jon Jewett.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the manager on this side, Mr. CHAFEE.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to present an amendment to S. 757, the Solid Waste Disposal Amendments of 1984.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works has been working on legislation to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act and as part of that law the so-called RCRA, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, we have been attempting to do this for the past 4 years. We have held numerous hearings, meetings, and markups in an effort to perfect this important measure, and I can now confidently and wholeheartedly recommend it to my colleagues.

On July 28, which was nearly a year ago, the Committee on Environment and Public Works reported this measure favorably and recommended by a vote of 14 to 1 that the full Senate pass this bill.

Mr. President, let me begin by noting that the title of this bill and the law that is the primary focus of these amendments to RCRA are to some degree misleading.

Yes, there are provisions dealing with solid waste, and, yes, there are provisions dealing with resource conservation and recovery. But that is not the focus of this bill.

What we are really talking about today is the control of hazardous wastes.

In 1976 RCRA was enacted as an amendment to the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

Subtitle C of RCRA established this Nation's basic hazardous waste management system.

That law and the amendments we are considering today are designed to assure the people of this Nation that the generation, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, and disposal of hazardous wastes in this country is regulated and controlled in a manner that protects both the human health and the environment.

We are getting down to a pretty fundamental matter here. We are dealing with hazardous wastes in every aspect of them, not only the generation but, as I said, the handling, the storage, the treatment, the transportation, and disposal of them.

Obviously the public of this Nation believes in this. The importance of this law and the need for such assurances can only be fully accomplished after we examine just how much hazardous waste is being generated each year in the United States. The numbers are staggering.

When the EPA developed its regulatory program and when we first began working on this legislation, it was estimated that 11 billion gallons, that is 400 million metric tons of hazardous waste are produced in the United States each year.

In August 1983, a year ago, EPA upped this estimate to roughly 40 billion gallons, 1,500 million metric tons, almost four times the previous estimate.

On April 20 of this year, the EPA released the results of the national survey of hazardous waste generators and treatment, storage, and disposal facilities regulated under RCRA in 1981. This will be referred to as the national survey.

It is now estimated that there are not 11 billion gallons nor 40 billion gallons; it is now estimated that more than 71 billion gallons of hazardous waste are generated in the United States every year. That is 264 million metric tons. It just staggers the imagination.

According to news reports, that is enough to flood the District of Columbia to the depth of 5 feet.

Mind you, this is annual, annual disposal, enough to supply every man, woman, and child in the Nation with six 55-gallon drums of hazardous waste every year.

Sadly, the actual number we believe even exceeds the 71-billion-gallon estimate.

EPA's national survey that I just referred to did not include mining wastes, some of which is clearly hazardous. It did not include household hazardous wastes such as discarded pesticides, paint thinners, and cleaning solvents. It did not include hazardous waste generated by individual businessmen that produce less than 1,000 kilograms of waste a month.

A thousand kilograms, by the way, is no tiny amount. That is 2,200 pounds, over a ton of such waste a month, and that is what we call small quantity generators. It did not include hazardous waste that is discharged through sewers into publicly owned wastewater treatment works. It did not include hazardous waste that is illegally generated or managed. And it did not include those hazardous wastes destined for cycling.

The survey and estimate only included those wastes and activities that are regulated under the existing RCRA program.

There is no question, Mr. President, that we have given the EPA an enormous responsibility. In 1981, EPA received nearly 60,000 notices from generators of hazardous waste. The agency has roughly 8,500 applications on file for permits for treatment, storage, and disposal facilities.

This just gives you some idea of the tremendous job that EPA has under this program.

The permit applications and sources of hazardous waste come from a wide variety of industries. Each one of these industries poses a separate problem.

Add to the problem of household waste and waste from the truly small quantity generator. All of that you put together and we can conclude that EPA's task is indeed a difficult one. It is almost absolutely essential that it be done right and that it be done soon.

This program is closely related to the much talked about Superfund program. What this program is meant to do is assure the public that although we may be discovering some new Superfund sites on a daily basis, at the least we are taking steps to prevent the creation of new Superfund sites.

In other words, as you know, there are some 6,000 Superfund sites, some sites that are needing of the Superfund cleanup in the Nation, and there they are. We are working on those through the Superfund. But the whole purpose of this bill we are considering today is to prevent the creation of new such sites.

Hazardous waste can and must be handled in a manner that is safer than it was in the past. That is what RCRA is supposed to be about.

Now, we often hear the refrain from those who were responsibile for disasters like Love Canal, the Stringfellow acid pits in California, and in my home State the Western Sand & Gravel, and the so-called Potello dump, that we should not hold them responsible because what they did was legal at the time.

Well, using the word "legal" to mean not specifically prohibited by RCRA or by regulations under RCRA, let us see what they mean, let us look at what is legal under our current RCRA program.

Now it is true under the existing laws, prior to these amendments we are considering today, it is legal to produce 2,000 pounds of hazardous waste each month and to dispose it in the town dump as if it were normal trash. This was what we were talking about previously, what I referred to as the small-quantity generator. The small-quantity generator who is not regulated under present law is that person or business that produces 1 metric ton, 2,200 pounds or less a month. Now as I mentioned before, that is 1 ton and that can be disposed of in the normal trash heap.

It is legal under the current law to use waste oil containing dioxin as a dust suppressant on roads as was done in Times Beach, MO. It is legal under the existing law to avoid regulation by blending hazardous waste with other fuel and to burn it for energy and to sell it to unsuspecting customers.

So what I am saying here, Mr. President, is the current RCRA law is riddled with loopholes. And those were enacted at the time and undoubtedly recognized at the time when the legislation was passed, because when we first work on legislation, we cannot achieve perfection. And what this legislation we have before us today, S. 757, is all about is trying to plug those loopholes and that is why we believe it is so important. We have identified a number of gaps in the regulatory program and have attempted to fill them under this legislation. Even with this bill, there will be some gaps still existing. The scope of the problem is such that we cannot reasonably be expected to address it comprehensively with legislation. We have got to continue to rely to a large extent on Federal and State common law and State statutory law to fill the gaps. Nevertheless, we must do as much as we can to assure the public that hazardous wastes are being handled in a safe manner and this bill is important to that.

Now, there are several key provisions that will come up. I am not going to dwell on those in detail, but I will just mention some of them. The small-quantity generator, which I talked about before. We had long discussions on what to reduce that to, whether we should reduce it from the current 1,000 kilograms amount down to de minimis. We finally settled on 100 kilograms a month. There are 9 months allowed before we get into enactment of the requirement for the small-quantity generators of less than 1,000 kilograms a month, namely the 2,200 pounds. They have 9 months to get adjusted to the new definition of small-quantity generator which, as I say, is 100 kilograms a month.

We have limitations on the land disposal which we will be discussing further, if anybody would like to raise questions in connection with those. That is a very important part.

We have minimum technological requirements in permit life. We have continuing releases on permitted facilities, and we have a provision to listing and delisting. We modify that from the existing law.

Then also we touch on the burning and blending matter which I mention in my statement.

We have problem matters dealing with mandatory inspections in Federal facilities, Federal enforcement, and the export of hazardous waste. We have a provision dealing with imminent hazard citizens' suits. Those are the principal provisions of this act.

Mr. President, the most important sections of this bill, the sections on land disposal limitations and minimum technological requirements, warrant additional discussion.

USE OF LANDFILLS

Henceforth, the use of landfills will be circumscribed by strict rules governing, first, under section 5, what kinds of materials may be landfilled, and second, under section 6, what the physical character of the landfills themselves will be.

The minimum technological requirements under section 6 for new and, eventually, for existing landfills will start with double liners, a leachate collection system, and a monitoring system—as a modicum of protection and integrity. But it is necessary to do more. In its section 5 technical evaluations, EPA will match certain wastes to certain land disposal technologies or determine that no match is feasible. Within the framework of those evaluations, Congress under the terms of this legislation is additionally directing EPA to take into account certain locational characteristics with respect to all land disposal facilities in the country in order to establish a performance range for landfills. The locational characteristics to be factored into EPA's analyses include, among others, the hydrogeology of the site, and climatological and demographic effects. Landfills thus will be able to be assessed according to their hydrogeologic performance and classified as fully acceptable, acceptable for certain limited uses, and unacceptable. With a phaseout of unacceptable landfills and a highly analytic evaluation of the remainder according to their highest and best uses, I anticipate that the comfort level of the American people will be significantly enhanced regarding their potential exposure to harmful toxics in the environment.

OTHER ISSUES

Several other issues have been considered in the course of developing S. 757 and merit comment. These include the issues of mixed wastes; RCRA's application to Federal facilities; permitting of mobile treatment units; and the distinction between on-site and off-site facilities.

MIXED WASTE

RCRA's definition of solid waste (section 1004(27)), of which hazardous waste is a subset, specifically excludes "source, special nuclear, and byproduct material as defined by the Atomic Energy Act." That definition does not exclude hazardous wastes that are mixed with such radioactive materials. The exclusion of Atomic Energy Act [AEA] materials applies only to the radioactive materials themselves and not to any other wastes with which the AEA material may be associated. RCRA applies to hazardous wastes that are mixed with radioactive materials. Otherwise, the mixing of small amounts of radioactive materials with hazardous wastes could transform the entire waste stream into an AEA material exempt from RCRA.

Section 1006(a) of RCRA does not in any way exempt mixed hazardous and AEA wastes from RCRA. Under section 1006(a), RCRA applies to mixed hazardous and AEA wastes except to the extent that application of RCRA would be inconsistent with specific requirements of the AEA. Thus, only in the rare case where compliance with both RCRA and the requirements of the AEA would be physically impossible, are these materials exempt from the requirements of RCRA.

Facilities managing mixed wastes are subject to and must comply with all substantive and procedural requirements of RCRA, including substantive requirements for closure and cleanup and procedural requirements for permits and reporting.

RCRA'S APPLICATION TO FEDERAL FACILITIES

There is a controversy regarding whether the Department of Energy [DOE] nuclear weapons facilities must comply with RCRA and State regulations for hazardous waste management. There should be no controversy. RCRA unequivocally requires all Federal facilities, including DOE nuclear weapons facilities, to comply with RCRA and State regulations.

Section 1006 of RCRA does not exempt DOE nuclear weapons facilities from having to comply with RCRA nor does it insulate them from State enforcement. Section 1006 is not in any way a blanket exemption for facilities subject to the Atomic Energy Act [AEA]. It provides an extremely limited exemption only where the application of RCRA would interfere with specific requirements of the AEA. Since RCRA is compatible with the protection of radioactive hazards and national security measures at DOE facilities, there are no such inconsistencies. State regulation of DOE facilities is explicitly provided for in RCRA and is not affected by section 1006.

Section 11 of S. 757 will mandate a yearly inspection of all Federal facilities, including DOE facilities, either by the EPA or a State, if a State has an authorized hazardous waste program. This will insure that RCRA is enforced fully by either the EPA or the States at DOE and other Federal facilities.

The February 22, 1984, memorandum of understanding signed by DOE and EPA does not constitute compliance with RCRA, since it deletes any State role in permitting, inspection and enforcement; omits any citizen suit provisions; and itself can be modified or terminated at any time.

PERMITTING OF MOBILE TREATMENT UNITS

The EPA, in order to fulfill its legislative mandate should continually be looking at innovative, advanced technological methods to effectively and safely treat and handle hazardous wastes. Legislative and regulatory initiatives are necessary to discourage the use of landfills and land disposal generally as a disposal option of first resort.

For many waste generators, the availability of mobile treatment units would make proper waste handling and treatment economically feasible and remove the growing financial incentive for "cutting corners" or for midnight dumping. Clearly, the long-term tightening of EPA's current "small generator" exemption will mean a significant increase in the number of regulated facilities which could handle their wastes more safely and effectively through use of mobile treatment technology, either through a "circuit rider" approach where the unit periodically visited a facility—or where a unit periodically visited a "satellite treatment area" where waste from several firms was aggregated and stored pending treatment.

EPA currently has legislative authority to develop a permit procedure for mobile treatment units, however, current permit regulations, as promulgated, have stymied the development of MTU technology. I have reviewed the work completed in September 1983 by EPA's RCRA Permit Advisory Committee and believe the MTU permit procedure outlined therein merits further consideration by the Agency.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN ON-SITE AND OFF-SITE FACILITIES

According to the National Survey, 84 percent of those who generate hazardous wastes ship their wastes off-site for treatment, storage or disposal. That fact seems to support the notion that our regulatory effort should be focused on these off-site facilities. Some people allege that the off-site treatment and disposal industry has, in fact, been subject to much greater scrutiny, regulatory control and enforcement than those who generate hazardous wastes and manage them in-house or on-site. If this is true, it is without justification. On-site facilities should be regulated at least as vigorously as off-site facilities.

Although off-site facilities manage a significant amount of hazardous wastes, they represent a small portion of the total volume. Using EPA's numbers, which are conservative, 96 percent of the hazardous waste disposed of is disposed of on-site. That is 96 percent by volume.

Off-site facilities are providing a service to small businesses and to households generating hazardous wastes. Why should we devote a disproportionate amount of our enforcement effort to off-site facilities? The issue is not just one of fairness but it is also one of safety. Let's focus on the problem. We should continue to scrutinize, regulate, and enforce against off-site operators but we should also be focusing on the high volume private sites that are behind the company fence. There is no reason to assume that in-house operations are run any better than the off-site commercial facilities. With history as our guide, we must not let any facility that is managing hazardous waste escape our regulatory and enforcement efforts.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, the need for action is rarely as clear as it is today. We have a law that was designed to assure the people of this Nation that the generation, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, and disposal of hazardous wastes in this country is regulated and controlled in a manner that protects both human health and the environment. Unfortunately, the regulatory program is riddled with loopholes and, as such, the assurances we sought when we first passed RCRA in 1976 are still empty promises.

We cannot afford to delay any longer. Even if out of sight is out of mind for some, we must not be so foolish as to believe that the status quo is good enough. We must do as much as we can to assure the public that hazardous wastes are being handled in a safe manner and that steps will be taken to reduce the amount and danger of those hazardous wastes that are generated in the future.

The amendments that we are considering today are designed to do that. They will translate the promises of 1976 into action. They recognize new areas of promise and pursue them. For these reasons, S. 757 deserves your support and your vote of approval.

Working with us on the committee and a very valuable member was the ranking member, the junior Senator from Maine [Senator MITCHELL] and he did an excellent job.

Does the Senator have an opening statement?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do, Mr. President, but I yield to the ranking member of the full committee, the former chairman [Senator RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the able Senator from Maine very much.

Mr. President, as a principal author and sponsor of S. 757, amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act, I strongly support this measure. S. 757 is perhaps the most significant public health and environmental proposal to be debated by the Senate since the passage of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, or Superfund, in 1980.

Senate consideration of this measure follows 2 years of dedicated work by members of the Environment and Public Works Committee and other interested Senators. Waste management is a nonpartisan issue, and S. 757 is the result of a bipartisan effort to assure that hazardous and other wastes are properly disposed of.

The Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 refine and expand the scope of the solid waste program originated nearly 20 years ago. The first Solid Waste Disposal Act, Public Law 89-272, established a modest research effort and technical assistance program to States and localities to improve management and conservation practices with respect to municipal waste. This was the first step in developing a national policy to encourage recycling of usable materials and discourage disposal practices which threaten public health and scar the land.

Subsequent amendments began to distinguish the levels of threat posed by land disposal of various materials. The Resource Recovery Act of 1970, which I authored, mandated a national disposal sites study. That bill embodied the first references to categories of hazardous waste separate from the broader solid waste designation.

In 1976, the landmark legislation known as the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act was signed into law. The provision I proposed, which became subtitle C of the current law, established the concept of "cradle to grave" management of hazardous waste. Three distinct sets of standards and responsibilities were applied to hazardous waste generators, transporters, and owners and operators of disposal facilities. Concurrently, the act established a program for comprehensive management planning for municipal waste and called for closure of open dumps.

Modifications have been made to the 1976 act, but the structure and objectives have remained the same. S. 757 continues this refinement process as experience in implementing the program outlines deficiencies and oversights in existing law.

Several provisions of S. 757 address problems that have been identified as the Superfund program has been implemented. The origins of Superfund sites, the degree and extent of contamination, and the technological capabilities and limitations for corrective action are better defined. The information that has accrued over the past several years enables us to strengthen the protective features of the solid and hazardous waste regulatory program.

S. 757 contains important new initiatives and expands existing mandates to provide for improved comprehensive waste management. I will comment on several issues, including the small generator amendment, and discuss an amendment I intend to offer at the appropriate time modifying subtitle D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

One of the more difficult issues to resolve in committee consideration of S. 757 was the definition of small generators of hazardous waste and the appropriate level of regulation to apply to this category of generators.

Current law requires the Administrator to promulgate regulations applicable to generators of hazardous waste "as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment." The law does not authorize distinctions between large and small generators as a criterion for regulation. In promulgating standards, however, the Environmental Protection Agency virtually exempted generators of less than 1,000 kilograms per calendar month of hazardous waste from regulation. Thus, purely for administrative convenience and without authority in the statute, the Agency exempted up to 1 ton of hazardous waste per month, from a small generator of waste. This exemption has been under litigation.

The bill requires EPA to close out this illegal exemption for small quantity generators. The Agency is directed to undertake a comprehensive study to characterize generators of hazardous waste in quantities less than 1,000 kilograms per month and their disposal practices. Actually, the Agency already has this study underway. At the conclusion of this study the Administrator is required to promulgate appropriate regulation governing the handling of all hazardous waste produced in quantities less than 1,000 kilograms per month.

The bill specifies a minimum content for those regulations. They must require that the disposal of all such waste be in facilities with permits under subtitle C. In fact, if the regulator process does not yield these regulations by March 31, 1986, this minimum requirement goes into effect by operation of the statute, for all generators producing more than 100 kilograms per month, together with a limited manifesting system to assure compliance.

Another element of the minimum regulatory content provided in S. 757 for small quantity generators is the requirement that all hazardous wastes from generators producing more than 100 kilograms in 1 month be accompanied by a manifest. This will provide notice of the hazardous nature of the waste to transporters and disposal facilities.

Originally in the committee's deliberations, a cutoff point of 25 kilograms per month was the threshold for this requirement. This level would accomplish the purpose of curtailing random disposal practices by generators exempted from EPA regulation while providing a more practical and enforceable definition than if all wastes, regardless of quantity, were covered.

As the committee debated this measure, an amendment was discussed to increase this threshold to 100 kilograms per month for compliance with containerization and off-site transport recordkeeping requirements. In the spirit of compromise, I offered an amendment to relax some of the containerization requirements but preserve other standards applying to generators of hazardous waste in quantities above 25 kilograms per month. The committee, however, adopted the higher threshold. I opposed this approach since it permits continued disposal of large amounts of hazardous waste into municipal landfills, sewers, and other inappropriate places, without any notice to those receiving the waste.

I believe, however, that the broader objectives of the small generator provision merit support. This provision will go far in correcting the current situation and improve management of waste from small generators.

A related issue concerns facilities such as sanitary landfills and open dumps covered under subtitle D. These facilities are recipients of unknown quantities of defined hazardous waste and other dangerous materials through household waste, unregulated small quantity generator waste disposal, and illegal dumping. Since construction, siting, and monitoring standards for these facilities are far less restrictive than those governing hazardous waste disposal facilities, a number of environmental problems are occurring. A high proportion of sites listed on the National Priority List under the Superfund are municipal landfills. If we give inadequate attention to these general solid waste facilities, it will only serve to create additional Superfund sites.

A key provision of S. 757 requires EPA to review and revise criteria for municipal subtitle D facilities, including ground water monitoring standards and provisions for corrective action. States are required to establish enforcement programs to assure that all facilities are in compliance with revised criteria.

To complement this effort, I will offer an amendment to authorize funding to support increased States responsibilities and for EPA regulatory support. For the past several years, funds have not been available to support any subtitle D activities. Against the recommendations of EPA's solid waste program office, the Office of Management and Budget has determined that States have the resources and responsibility to carry out this program. In fact, States are channeling limited resources almost exclusively to hazardous waste management activities. The Association of State & Territorial Solid Waste Management officials recently conducted a survey of State subtitle D activities. Preliminary results show that of 43 responding States, only 7 have completed the open dump inventory. Furthermore, based on responses from the 43 States, it is estimated that 10,399 solid waste landfills are operating throughout the country. Adequate enforcement and monitoring is imperative to assure that these facilities are not allowed to operate if they are substandard.

There are important policies advanced in S. 757 that I emphasize for future consideration of amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act. This measure calls for minimizing the amount and kind of hazardous waste that is generated. This Nation is in the forefront of technological innovation, and waste reduction of this kind is not only worthy but possible. Technology should be guided by prudent use and protection of resources. Minimizing the amount of hazardous waste generated and continued research into alternative waste neutralization and treatment techniques are necessary steps in diminishing threats to public health and the environment.

Mr. President, I have been involved with legislation relating to solid waste management and control for more than 20 years. This bill incorporates the latest amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act and greatly enhances our ability to address the issues associated with both hazardous and nonhazardous wastes. While great advances have been made, however, it assuredly will be necessary to maintain our oversight of these programs and to consider additional legislation in the future.

This measure represents a substantial commitment of time and effort by members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. I acknowledge particularly the dedicated leadership of our able chairman, Senator STAFFORD, and of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, Senator CHAFEE and Senator MITCHELL.

In developing this legislation, we have been greatly aided by the committee staff which has brought its knowledge and experience to bear on this subject. I express appreciation for their work on this bill to members of the minority staff: Philip T. Cummings; John W. Yago, Jr.; Stephanie Clough; Lee Fuller; Helen Kalbaugh; Elizabeth Thompson; and Margie Wright.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia who has contributed significantly not only to this bill but to virtually every major environmental law that is now on the books of the United States.

I thank also the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and manager of the bill, Senator CHAFEE, whose leadership has made this legislation possible as well as other members of our committee, the distinguished chairman, Senator STAFFORD of Vermont, Senator BURDICK, and Senator LAUTENBERG for whom this is such an important matter in New Jersey.

Mr. President, today we consider legislation which will affect the health and well-being of literally every person in these United States. S. 757, a bill to amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, marks yet another milestone in our efforts to protect ourselves from the ubiquitous byproduct of our highly industralized society—hazardous waste.

In 1976, the Congress enacted the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. It was an ambitious, far-reaching statute. It conferred on the Environmental Protection Agency broad general authorities to regulate the generation, transportation, storage, and disposal of hazardous waste.

Standards for the transportation of hazardous waste were mandated.

Standards for the storage of hazardous waste were mandated.

Standards for the disposal of hazardous waste were mandated.

Enforcement authorities were mandated.

Citizen participation in regulatory and enforcement proceedings was mandated.

The underlying goal of all of these activities was protection of public health and the environment. Indeed, the statutory standard by which the mandated regulations were and continue to be measured is protection of public health and the environment.

The statute established a framework for the prevention of harm to human beings and natural resources.

Today, we propose a series of amendments to the basic statute.

The preventive framework of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act is sound. Today we propose modifications based on the knowledge acquired since 1976. All of the changes we are recommending to the Senate will strengthen the ability of the Federal Government to protect public health and the environment from hazardous wastes. They are designed to give EPA more specific guidance, based on our experience with implementation of the law's general authorities since 1976.

What have we learned in 7 years?

We have learned that the magnitude of the problem is far greater than believed. We now know that over 264 million metric tons of hazardous waste are generated in this country each year; this estimate is more than four times greater than previously thought.

We have learned that there are thousands of waste sites across this country which present potential or actual threats to human health or well-being. EPA now estimates that there may be 22,000 sites in need of some type of cleanup; 546 of these sites have been designated as priorities for cleanup. The Superfund law enacted in 1980 was a necessary response to our past inattention to the careful disposal of hazardous wastes.

Simply put, past practices have left us a legacy of chemical contamination which has poisoned our air, our water, and our land. The price of our ignorance has been high, in human terms and in dollar value. Present practices, unless modified, can only multiply those costs.

The average cost of cleaning up a hazardous waste site is esimated to be $6 million, according to EPA. If just the priority sites, known to present a health hazard, were cleaned up, the cost would be billions of dollars. No matter who pays the bill, whether it be the responsible party or the Federal Government, that figure is too high. We cannot afford the status quo.

We also know now that the generation of hazardous waste continues to grow and that most of that waste—80 percent—is currently disposed of on or in the land.

It has become evident that a strong congressional expression of disapproval of EPA's slow and timid implementation of the existing law is necessary, as well as a clear congressional directive mandating certain bold, preventive actions by EPA which will not be taken otherwise, despite the existing, broad authorities contained in RCRA.

EPA has not implemented the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act aggressively. The Agency has missed deadlines, proposed inadequate regulations, and even exacerbated the hazardous waste problem by suspending certain regulations.

It has become evident that this slow, plodding course will be continued in the absence of a clear congressional directive. This is not acceptable. Accordingly, S. 757 provides more specific guidance to EPA as to how the broad grants of authority of the existing RCRA law should be used.

The bill declares as congressional policy that—

> To avoid substantial risk to human health and the environment, reliance on land disposal should be minimized and land disposal, particularly landfill and surface impoundment, should be the least favored method for managing hazardous wastes.

It specifically reaffirms the Administrator's authority to prohibit land disposal methods that cannot be shown to be protective of human health and the environment, and directs the Administrator to use that authority. Deadlines are established by which EPA must evaluate all wastes listed as hazardous and subject to RCRA regulation, as to the appropriateness of their disposal on land.

The bill establishes minimum technological standards for land disposal facilities and incinerators to insure that EPA requires the use of the best technology available at hazardous waste disposal facilities.

Henceforth, the use of landfills will be circumscribed by strict rules governing, first, under section 5, what kinds of materials may be landfilled, and, second, under section 6, what the physical character of the landfills themselves will be.

The minimum technological requirements under section 6 for new and, eventually, for existing landfills will start with double liners, a leachate collection system, and a monitoring system—as a modicum of protection and integrity. But it is necessary to do more. In its section 5 technical evaluations, EPA will match certain wastes to certain land disposal technologies or determine that no match is feasible. Within the framework of those evaluations, Congress under the terms of this legislation is also directing EPA to take into account certain locational characteristics with respect to all land disposal facilities in the country in order to establish a performance range for landfills. The locational characteristics to be factored into EPA's analyses include, among others, the hydrogeology of the site, and climatological and demographic effects. Landfills thus will be able to be assessed according to their hyrogeologic performance and classified as fully acceptable, acceptable for certain limited uses, and unacceptable. With a phaseout of unacceptable landfills and a highly analytic evaluation of the remainder according to their highest and best uses, I anticipate that the health and safety of the American people will be significantly enhanced with respect to their potential exposure to harmful toxics in the environment.

The bill expands the coverage of the law to those who generate between 100 and 1,000 kilograms of waste a month. In 1980, EPA exempted all generators of less than 1,000 kilograms, solely on the basis of its workload, and stated that it intended to initiate rulemaking to expand the law's coverage within 2 to 5 years.

This has not occurred. Accordingly, the committee proposes to implement EPA's 1980 commitment. This will bring into the regulatory system an additional 15 million tons of hazardous waste.

The bill strengthens significantly the role of citizens in enforcing the law. As the sponsor of this provision, I believe that it will provide an important and necessary supplement to EPA's efforts.

The bill expands the law to prevent the export of hazardous waste to foreign countries without the receiving country's consent.

I would like to discuss in greater detail two provisions of S. 757 which I sponsored.

CITIZEN SUITS

The citizen suit amendments contained in S. 757 provide an important supplement to the efforts of the Federal and State Governments to abate the most serious kinds of hazardous waste situations: Those that may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to human health or the environment.

I reiterate: These amendments are a supplement to, not a substitute for Government action.

Under current law, a citizen may bring suit to enforce a permit or other similar RCRA requirement if EPA fails to do so. However, citizens are not now authorized to sue to abate an "imminent and substantial endangerment" to health or the environment. Only EPA can sue to abate an imminent hazard under current law. If EPA does not act, the endangerment continues.

In light of the thousands of known hazardous waste sites across this country, this simply does not make sense.

The Environmental Protection Agency clearly does not have the resources to deal with all of these sites, nor do the States.

Citizen suits to abate imminent hazards can expand the national effort to minimize these very real threats to our well-being.

This bill authorizes citizens to bring imminent hazard suits in the absence of EPA action. The provision is structured carefully in the following ways to ensure that citizen suits do not interfere with ongoing Federal or State enforcement efforts:

Citizen action cannot occur until 120 days after EPA, the affected State and the alleged defendant have been given notice of intent to sue.

If EPA or the State is pursuing an enforcement action, administratively or judicially, citizens cannot bring suit, but can intervene in the Federal or State action; and

If EPA or the State has settled an action to abate an activity which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment, citizen suit is barred with respect to that activity.

Two safeguards against frivolous suits have been added to the bill, in response to concerns expressed by committee members. First, attorneys fees are authorized to be awarded by a court only to a "substantially prevailing" party. A citizen who brings a suit which has little or no merit does so only at his own expense, which may be considerable.

Second, citizens are prohibited from bringing an imminent hazard suit to challenge the siting of a hazardous waste treatment, storage or disposal facility. This precludes the use of this new authority solely as a delaying tactic. Concerns about the proposed siting of such facilities are more appropriately raised in the context of the law's permitting process.

The citizen suit amendments to S. 757 also clarify the intent of the current law that citizens do have a statutory right to intervene in imminent hazard cases brought by EPA. This right of intervention has been an important mechanism for insuring citizen involvement in litigation and proposed settlements between EPA and defendant companies.

However, recent court opinions have held to the contrary. There is now a conflict in statutory interpretation which needs to be resolved.

It is important that the statutory intent with respect to intervention in imminent hazard cases be clarified for a number of reasons.

First, the citizens of a community in which a hazardous waste site is located are the persons most affected by the health and environmental hazards it presents. The citizens of that community therefore have the most at stake in the adequacy of the Government's litigation efforts in court or in a settlement agreement between the two parties. It is an issue of fundamental fairness that those most affected should be permitted to participate in the judicial resolution of such important problems without the burden and expense of seeking permissive intervention by showing that the Government is not adequately representing the citizens' interest.

Second, citizen involvement provides an important set of checks and balances in the enforcement process. By overseeing the Government's efforts, citizens can assure themselves and the public at large that all views are represented in the process, and that the outcome is based on all available knowledge. This gives the outcome additional credibility, which is particularly needed after the events of recent years.

Third, a statutory right of intervention is not a unique concept in enviromental law. It is explicitly conferred by RCRA for cases brought by EPA to enforce RCRA permits and regulations. The right also exists in enforcement cases brought under the Toxic Substances Control Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Safe Drinking Water Act.

EXPORT OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

The hazardous waste export provision in S. 757 seeks to substitute a tightened export control process for the notification procedure which has been in effect since 1980.

The section is based on the belief that foreign nations which receive U.S. hazardous wastes should give their consent before the shipments occur. At the present time, only an annual notice is provided to receiving countries prior to the initial shipment. This notice does not give the receiving nation any indication of the quantity of the waste proposed for export, or of the frequency of shipments. Moreover, it does not indicate where the waste is to be treated or disposed.

If I were the environmental minister of a foreign nation, I would want to know as much as possible about the hazardous waste coming into my country. If I were the U.S. Secretary of State, I would want to be sure that no American ally or trading partner is saddled with U.S. wastes it does not want or does not have the capacity to handle in an environmentally sound manner.

The export provision will guarantee that the wishes of foreign states are considered and that U.S. international interests are safeguarded. It establishes a more comprehensive and responsible waste export policy with a minimum of additional regulatory burden on U.S. generators.

The proposed permit system is quite simple. In the absence of a bilateral agreement between the United States and the government of the receiving country setting forth specific notice, export, and enforcement procedures for the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of wastes, no person shall export hazardous wastes unless—

First. Such person has notified the Administrator of the plan to export;

Second. The Government of the receiving country has agreed, in writing to the plan;

Third. A copy of the receiving country's written consent is attached to the manifest accompanying each waste shipment; and Fourth. The shipment conforms with the terms of such receiving country's consent.

When this program becomes effective, it will at long last become possible for the executive branch to determine the amounts and ultimate destination of U.S.-generated hazardous waste which are exported each year. Once this information is available, EPA and the Congress will be able to gauge whether the export right is being abused and whether further controls are necessary or desirable.

This important new provision incorporates suggestions made by EPA and industry. It will, I believe, ensure that the right to export does not become a right to circumvent RCRA.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, we have worked long and hard on this package of amendments. I believe that we have achieved a workable balance between two conflicting considerations:

First. The recognition that unless the status quo with respect to the handling of hazardous wastes is altered radically, we will be condoning the eventual chemical contamination of all elements of our natural life-support system—air, water, and land; and

Second. The reality that because the pervasive nature of the hazardous waste problem is largely a result of a successful industralized society, the ultimate solution is a basic change in the operation of large segments of our industries—a course that should be charted carefully and brought about at a deliberate but measured pace.

S. 757 represents a mandate for change in the status quo. It also represents a mandate for informed regulation which does not threaten precipitous disruptions which could ultimately doom our legislative strategy to failure.

The bill before us is a compromise in the best sense of that term. It attempts to accommodate the many varied concerns expressed by hundreds of persons over the past years. It is also a compromise in the sense that probably no one person or interest supports every single element of the legislation.

We have had to make difficult judgments as to how the results we desire can be best achieved. S. 757 represents that judgment. I urge my colleagues to support the legislation before the Senate. If approved it will be another significant achievement by this body in assuring a safe environment for all persons of this country.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, when the Committee on Environment and Public Works considered amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act, it was confronted with the increasingly difficult problem of legislating in a complex technical arena. When the committee first developed the landmark Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976, it recognized that quick solutions to the problem of environmentally harmful waste disposal would not be possible. There are millions of tons of waste generated in the United States, much of which is considered hazardous under the criteria created by the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. Eliminating this waste or assuring its disposal in the most environmentally protective manner depends upon a regulatory approach that alters the cost and availability of improper alternatives. Regulatory development and implementation has been slower than expected, in part due to the difficulties of assuring the availability of disposal or treatment alternatives.

Over the years, evidence has been presented to the committee that certain types of land disposal techniques do not constitute sound long-term disposal options. In particular, landfills and surface impoundments will ultimately leak no matter how secure their original construction, no matter how well they are initially lined. In this context, the committee was faced with considering whether landfills and surface impoundments should be allowed to receive certain types of waste. It is a troubling dilemma when Congress must address detailed technical problems as a matter of public policy. Unfortunately, we do not have the expertise to acquire and assess the information on these problems in the same fashion as a regulatory agency. Generally, we are not scientists, we are not engineers, we do not have the detailed experience in the design, construction, and operation of various technical alternatives. Nevertheless, when public policy demands it, Congress must be prepared to squarely confront these difficult decisions.

Within this legislation the committee compels the EPA Administrator to determine whether certain wastes should continue to be deposited in land disposal facilities. The bill provides a rigorous time schedule for these decisions. If the Administrator fails to adhere to the schedule, the bill requires that the waste be deposited in the most technologically advanced land disposal facilities until a decision is made. In adopting this approach, the committee rejected arguments that failure of EPA to make a timely judgment should result in the prohibition of placement of these wastes in land disposal sites.

It makes little sense to create a forcing mechanism which, if it fails to work, would drastically disrupt the fundamental waste disposal system. There is too much reliance on land disposal and too long a leadtime to get adequate alternatives into commercial operation to believe that the prohibition of land disposal as a penalty for EPA failing to conclude a regulatory study for unknown reasons is a proper environmental result. Consequently, the committee acted to assure that, if EPA could not meet the ambitious decision schedule included in this bill, wastes would be deposited in the most advanced disposal facility to enhance environmental protection.

Although the committee bill places a difficult test for the Administrator to meet in making a decision to allow a waste to continue land disposal, it recognizes that certain types of land disposal can be appropriate and environmentally sound. For example, land treatment may be an acceptable disposal alternative for those hazardous wastes which can be biodegraded or transformed directly by the land treatment process or, if hazardous substances remain after land treatment, where the hazardous substances can be immobilized.

Similarly, in requiring a showing that there is no migration of a waste, as long as the waste remains hazardous, from the disposal unit or the injection zone, the bill recognizes that underground injection of hazardous wastes can be safe environmental technology. Underground injection of hazardous wastes is regulated through the Safe Drinking Water Act. These regulations require so-called class I wells to inject below drinking water sources and to assure that no migration will occur from the injection zone. This bill specifically refers to the term "injection zone" as it is used in the Safe Drinking Water Act and its regulations.

Thus, operators who can demonstrate that their wells meet the underground injection control regulations would be able to show that the waste that they dispose of would not migrate from the injection zone. Similarly, States that operate approved underground injection control programs could make such a demonstration for all approved wells within the State. This is an important element of the bill. While there is considerable anxiety over the use of the land for the disposal of hazardous waste, it is equally important that the law provide an adequate distinction between those techniques that can be environmentally sound and those that cannot. This distinction is provided for class I underground injection wells that meet existing regulations which require no migration from the injection zone; it is a proper distinction.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, we have some housekeeping details, but I would just taken one of them and then I know Senator BURDICK, Senator BRADLEY, and Senator LAUTENBERG have amendments.

Let me just take this one first:

Mr. President, on October 28, 1983, the Committee on Environment and Public Works favorably reported S. 757 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be agreed to and that all subsequent amendments be to the text of S. 757 as reported on October 28, 1983.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island request that the amendment agreed to be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3405

(Purpose: This amendment instructs the Administrator of EPA to study methods for extending the useful life of sanitary landfills and to explore more efficient ways to use filled or closed landfills)

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] proposes an amendment numbered 3405.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

S. 757 is amended by adding the following new section:

SEC. . Section 8002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting after subsection (p) the following new subsection, and redesignating succeeding subsections accordingly:

"(q) EXTENDING LANDFILL LIFE AND REUSING LANDFILLING AREAS.—The Administrator shall conduct detailed, comprehensive studies of methods to extend the useful life of sanitary landfills and to better use sites in which filled or closed landfills are located. Such studies shall address—

"(1) methods to reduce the volume of materials before placement in landfills;

"(2) more efficient systems for depositing waste in landfills;

"(3) methods to enhance the rate of decomposition of solid waste in landfills, in a safe and environmentally acceptable manner;

"(4) methane production from closed landfill units;

"(5) innovative uses of closed landfill sites, including use for energy production such as solar or wind energy and use for metals recovery;

"(6) potential for use of sewage treatment sludge in reclaiming landfilled areas; and

"(7) methods to coordinate use of a landfill owned by one municipality by nearby municipalities, and to establish equitable rates for such use, taking into account the need to provide future landfill capacity to replace that so used.

The Administrator is authorized to conduct demonstrations in the areas of study provided in this subsection. The Administrator shall periodically report on the results of such studies, with the first such report submitted not later than October 1, 1986.".

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I am introducing an amendment to S. 757, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. This amendment instructs the Administrator of EPA to study methods for extending the useful life of sanitary landfills and to explore more efficient ways to use filled or closed landfills.

In North Dakota and all over the country there are thousands of municipalities with landfills that are filled or nearly filled to capacity. Finding sites to replace these landfills is becoming increasingly more difficult and expensive. Cities in my State can't find or afford to buy more landfill sites. The city fathers have thrown up their hands in frustration because they don't know where to turn for help.

EPA has not studied this problem in sufficient detail for over a decade. As a consequence, EPA officials currently are unable to assist those municipalities who need help and guidance.

I propose that it is time for EPA to refocus its efforts in this area. Time marches on and it is essential now that the Agency reexamine the studies it conducted, in some cases, 10 to 15 years ago. Once the Agency has fulfilled this task, it is imperative that it share the information with those State and local officials who desperately need it.

I want to stress to my colleagues that this problem will not go away, it will only persist and cause greater problems for future generations unless something constructive is done. If North Dakota can't find sufficient landfill sites, consider the difficulties facing heavily populated urban States.

Now is the time to direct EPA to concentrate on this growing problem of garbage disposal. I am asking them to study the following areas:

First, methods to reduce the volume of garbage before it is placed in landfills;

Second, more efficient systems of depositing waste in landfills;

Third, ways to make solid waste decompose faster;

Fourth, the possibility of producing methane from closed landfill units;

Fifth, innovative uses of closed landfill sites, including solar or wind energy production and metals recovery; and

Sixth, methods to coordinate use of a landfill owned by one municipality by nearby municipalities, and to establish equitable rates for such use, taking into account the need to provide future landfill capacity to replace that so used.

The Administrator is authorized to conduct demonstrations in the areas of study provided in the amendment. I suggest a good place to consider a demonstration project of this kind would be in Fargo, ND. Because their landfill is nearly filled to capacity, they would value any assistance and guidance EPA could give them.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as far as this side is concerned, the amendment is a good one, and we accept it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The amendment is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment (No. 3405) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3406

(Purpose: To provide for State credits for Superfund work and extend the natural resource damage deadline)

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. ABDNOR, proposes an amendment numbered 3406.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end thereof add the following new section:

"STATE-FEDERAL RELATIONS UNDER THE SUPERFUND ACT"

SEC. . (2)(1) Section 104(d)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new sentence: "For the purposes of the last sentence of subsection (c)(3) of this section, the President may enter into a contract or cooperative agreement with a State under this paragraph under which such state will take response actions in connection with releases listed pursuant to section 105(8)(B), using non-Federal funds for such response actions, in advance of and without any obligation by the President of amounts from the Fund for such response actions.".

(2) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following sentence: "The President shall grant the State a credit against the share of costs for which it is responsible under this paragraph for any reasonable, documented, direct out-of-pocket non-Federal funds expended or obligated by the State under a contract agreement under the last sentence of subsection (d)(1).".

(b) Section 112(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No claim may be presented, nor may an action be commenced, under this title—

"(1) for the costs of response, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of completion of the response action;

"(2) for damages under subparagraph (C) of section 107(a), unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date on which final regulations are promulgated under section 301(c); or

"(3) for any other damages, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of the discovery of the loss or within three years after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later: Provided, however, That the time limitations contained in this paragraph shall not begin to run against a minor until he reaches eighteen years of age or a legal representative is duly appointed for him, nor against an incompetent person until his incompetency ends or a legal representative is duly appointed for him.".

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator LAUTENBERG, Senator BAUCUS, and Senator ABDNOR also be added as original cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY Mr. President, this is the State credit and natural resources damage amendment that I have discussed with the two floor managers.

The amendment has two parts; the first would allow a State with EPA approval to clean up a Superfund site using State funds and then receive credit for its expenditures. The credit would be used at any Superfund site in the State.

Mr. President, this is not a new concept. We used it in the original Superfund law passed in 1980. Section 104(c) of the Superfund law allows EPA to give States credit for State expenditures at approved Superfund sites. As the Superfund law was being written, we recognized that States ought to be allowed to begin the cleanup at particularly threatening Superfund sites even before Superfund money was available. The State credit provision included in the Superfund law thus allowed EPA to repay States for their early cleanup efforts. This mechanism was a good one and should be used again now as Superfund money begins to dry up pending reauthorization.

This State credit provision would enable States to pay for site cleanup with their own funds and then receive credits for these expenditures for other Superfund work. This will allow us to maintain the cleanup momentum. While we wait for additional funds to be earmarked for the Superfund, we must not allow the feasibility and design studies that have already been completed to sit idle. The State of New Jersey for example is prepared to spend as much as $130 million of its own funds to start the cleanup process at the most severe sites. But how can we expect them to make this commitment without some assurance that they will receive credit for the work they do? Without such as assurance we are telling States like New Jersey to sit on their hands—and their drums of toxic wastes—until the EPA gets around to doing something or until Congress and the President get around to reauthorizing Superfund. From an environmental health standpoint and, more importantly from a public creditibility standpoint, the cleanup must begin without delay.

Each day the sites in New Jersey and in other States are slowly worsening—continuing to pollute the water, continuing to create victims. We can enable States to proceed without delay by allowing States to use their own funds and then allowing EPA to give them credit for other Superfund work. States would be limited to approved sites on the national priorities list and would be subject to the terms of a specific EPA/State agreement. This amendment is crucially important and time sensitive.

Allow me to describe the mechanics of this process. EPA has a list of 546 Superfund sites that are eligible for Superfund cleanup funds. These sites are ranked in order of the severity of the threat to public health. The worst sites, those at the top of the list, are first in line for funds. Indeed, several of the worst sites have already been cleaned up and we are working our way down the list.

The problem arises when a State is ready to clean up a site before EPA is ready to fund that clean up. EPA's reason for delay may be lack of available funds, for example. If allowed to occur, delays can render feasibility studies obsolete. More troubling, delays generate cynicism and anger on the part of citizens waiting for cleanup of neighborhood sites. If this amendment is adopted the State would negotiate with EPA an agreement whereby the State agrees to clean up a site further down on the priority list using its own funds. The State/EPA agreement would specify the method and extent of cleanup and would allow EPA to exercise the necessary control over the overall Superfund program just as if Federal funds were to be used. As the State obligates funds for this site, it would be accruing credit that could be used toward its share of the costs of other Superfund sites being cleaned up in the regular order.

Mr. President, this amendment will allow Superfund to proceed uninterrupted. It will allow States to bridge the funding gap that would otherwise delay cleanup and disappoint citizen's expectations. Citizens have been disappointed by the pace of the program for the past 4 years. We must not disappoint them again.

The second part of this amendment would resolve a catch-22 that has stymied one important provision of the Superfund law. A portion of the Superfund was made available to clean up damage to natural resources: rivers, lakes, streams. A statute of limitations of 3 years from date of enactment was established. The administration was to issue regulations implementing this provision. Many States were waiting for the regulations to be issued so that they could file claims. Other States, such as New Jersey, filed claims without the benefit of the implementing regulations.

The implementing regulations were never issued and last December the statutory deadline for filing claims expired.

The amendment I am now offering would extend the deadline for filing natural resource damage claims to 3 years from the date the Department of Interior publishes final regulations.

Mr. President, the two managers and their able staffs have been most helpful and supportive in the preparation of this amendment. I believe they are willing to accept the amend. They agreed to accept these Superfund amendments now rather than on the Superfund reauthorization because of the time sensitivity of both parts. I have agreed to work my remaining Superfund amendments—regarding operation and maintenance costs and preemption—into the Superfund reauthorization.

I thank the managers for their support and for accepting the amendment.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] in offering an amendment to the pending Resource Conservation and Recovery Act extension to make changes in the Superfund program. I am hopeful that the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, on which I serve, will complete its comprehensive reauthorization of the Superfund program quickly, and that the Senate will revise and renew Superfund this year.

However, we rise today to offer this amendment to Superfund as an insurance policy. It deals with time sensitive issues of great importance to New Jersey.

One of the greatest challenges we face to day is protecting the public and our environment from the hazards of toxic waste. In Newark, NJ, and Times Beach, MO, at Love Canal, NY, and Globe, AZ, citizens experienced fear and illness associated with exposure to dioxin, benzene, asbestos, and other highly toxic chemicals.

We are only now beginning to gauge the magnitude of exposure to toxic chemicals in our environment. There are currently 546 abandoned hazardous waste sites on the Superfund's national priority list. The Environmental Protection Agency expects this number to quadruple over the next decade. There is no State whose citizens are free from the threat of toxic waste exposure. The responsibility to protect the public from hazardous waste exposure is shared by Federal, State, and local governments.

The amendment Senator BRADLEY and I offer today is intended to strengthen the effectiveness of the Federal-State partnership established by the Superfund program. The first part of our amendment is designed to remove disincentives under the existing Superfund program for States with aggressive hazardous waste programs to move faster than can currently be accommodated by Superfund. It would permit States to use their own funds to clean up sites, according to plans approved by EPA, without permanently foregoing Federal funds to which they would be entitled if they delayed action.

Under our amendment, States would receive a credit for cleaning up Superfund sites with their own funds, which can be applied against expenses for subsequent clean ups at other Superfund sites as they become eligible for Superfund money. This cost credit provision provides assurances to States that they will eventually receive the Federal funds for which they are eligible and that they will not be punished for early action.

This cost credit provision is critical to New Jersey, where an ambitious cleanup program is planned for next year. New Jersey's management plan for fiscal year 1985 calls for action on 69 separate major sites. It involves 150 design, engineering, or construction projects at a cost of $108 million in Federal Superfund. In 1986, $123 million will be needed to keep this program moving. New Jersey is willing to advance funding for these projects to expedite cleanup plans; the credit amendment we offer today will assure that New Jersey and other States that move quickly to clean up hazardous waste sites with their own funds will not be penalized by losing Federal funds to which they would be entitled under Superfund if they waited.

Eighty-five Superfund sites await cleanup in New Jersey. By the end of this summer, EPA may add another 15 sites which are candidates for Superfund listing. Not one site has been cleaned up in our State since Superfund was enacted 4 years ago. Our amendment will free New Jersey to start the critical work of reducing the number of sites on the list. The communities surrounding these dangerous sites should be free from exposure to toxic chemicals as quickly as possible.

Mr. President, the amendment Senator BRADLEY and I are offering today would also extend the statute of limitations for filing claims against the Superfund for natural resource damage. The natural resources claim provisions of Superfund provide that the Federal Government or any State may act as a public trustee and seek compensation for damages to forests, fish, wildlife, and surface and ground water, including polluted water supplies. Funds gained from claims, whether granted by the Superfund or reimbursed from responsible parties, are to be used to restore or replace damaged resources around Superfund sites.

When the statute of limitations expired in December 1983, 57 claims had been filed against the fund; 26 were from New Jersey. A month after the statute of limitations deadline, all claims were rejected by the Environmental Protection Agency for being improperly filed.

The rejection of these claims can be traced directly to the fact that EPA and the Department of the Interior failed to promulgate specifications for filing claims as required by Superfund.

Our amendment would clear up this catch-22 situation by extending the statute of limitations to 3 years following promulgation of the Federal specifications. It is my hope that EPA and the Department of the Interior will move swiftly to promulgate these specifications.

Substantial damage has been done to the environment around New Jersey's 85 Superfund sites. The funds received in response to natural resources claims would be used for restoring the environment around these sites as the Congress intended when it enacted the Superfund Program in 1980.

In closing, Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the managers of this bill for working with us on this amendment. They have been most cooperative.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor to the amendment to CERCLA section 112D to extend the statute of limitations regarding natural resource damage claims until EPA and the Department of the Interior has carried out the intent of Congress. The Committee on Environment and Public Works is preparing to review the Superfund Program but the statute of limitations for natural resource claims cannot wait.

CERCLA was enacted in December 1980. An important part of that legislation is a provision which allows States to make claims against Superfund for natural resource damages.

In my own State of Montana, mining and mine wastes have severely impacted the upper Clark Fork of the Columbia River drainage. National priority sites extend from Butte to Anaconda to the Milltown Dam just outside of Missoula. Mining near Butte along Silver Bow Creek has severely impacted the headwaters of the river. Further downstream in the town of Anaconda, the smelter has been identified as a major source of arsenic pollution. And then even further downstream, where the first dam stops the flow of the river, at Milltown, arsenic wastes have collected and polluted public drinking water supplies.

Now all of these sites are being addressed and response actions as required by Superfund are moving forward. They are being cleaned up. The Environmental Protection Agency, State of Montana, and the Anaconda Co. are cooperating. But that is not our problem.

THE PROBLEM

The problem is that these hazardous wastes have impacted not just these sites but the entire river drainage. Damage beyond the immediate sites is just as serious a problem as pollution from these sites.

Congress recognized the importance of natural resource damages when it enacted Superfund, yet not a single claim for damages from any State has been accepted by EPA.

FAILURE OF EPA AND THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The statute of limitations on section 112, the section dealing with natural resource damages, expired last December without either rules defining what is a natural resource damage or identifying how to file a natural resource damage claim being developed. States were left in the untenable position of either prematurely filing damage claims or forever losing their opportunity to be compensated for these damages.

Montana filed a $50 million suit against Anaconda Mineral Co. This action was premature. It jeopardized the cooperation that had been developed and is ongoing. They were forced to take this action not because they felt that Anaconda was being unreasonable. Rather, they were forced to take this action because both EPA and the Department of the Interior failed to carry out their responsibilities under the Superfund bill. EPA has done too little too late.

FAILURE OF EPA AND DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR TO ACT

The failure of the Environmental Protection Agency to develop rules and regulations on how to file a claim and the inaction of the Department of the Interior to determine what constitutes natural resource damage forced Montana to prematurely act.

Montana chose to preserve its rights by filing suit against Anaconda Minerals Co. for up to $50 million for damages resulting from operation of its Berkley Pit and other facilities at Butte. Make no mistake, this is not the strongest suit Montana has ever filed. It was filed at the last moment trying to beat a deadline against a statute of limitations which was about to run out without the Department of the Interior and EPA ever exercising its responsibilities.

The suit alleged injury to land, surface and ground water, drinking water, fish, plants and animals in the general vicinities of the pit and related facilities, particularly Silver Bow Creek and the upper reaches of the Clark Fork River.

This was clearly premature but Montana and other States around the Nation were put in a position of either acting prior to December 11 or forever losing their opportunity to be compensated.

A total of 57 claims for over $2.7 million were filed with EPA These were all denied. I will ask unanimous consent that letters of rejection of their claims be entered in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

This amendment will preserve the rights of Montana and other States to legitimately seek damages to their natural resources caused by hazardous waste. By ensuring that the statute of limitations will not dictate who they can assess damages against, but rather, ensuring that a State will have 3 years after the Department of the Interior defines what constitutes natural resource damage and EPA has promulgated rules and regulations to determine whether or not damages have occurred.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letters I referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY,
Washington, DC, January 27, 1984.

(Certified Mail—Return Receipt Requested)
Re NR-CERCLA-84-4.
Mr. THOMAS P. LOOBY,
Acting Assistant Director, Colorado Department of Health, State of Colorado, Denver, CO.

DEAR MR. LOOBY: This letter is in response to your letters, dated December 9, 1983, to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. By those letters, twenty-two in all, you intended to present Colorado's claims, pursuant to sections 111 and 112 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA), for damages against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for injury to, loss or destruction of natural resources.

To submit a valid natural resource claim against the Fund pursuant to section 112 of CERCLA, the requirements of sections 111 and 112 of CERCLA must be fulfilled. Section 112(a) provides:

"All claims which may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to section 111 of this title shall be presented in the first instance to the owner, operator, or guarantor of the vessel or facility from which a hazardous substance has been released, if known to the claimant, and to any person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 107 of this title. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within sixty days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against such owner, operator, guarantor, or other person or to present the claim to the Fund for payment."

Thus, in order to file a claim to the Fund, the State must have presented the claim to the persons described in section 112(a). The Agency interprets this condition to be satisfied if the person or persons to whom the claim has been presented has refused to pay the claim or if the sixty-day period has elapsed without payment—whichever occurs sooner.

Section 111(i) provides:

"Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agencies and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment."

The Agency interprets section 111(i) to require trustees of natural resources to have completed and submitted to the Agency a plan that satisfies the requirements of section 111(i) and to have received prior approval ("preauthorization") of that plan from the Agency's Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response before a claim for injury to a natural resource may be presented to the Fund.[1]

The claims you presented do not satisfy the requirements of section 112(a). Where responsible parties were identified, sixty days had not elapsed between the date of your notice and the date of your filing against the Fund. Where no responsible parties were identified, you did not indicate the steps taken to identify such parties, nor the period of time over which you searched for the party or parties. For this reason, it does not appear that you have satisfied the requirements of section 112(a).

In addition, it is clear that the second precondition, preauthorization, has not been satisfied. Your letter does not discuss a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss or similar need for emergency action, nor has the State completed and received EPA's approval of a plan for restoring, rehabilitating, or acquiring equivalent natural resources.

Because the preconditions of Section 112(a) and 111(i) have not been met, you have not submitted a valid claim against the Fund.

Even if you had met the necessary preconditions for proper submission of claims, the agency would be unable to evaluate the claims' merits because many relevant facts are missing. As noted previously, several claims do not provide information on your efforts to identify and obtain satisfaction of your claim from responsible parties to satisfy the requirements of section 112(a). Your submission also provides insufficient factual descriptions of the injury, loss or destruction of natural resources. That is, there is no explanation of the nature or extent of the damage. Finally, your submissions do not state when the damage and release occurred, although you certify that the release and damages did not occur wholly before enactment of CERCLA.

If you have any questions with respect to submitting natural resource claims to the CERCLA Trust Fund, please call William O. Ross, who may be reached at (202) 382-4642.

Sincerely yours,

JACK W. MCGRAW,
Acting Assistant Administrator.

U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY,
Washington, DC, January 27, 1984.

(Certified Mail—Return Receipt Requested)

Re NR-CERCLA-84-5.

Mr. STEPHEN V. GODDARD,
Deputy Attorney General, State of Idaho, State Office Tower, Boise, ID.

DEAR MR. GODDARD: This letter is in response to your letter, dated December 12, 1983, to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. By this letter, you intended to present the State of Idaho's claim, pursuant to sections 111 and 112 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA), for damages against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for injury to, loss or destruction of Deep Creek on the Snake River.

To submit a valid natural resource claim against the Fund pursuant to section 112 of CERCLA, the requirements of sections 111 and 112 of CERCLA must be fulfilled. Section 112(a) provides:

"All claims which may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to section 111 of this title shall be presented in the first instance to the owner, operator, or guarantor of the vessel or facility from which a hazardous substance has been released, if known to the claimant, and to any person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 107 of this title. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within sixty days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against such owner, operator, guarantor, or other person or to present the claim to the Fund for payment."

Thus, in order to file a claim to the Fund, the State must have presented the claim to the persons described in section 112(a). The Agency interprets this condition to be satisfied if the person or persons to whom the claim has been presented has refused to pay the claim or if the sixty-day period has elapsed without payment—whichever occurs sooner.

Section 111(i) provides:

"Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agencies and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment."

The Agency interprets section 111(i) to require trustees of natural resources to have completed and submitted to the Agency a plan that satisfies the requirements of section 111(i) and to have received prior approval ("preauthorization") of that plan from the Agency's Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response before a claim for injury to a natural resource may be presented to the Fund.[1]

The claim you presented attempts to address the requirements of the first precondition. You indicate that the Secretary of State and the County Clerk do not have a record of the owner of the Red Ledge Mine. The owner is not the only person who may be liable under section 107 of CERCLA. You do not indicate further steps to identify present or past owners or efforts to identify other potentially liable parties. For this reason, it does not appear that you have satisfied the requirements of section 112(a).

In addition, it is clear from your submission that the second precondition, preauthorization, has not been satisifed. Your letter does not discuss a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss or a similar need for emergency action, nor has the State completed and received EPA's approval of a plan for restoring, rehabilitating, or acquiring equivalent natural resources.

Because the preconditions of section 112(a) and 111(i) of CERCLA have not been met, you have not submitted a valid claim to the Fund.

Even if you had met the necessary preconditions for proper submission of claims, the Agency would be unable to evaluate the merits of your submission because relevant facts are missing. As noted previously, you do not provide information on your efforts to identify all responsible parties. Further, the submission provides insufficient factual description of the injury, loss or destruction of Deep Creek. That is, there is no explanation of the nature or extent of the damage. Nor does the submission identify the current status of hazardous substances which caused the damage. Finally, your submission does not state when the damage and release occurred, facts that are necessary to establish that section 111(d) does not bar the claims submission. If the damage and the release occurred "wholly before the enactment" of CERCLA, such claims are not compensable under the statute.

If you have the questions with respect to submitting natural resource claims to the CERCLA Trust Fund, please call William O. Ross, who may be reached at (202) 382-4642.

Sincerely yours,

Re NR-CERCLA-84-1.

Mr. JOHN J. HOCKBERGER,
Deputy Attorney General, State of Idaho, Health and Welfare Division, State Office Tower, Boise, ID.

DEAR MR. HOCKBERGER: This letter is in response to your letter, dated December 8, 1983, to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. By this letter, you intended to present the State of Idaho's claims, pursuant to sections 111 and 112 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA), for damages against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for injury to, loss or destruction of natural resources.

To submit a valid natural resource claim against the Fund pursuant to section 112 of CERCLA, the requirements of sections 111 and 112 of CERCLA must be fulfilled. Section 112(a) provides:

"All claims which may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to section 111 of this title shall be presented in the first instance to the owner, operator, or guarantor of the vessel or facility from which a hazardous substance has been released, if known to the claimant, and to any person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 107 of this title. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within sixty days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against such owner, operator, guarantor, or other person or to present the claim to the Fund for payment."

Thus, in order to file a claim to the Fund, the State must have presented the claim to the persons described in section 112(a). The Agency interprets this condition to be satisfied if the person or persons to whom the claim has been presented has refused to pay the claim or if the sixty-day period has elapsed without payment—whichever occurs sooner.

[1] In addition, to the extent these claims can be properly classified as "response" claims, they are subject to the preauthorization requirement set out in 40 CFR § 300.25(d).

[1] In addition, to the extent these claim can be properly classified as "response" claims, they are subject to the preauthorization requirement set out in 40 CFR § 300.25(d).

Section 111(i) provides:

"Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agencies and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment."

The Agency interprets section 111(i) to require trustees of natural resources to have completed and submitted to the Agency a plan that satisfies the requirements of section 111(i) and to have received prior approval ("preauthorization") of that plan from the Agency's Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response before a claim for injury to a natural resource may be presented to the Fund.[1]

The claims you presented attempt to address the requirements of the first precondition. For both claims you indicate that the determination of responsibility and ownership is not possible. You do not indicate further steps to identify past or present owners or efforts to identify other potentially liable parties. For this reason it does not appear that you have satisfied the requirements of section 112(a).

In addition, it is clear from your submission that the second precondition, preauthorization, has not been satisfied. Your letter does not discuss a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss or a similar need for emergency action, nor has the State completed and received EPA's approval of a plan for restoring, rehabilitating, or acquiring equivalent natural resources.

Because the preconditions of section 112(a) and 111(i) have not been met, you have not submitted a valid claim against the Fund.

Even if you had met the necessary preconditions for proper submission of claims, the Agency would be unable to evaluate the claims' merits because relevant facts are missing. Your submission provides no factual descriptions of the injury, loss or destruction of the various natural resources. That is, there is no explanation of the nature or extent of the damage. Finally, your submissions do not state when the damage and release occurred, facts that are necessary to establish that section 111(d) does not bar the claims submission. This is essential in the case of your claim for Blackbird Creek-Meadow Creek-Panther Creek where you report "drainage since the 1890's." If the damage and the release occurred "wholly before the enactment" of CERCLA, such claims are not compensable under the statute.

If you have any questions with respect to submitting natural resource claims to the CERCLA Trust Fund, please call William O. Ross, who may be reached at (202) 382-4642.

Sincerely yours,

JACK W. MCGRAW,
Acting Assistant Administrator.

Re NR-CERCLA-84-2.

Mr. ROBERT E. HUGHEY,
Commissioner, State of New Jersey, Department of Environmental Protection, Trenton, NJ.

DEAR MR. HUGHEY: This letter is in response to your letters, dated December 9, 1983, to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. By those letters, twenty-six in all, you intended to present the State of New Jersey's claims, pursuant to sections 111 and 112 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA), for damages against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for injury to, loss or destruction of natural resources.

To submit a valid natural resource claim against the Fund pursuant to section 112 of CERCLA, the requirements of sections 111 and 112 of CERCLA must be fulfilled. Section 112(a) provides:

"All claims which may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to section 111 of this title shall be presented in the first instance to the owner, operator, or quarantor of the vessel or facility from which a hazardous substance has been released, if known to the claimant, and to any person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 107 of this title. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within sixty days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against such owner, operator, guarantor, or other person or to present the claim to the Fund for payment."

Thus, in order to file a claim to the Fund, the State must have presented the claim to the persons described in section 112(a). The Agency interprets this condition to be satisfied if the person or persons to whom the claim has been presented has refused to pay the claim or if the sixty-day period has elapsed without payment—whichever occurs sooner.

Section 111(i) provides:

"Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agenices and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment.

The Agency interprets section 111(i) to require trustees of natural resources to have completed and submitted to the Agency a plan that satisfies the requirements of section 111(i) and to have received prior approval ("preauthorization") of that plan from the Agency's Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response before a claim for injury to a natural resource may be presented to the Fund.[1]

The twenty-six claims you presented may meet the requirements of the first precondition, if the claims were presented prior to October, or if the parties to whom they were presented refused to pay them prior to the expiration of the sixty-day period. The claims state, in each case, that the responsible parties "have previously been presented with this claim and have not remitted any monies to the State in satisfaction thereof." To determine whether this precondition has been satisfied, however, the Agency would need to know the names of the responsible parties and the date on which the claim had been initially presented and the nature of the responsible parties' responses (if any).

The second precondition, however, has not been satisfied. Although your letters refer to section 111(i) and agree that "no claim funds will be used by the State prior to its development and adoption of such a plan," this does not satisfy the requirement that the planned activities be preauthorized. Accordingly, you have not submitted valid claims against the Fund.

Because the preconditions of sections 112(a) and 111(i) of CERCLA have not been met, you have not submitted a valid claim to the Fund.

Even if you had met the necessary preconditions for proper submission of claims, the Agency would be unable to evaluate the merits of your submissions because many relevant facts are missing. As noted previously, you do not identify any responsible parties or the dates on which the claims were presented to them. The submissions do not sufficiently identify the natural resources (e.g., wildlife, biota) damaged, or the basis by which the trustee has authority over them. Further, the submissions provide no factual description of the injury, loss or destruction of the various natural resources. That is, there is no explanation of the nature or extent of the damage or the time period of the occurrence. Nor do you identify the hazardous substances which caused the damage. Finally, your submissions do not state when the damage and release occurred, facts that are necessary to establish that section 111(d) of CERCLA does not bar the claims' submission. (If the damage and the release occurred "wholly before the enactment" of CERCLA, such claims are not compensable under the statute.)

If you have any questions with respect to submitting natural resource claims to the CERCLA Trust Fund, please call William O. Ross, who may be reached at (202) 382-4642.

Sincerely yours,

JACK W. MCGRAW,
Acting Assistant Administrator.

Mr. ROBERT B. VROOMAN,

DEAR MR. VROOMAN: This letter is in response to your letters, dated December 8, 1983, to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. By those letters, six in all, you intended to present South Dakota's claims, pursuant to sections 111 and 112 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensaton and Liability Act (CERCLA), for damages against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for injury to, loss or destruction of natural resources.

[1] In addition, to the extent these claims can be properly classified as "response" claims, they are subject to the preauthorization requirement set out in 40 CFR § 300.25(d).

To submit a valid natural resource claim against the Fund pursuant to section 112 of CERCLA, the requirements of sections 111 and 112 of CERCLA must be fulfilled. Section 112(a) provides:

"All claims which may be asserted against the Fund pursuant to section 111 of this title shall be presented in the first instance to the owner, operator, or guarantor of the vessel or facility from which a hazardous substance has been released, if known to the claimant, and to any person known to the claimant who may be liable under section 107 of this title. In any case where the claim has not been satisfied within sixty days of presentation in accordance with this subsection, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against such owner, operator, guarantor, or other person or to present the claim to the Fund for payment.

Thus, in order to file a claim to the Fund, the State must have presented the claim to the persons described in section 112(a). The Agency interprets this condition to be satisfied if the person or persons to whom the claim has been presented has refused to pay the claim or if the sixty-day period has elapsed without payment—whichever occurs sooner.

Section 111(i) provides:

"Except in a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss of natural resources or to prevent or reduce any continuing danger to natural resources or similar need for emergency action, funds may not be used under this Act for the restoration, rehabilitation, or replacement or acquisition of the equivalent of any natural resources until a plan for the use of such funds for such purposes has been developed and adopted by affected Federal agencies and the Governor or Governors of any State having sustained damage to natural resources within its borders, belonging to, managed by or appertaining to such State, after adequate public notice and opportunity for hearing and consideration of all public comment."

The Agency interprets section 111(i) to require trustees of natural resources to have completed and submitted to the Agency a plan that satisfies the requirements of section 111(i) and to have received prior approval ("preauthorization") of that plan from the Agency's Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response before a claim for injury to a natural resource may be presented to the Fund.[1]

The claims you presented attempt to address the requirements of the first precondition. For both claims you indicate that the determination of responsibility and ownership is not possible. You do not indicate further steps to indentify past or present owners or efforts to identify other potentially liable parties. For this reason it does not appear that you have satisfied the requirements of section 112(a).

In addition, it is clear from your submission that the second precondition, preauthorization, has not been satisfied. Your letter does not discuss a situation requiring action to avoid an irreversible loss or a similar need for emergency action, nor has the State completed and received EPA's approval of a plan for restoring, rehabilitating, or acquiring equivalent natural resources.

Because the preconditions of section 112(a) and 111(i) of CERCLA have not been met, you have not submitted a valid claim to the Fund.

Even if you had met the necessary preconditions for proper submission of claims, the Agency would be unable to evaluate the merits of your submission because many relevant facts are missing. As noted previously, your submissions do not provide complete information on your efforts to identify all responsible parties. The submissions provide insufficient factual description of the injury, loss or destruction of natural resources. That is, there is no explanation of the nature or extent of the damage. Finally, your submissions do not state when the damage and release occurred, although you certify that the release and damages did not occur wholly before enactment of CERCLA.

If you have any questions with respect to submitting natural resource claims to the CERCLA Trust Fund, please call William O. Ross, who may be reached at (202) 382-4642.

Sincerely yours,

JACK W. MCGRAW,

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment of Senator BRADLEY, it is a good amendment and makes sense. It is acceptable to this side.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have reviewed the amendment with Senator BRADLEY, Senator LAUTENBERG, and Senator CHAFEE. It is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment (No. 3406) was agreed to.

Mr CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3407

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], for himself and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3407:

On page 93, after line 20, add the following new section:

CLARIFICATION OF CRIMINAL LIABILITY

SEC. 30. Section 3008(d)(2)(A) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "having obtained."

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask, unanimous consent that my senior colleague [Mr. BRADLEY] be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment to S. 757, to strengthen the criminal enforcement provisions of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. I originally introduced this amendment as S. 2741, the Criminal Liability Clarification Act, on June 7, 1984. My colleague from New Jersey [Senator BRADLEY] joins me as a cosponsor of this amendment, which was sponsored in the House of Representatives by Congressman JIM FLORIO.

The purpose of my amendment is to clarify that the criminal provisions in RCRA extend to any individual who knowingly and illegally disposes of hazardous waste. It will close a dangerous loophole created by a recent Federal district court decision that could let many midnight dumpers of hazardous waste off the hook.

Over 240 million tons of hazardous wastes are generated per year in our country—1 ton for every man, woman, and child in this country. Official estimates indicate that the majority of these wastes are disposed of improperly or in violation of Federal laws.

In the face of continuing threats posed by illegal dumping of hazardous wastes, the Justice Department has recently moved to grant police powers, including the right to bear firearms, to Environmental Protection Agency criminal investigators. An astounding one-half of all criminal investigations currently carried out by EPA involve violations of toxic-waste transportation and disposal regulations. Granting EPA the right to conduct searches and make arrests should result in more effective enforcement efforts and provide an additional deterrent to those who would engage in these unpardonable acts.

I am concerned that Federal enforcement efforts may be seriously compromised by a Federal district court decision. This decision, rendered in September of last year, could prevent a substantial percentage of those apprehended for illegal dumping from being prosecuted and punished.

In United States against Johnson and Towers, the Federal District Court of New Jersey dismissed from criminal liability two plant supervisors who were routinely ordering the dumping of thousands of gallons of acetone and other chemicals into a trench behind their factory and a nearby stream. The dismissal in the case was based on a misreading of congressional intent and could undermine the effectiveness of Federal programs for regulating hazardous-waste disposal.

Under RCRA, an owner or operator of a facility producing hazardous wastes must apply for a disposal permit. The illegal disposal in this case was ordered by the plant's supervisors, and not the owners or operators of the company in question. The owners and operators were technically responsible for acquiring a disposal permit under RCRA. Therefore, the court ruled that the supervisors could not be held liable under RCRA for knowingly disposing of hazardous waste "without having obtained a permit."

Mr. President, the interpretation of RCRA in United States against Johnson and Towers is not a fair reading of congressional intent. The practice of midnight dumping was of deep concern in 1980 when Congress amended RCRA. In 1980, RCRA enforcement procedures were improved and penalties toughened in order to put a stop to midnight dumping. The language in the law is clear and unambiguous. It imposes a criminal penalty on any person who, lacking a permit, knowingly and illegally treats, stores, transports, or disposes of any hazardous material. It was not the intent of Congress that criminal liability extend only to the owners and operators of facilities, who are responsible for obtaining a RCRA permit. This, however, is the way the district court interpreted RCRA.

The Justice Department has appealed the decision in United States against Johnson and Towers to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. While I am hopeful that this appeal will be successful, the impact of the decision is now being felt from New Jersey to California. The amendment I offer today, with my colleague from New Jersey, would clarify congressional intent to extend the criminal penalty provisions in RCRA to any person who knowingly engages in illegal dumping practices. I hope it will also send a clear signal to midnight dumpers that they cannot continue to dispose of toxic wastes in our backyards, sewer systems, rivers, and streams with impunity.

Noncompliance with the RCRA program has been a tremendous problem across this country. We must work to improve compliance. Effective criminal provisions, that provide strong disincentives for illegal disposal of wastes, are an important step toward safe management of hazardous wastes under RCRA. I appreciate the support of the committee for this amendment and urge its adoption.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from New Jersey in this very important amendment. It sends a message to midnight dumpers that when they are caught, they will be prosecuted and they will be punished. No more loopholes will be available.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I commend the Senators from New Jersey for coming up with this amendment.

I must say that I do not know how the Federal judge ever arrived at his conclusion. We know from intimate contact with Federal judges, both present and past, that their wisdom is usually unexcelled. How this could have occurred leaves me dumbfounded. Nonetheless, it did happen, and it seems wise to correct it.

I think the Senators from New Jersey have done a fine public service by proposing this amendment, and it is certainly acceptable to this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I join Senator CHAFEE in commending Senators LAUTENBERG and BRADLEY. The amendment is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3407) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3408

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], for himself and Senators MOYNIHAN, LAUTENBERG, BRADLEY, COHEN, HUMPHREY, and HEINZ poses an amendment numbered 3408.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end thereof add the following new section: (a) the Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) is amended by adding a new Part F as follows:

"PART F—REGULATION OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS CONTAINING SUBSTANCES OTHER THAN HAZARDOUS WASTE

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1451. For the purposes of this part, the term—

"(1) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(2) 'regulated substance' means (A) any substance defined in section 101(14) of Public Law 97-510, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (but not including substances regulated as hazardous wastes under the Solid Waste Disposal Act), and (B) petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure (60 degrees Fahrenheit and 14.7 pounds per square inch absolute);

"(3) 'owner' means (A) in the case of an underground storage tank in use on the date of enactment of this part or brought into use after that date, any person who owns an underground storage tank used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances, and (B) in the case of any underground storage tank previously in use but no longer in use on the date of enactment of this part, any person who owned such tank immediately prior to discontinuation of use;

"(4) 'operator' means any person in control of or having responsibility for the daily operation of the underground storage tank for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances;

"(5) 'person' means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, trust, consortium, joint venture, commercial entity, United States Government, State, municipality, commission, political subdivision of a State, or any interstate body;

"(6) 'release' means any actual spilling, leaking emitting, discharging, escaping, leaching, or disposing from an underground storage tank into ground water, surface water or subsurface soils;

"(7) 'underground storage tank' means any tank, including underground pipes connected thereto, which is used to contain an accumulation of regulated substances and which is substantially or totally beneath the surface of the ground. This term does not include (i) aboveground storage tanks which are in compliance with national consensus codes and for which ninety (90%) or more of the tank volume is above the ground surface, (ii) farm or residential underground storage tanks of one thousand one hundred gallons or less capacity used for storing motor fuel for noncommercial purposes, (iii) underground storage tanks used for storing heating oil for consumptive use on the premises where stored, (iv) septic tanks, (v) pipeline facilities regulated under the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1671, et seq.) or the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Act of 1978, as amended (40 U.S.C. 2001, et seq.), (vi) surface impoundments, pits, ponds or lagoons (vii) storm water and waste water collection systems, or (viii) flow-through process tanks;

"(8) 'nonoperational underground storage tank' means any tank which has been used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances which will not have regulated substances deposited or dispensed from the storage tank after the date of enactment of this part;

"(9) 'national consensus code' means any safety or fire standard or modification thereof which has been adopted and promulgated by a nationally recognized standards-producing organization, including National Fire Protection Association Standard Number 30, "Flammable and Combustible Liquids Code," and Western Fire Chiefs Association Uniform Fire Code Article Number 79, "Flammable and Combustible Liquids".

"NOTIFICATION AND CERTIFICATION

"SEC. 1452. (a)(1) UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—Within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, any owner of an underground storage tank shall notify the State or local agency or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location, and uses of such tank.

"(2) NONOPERATION UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—For any underground storage tank taken out of operation after January 1, 1974, the owner of such tank shall, within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, notify the State or local agency, or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tanks (unless the owner knows the tank subsequently was removed from the ground). Notice under this subsection shall specify to the extent known the date the tank was taken out of operation, the age on the date taken out of operation, the size, type and location of the tank, and the type and quantity of substances left stored in such tank on the date taken out of operation. This subsection shall not apply to tanks for which notice was given pursuant to section 103(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

"(3) Any owner which brings into use an underground storage tank after the initial notification under subsection (a)(1), shall notify the designated State or local agency or department within thirty days of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location and uses of such tank.

"(4) Beginning thirty days after the Administration prescribes the form of notice pursuant to subsection (b)(2) and for eighteen months thereafter, any person who deposits regulated substances in an underground storage tank shall reasonably notify the owner or operator of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(5) Beginning thirty days after the Administrator issues new tank performance standards pursuant to subsection 1453(d) of this part, any person who sells a tank intended to be used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances shall notify the purchaser of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(b)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of enactment of this part, the Governors of each State shall designate the appropriate State agency or department or local agencies or departments to receive the notifications under subsection (a)(1), (2), or (3).

"(2) Within twelve months of enactment of this part, the Administrator in consultation with State and local officials designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1), and after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall prescribe the form of the notice and the information to be included in the notifications under subsection (a)(1), (2), or (3). In issuing the form of such notice, the Administrator shall take into account the effect on small businesses and other owners and operators.

"RELEASE DETECTION, PREVENTION, AND CORRECTION REGULATIONS

"SEC. 1453. (a) The Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall promulgate release detection, prevention and correction regulations applicable to all owners and operators of underground storage tanks used for storing regulated substances, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.

"(b) In issuing regulations under this section, the Administrator may distinguish between types, classes, and ages of underground storage tanks. In making such distinctions, the Administrator may take into consideration the following factors, including, but not limited to: location of the tanks, soil and climate conditions, uses of the tanks, history of maintenance, age of the tanks, current industry recommended practices, national consensus codes, hydrogeology, water table, size of the tanks, quantity of regulated substances periodically deposited in or dispensed from the tank, the technical and managerial capability of the owners and operators, and the compatibility of the regulated substance and the materials of which the underground storage tank is fabricated.

"(c) The regulations promulgated pursuant to this section shall include, but need not be limited to, the following requirements respecting all underground storage tanks—

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or maintaining a comparable system or methods or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing or comparable system:

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(5) taking underground storage tank out of operation.

"(d) The Administrator shall promulgate regulations for maintaining evidence of financial responsibility and he deems necessary and desirable for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(c) The Administrator shall issue performance standards for underground storage tanks brought into use on or after the effective date of such standards. The performance standards for new underground storage tanks shall include, but need not be limited to, design, construction, installation, notification, compatibility and release detection standards.

"(f) Regulations issued pursuant to subsection (c) of this section and standards issued pursuant to subsection (d) of this section for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451 (2)(B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) shall be effective not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this part.

"(g) Until the effective date of the standards promulgated by the Administrator under subsection (d) of this section, and after ninety (90) days of enactment of this part, no person shall install an underground storage tank for the purpose of storing regulated substances unless such tank is installed and brought into use in accordance with an enforced national consensus code(s). Not later than six months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States his views on the national consensus code(s).

"APPROVAL OF STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1454. (a) Any State may thirty months after the date of enactment submit an underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction program for review and approval by the Administrator. The State must demonstrate that the State program includes the following elements and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements.

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing system;

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) standards of performance for new underground storage tanks;

"(5) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(6) taking underground storage tanks out of operation; and

"(7) maintaining evidence of financial responsibility for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(b) A State's new tank standards submitted for approval under subsection (a)(4) shall be no less stringent than the performance standards promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to subsection 1453(c).

"(c) Corrective action and compensation programs financed by fees on tank owners and operators and administered by State or local agencies or departments may be submitted for approval under subsection (a)(7) as evidence of financial responsibility.

"(d)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of the date of receipt of a proposed State program, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, make a determination whether the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements.

"(2) If the Administrator determines that a State program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements, he shall approve the State program in lieu of the Federal program and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with respect to requirements related to control of underground storage tanks used to store regulated substances.

"(3) Any State may submit and the Administrator shall approve an underground storage tank release, detection, prevention, and correction program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) but does not include tanks containing other regulated substances, if the Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, makes a determination that the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements. If a State program shall be approved under this subsection, the State program shall be in lieu of a Federal program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(b) and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with regard to such tanks.

"(e) Whenever the Administrator determines after public hearing that a State is not administering and enforcing a program authorized under this part in accordance with the requirements of this section, he shall so notify the State, and, if appropriate action is not taken within a reasonable time, not to exceed ninety days, the Administrator shall withdraw authorization of such program and reestablish enforcement of Federal regulations pursuant to this part.

"INSPECTIONS, MONITORING, AND TESTING

"SEC. 1455. (a) For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, any owner or operator of an underground storage tank or any tank subject to study under section 1459 that is used for storing regulated substances shall, upon request of any officer, employee or representative of the Environmental Protection Agency, duly designated by the Administrator, or upon request of any duly designated officer, employee, or representative of a State with an approved program, furnish information relating to such tanks, their associated equipment, their contents, conduct monitoring or testing, and permit such officer at all reasonable times to have access to, and to copy all records relating to such tanks. For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, such officers, employees, or representatives are authorized—

"(1) to enter at reasonable times any establishment or other place where an underground storage tank is located;

"(2) to inspect and obtain samples from any person of any such regulated substances and conduct monitoring or testing of the tanks, associated equipment, contents, or surrounding soils, air, surface water or ground water. Each such inspection shall be commenced and completed with reasonable promptness.

"(b)(1) Any records, reports, or information obtained from any persons under this section shall be available to the public, except that upon a showing satisfactory to the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) by any person that records, reports, or information, or a particular part thereof, to which the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) or any officer, employee, or representative thereof has access under this section if made public, would divulge information entitled to protection under section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code, such information or particular portion thereof shall be considered confidential in accordance with the purposes of that section, except that such record, report, document, or information may be disclosed to other officers, employees, or authorized representatives of the United States concerned with carrying out this act, or when relevant in any proceeding under this Act.

"(2) Any person not subject to the provisions of section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code who knowingly and willfully divulges or discloses any information entitled to protection under this subsection shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.

"(3) In submitting data under this Act, a person required to provide such data may—

"(A) designate the data which such person believes is entitled to protection under this subsection, and

"(B) submit such designated data separately from other data submitted under this Act.

A designation under this paragraph shall be made in writing and in such manner as the Administrator may prescribe.

"(4) Notwithstanding any limitation contained in this section or any other provision of law, all information reported to, or otherwise obtained, by the Administrator (or any representative of the Administrator) under this Act shall be made available, upon written request of any duly authorized committee of the Congress, to such committee (including records, reports, or information obtained by representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency).

"FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 1456. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever on the basis of any information, the Administrator determines that any person is in violation of any requirement of this part, the Administrator may issue an order requiring compliance within a reasonable specified time period or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in which the violation occurred for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"(2) In the case of a violation of any requirement of this part where such violation occurs in a State with a program approved under section 1454, the Administrator shall give notice to the State in which such violation has occurred prior to issuing an order or commencing a civil action under this section.

"(3) If such violator fails to comply with the order within the time specified in the order, he shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day of continued noncompliance.

"(b) Any order shall become final unless, no later than thirty days after the order is served, the person or persons named therein request a public hearing. Upon such request the Administrator shall promptly conduct a public hearing. In connection with any proceeding under this section the Administrator may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of relevant papers, books, and documents, and may promulgate rules for discovery procedures.

"(c) Any order issued under this section shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation, specify a reasonable time for compliance, and assess a penalty, if any, which the Administrator determines is reasonable taking into account the seriousness of the violation and any good faith efforts to comply with the applicable requirements.

"(d) Any owner who knowingly fails to notify or submits false information pursuant to section 1452(a) to a State or local agency or department designated pursuant to section 1452(b)(1) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for which notification is not given or false information is submitted.

"(e) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing a regulated substance who fails to comply with the release detection, prevention, and correction regulations as promulgated by the Administrator or a State program approved pursuant to section 1454, shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for each day of violation.

"(f) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing regulated substances who fails to comply with the provisions of section 1453(g) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank and for each day of violation.

"FEDERAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 1457. Each department, agency, and instrumentality of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Federal Government having jurisdiction over any underground storage tank as defined in section 1451(7) and used for the purpose of storing regulated substances as defined in subsection 1451(2), shall be subject to and comply with all Federal, State, interstate, and local requirements, both substantive and procedural in the same manner, and to the same extent, as any person is subject to such requirements, including payment of reasonable service charges. Neither the United States, nor any agent, employee, or officer thereof, shall be immune or exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt any underground storage tanks of any department, agency, or instrumentality in the executive branch from compliance with such a requirement if he determines it to be in the paramount interest of the United States to do so. No such exemption shall be granted due to lack of appropriation unless the President shall have specifically requested such appropriation as a part of the budgetary process and the Congress shall have failed to make available such requested appropriations. Any exemption shall be for a period not in excess of one year, but additional exemptions may be granted for periods not to exceed one year upon the President's making a new determination. The President shall report each January to the Congress all exemptions from the requirements of this section granted during the preceding calendar year, together with his reason for granting each such exemption.

"STATE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 1458. Nothing in this part shall preclude or deny any right of any State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any regulation, requirement or standard of performance respecting underground storage tanks that is more stringent than a regulation, requirement, or standard of performance in effect under this part.

"STUDY OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS

"SEC. 1459. (a) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall complete a study of underground storage tanks used for the storage of regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B). Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment, the Administrator shall complete a study of all other underground storage tanks. Such study shall include an assessment of the ages, types (including methods of manufacture, coatings, protection systems, and compatibility of the construction materials and the installation methods) and locations (including the climate of the locations) of such tanks; soil conditions, water tables, and the hydrogeology of tank locations; the relationship between the foregoing factors and the likelihood of releases from underground storage tanks; the effectiveness and costs of inventory systems, tank testing, and leak detection systems; and such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate.

"(b) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall conduct a study regarding the underground storage tanks exempted in subsection 1451(7)(ii) and (iii). Such study shall include estimates of the number and location of such tanks and an analysis of the extent to which there may be releases or threatened releases from such tanks into the environment.

"(c) Upon completion of the studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall submit reports to the President and to the Congress containing the results of the studies and recommendations respecting whether or not such tanks should be subject to the preceding provisions of this part.

"(d)(1) If any owner or operator (excepting an agency, department, or instrumentality of the United States Government, a State or a political subdivision thereof) shall incur costs, including the loss of business opportunity, due to the closure or interruption of operation of an underground storage tank solely for the purpose of conducting studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall provide such person fair and equitable reimbursement for such costs.

"(2) All claims for reimbursement shall be filed with the Administrator not later than ninety (90) days after the closure or interruption which gives rise to the claim.

"(3) Reimbursements made under this section shall be from funds appropriated by the Congress pursuant to the authorization contained in subsection 1460(a) of this part.

"(4) For purposes of judicial review, a determination by the Administrator under this subsection shall be considered final agency action.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1460. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the administrator for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988 to be used to make grants to the States for purposes of assisting the States in the implementation of approved State underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction programs.".

(b) Section 1448(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting after the words "any regulation for State underground injection control programs under section 1421," the following: "any regulation for underground storage tanks under section 1453".

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act amending the Safe Drinking Water Act to protect ground water resources from leaking underground storage tanks. This amendment is cosponsored by Senators MOYNIHAN, LAUTENBERG, BRADLEY, COHEN, and HUMPHREY.

It is my pleasure to offer this amendment, which will assist the States in establishing effective programs for the prevention, detection, and correction of contamination of ground water from the pervasive source of underground storage tanks containing petroleum and other chemical products. This represents a major step in assuring the public that the Nation's vital ground water resources, which supply drinking water for 50 percent of the country's population, does not contain health-threatening chemicals.

The Environmental Protection Agency first identified leaking underground storage tanks as a potential major source of ground water contamination in November 1983 in a hearing before the Committee on Environment and Public Works. Since that time, we have become aware of the dimensions and severity of this real threat. No one knows precisely how many tanks currently exist but estimates of the number of underground storage tanks, containing both petroleum and other chemical products, range from 2.8 to 5 million. As many as 85 percent of these may be constructed of bare steel, with no corrosion protection. The life of a typical tank is about 15 to 20 years. Figures of the numbers of gasoline tanks which are now leaking vary from 75,000 to 350,000. Some experts predict that due to the common old age of the tank population, that as many as 75 percent of the existing tanks will begin to leak over the next 10 years.

These figures indicate the dimensions of the threat and the fact that this is a problem we all share with thousands of storage tanks found in every State in the country. To make matters worse, according to the Environmental Protection Agency only 1 gallon per day leaking into an underground source of water is sufficient to pollute the water supply of a community of 50,000 persons to a level of 100 parts per billion. An underground tank leaking 2 drops a second will release 1.2 gallons per day or 36 gallons a month. A tank leaking a ¼-inch stream will release 931 gallons per day or 27,936 gallons per month. Clearly, it does not take much to produce an enormous contamination problem for a locality. Once the damage is finally detected it is extremely difficult and costly to clean up. Therefore, we must establish a program now to prevent future damage to the public health and environment from leaking tanks.

This legislation is particularly timely—with the growing awareness of the problem, detection of gasoline and other synthetic organic contaminants has increased threefold in some States. Incidences of contamination from tanks have been reported in all 50 States. Increasing concern on the part of the States is also indicated by the fact that 32 States have now enacted or initiated legislation to regulate underground storage tanks.

The purpose of this amendment is to establish a constructive Federal role to aid the States in establishing programs to safeguard their water supplies. Passage of this program will help to ensure consistency between State programs and tank standards and measured progress toward our goal of protecting ground water from this ubiquitous source of contamination.

The role designated for the Environmental Protection Agency is a traditional one—that of issuing standards for design, construction, and installation of new tanks and criteria for sound tank programs capable of prevention, detection, and correction of leaks. States which are attempting to move on this problem are now looking to EPA for this information. EPA's timely standard-setting function will eliminate the need for reinvention of the wheel.

States will submit their programs to EPA for approval. If these programs meet the general designated program criteria and reflect new tank performance standards at least as stringent as those of the Agency they will be eligible for grant moneys for the purpose of program implementation. The amount of money available for this purpose would be $25 million a year through 1988. This is a small amount of money compared to after-the-fact cleanup costs which have been known to range as high as this at a single site. A State must demonstrate that its program includes the following elements and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with these requirements:

First, maintaining a leak detection system or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

Second, maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing system;

Third, reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

Fourth, standards of performance for new underground storage tanks;

Fifth, taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

Sixth, taking underground storage tanks out of operation; and

Seventh, maintaining evidence of financial responsibility for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

Exempted from this program are tanks that are less than 1,100 gallons capacity used for storing motor fuel for noncommercial purposes or and tanks for storing heating oil for consumptive use.

This amendment will assure that all other new tanks are built and installed as they should be and that old tanks are operated and maintained so that the possibility of leaks is minimized.

We must take this sensible and reasonable action in order to avoid nationwide contamination of our precious ground water resources. I ask my distinguished colleagues to join with me in support of this program which provides essential protection to the public's drinking water.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to cosponsor with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] an amendment that will close a major gap in environmental control.

We are all aware by now of the serious problem of ground water contamination. Those who draw their drinking water from the water-bearing geologic formations known as aquifers count on a supply free of toxic pollutants. Yet many of man's activities on or below the land surface introduce contaminants to underground supplies of drinking water. We have only recently realized the gravity of the problem with the discovery of high concentrations of pollutants in many aquifers used by millions of people.

A variety of environmental laws serve to partially control ground water contamination, but much more must be done. Some types of sources are not regulated under any Federal law. Perhaps the most significant category of unregulated source is the underground storage tank.

Underground storage tanks are ubiquitous in our society. They are most commonly used to store petroleum products such as gasoline, but many tanks also contain industrial chemicals. Nobody knows how many million tanks exist in the United States or what proportion of the tanks leak, but that should not stop us from acting promptly to reduce the threat to ground water. We do know that the majority of tanks are made of bare steel and that many have been in the ground for decades. The basic principles of chemistry lead to the conclusion that many of these tanks are leaking.

More direct evidence of the phenomenon derives from the many incidents of ground water contamination that have been traced to leaking underground storage tanks. In some cases, leaks occurred for many years before they were detected. Sometimes the contamination is detected only when pollutants reach a drinking water supply.

For example, a most amazing episode has unfolded in Brooklyn, New York City's most populous borough. Quite by accident, the pilot of a Coast Guard helicopter noticed in 1978 what appeared to be an oil slick in Newtown Creek, which separates the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens. The slick is now known to be seepage from a 17 million gallon, 52-acre lake of petroleum floating on the aquifer beneath the streets of Brooklyn. Hydrologists have traced the origin of the spill to an array of gasoline storage tanks.

Even more astonishing than the magnitude of the spill is the fact that the leakage might have started as long ago as 1948, escaping detection for 30 years.

How can we prevent large, undetected leaks of hazardous and toxic chemicals into soils and aquifers? The amendment we are proposing today will move us in the right direction. It would establish sensible practices aimed at preventing, detecting, and correcting leaks from underground storage tanks. First, owners of tanks would provide the States with some basic information about their tanks, leading to the compilation of tank inventories. The Environmental Protection Agency would promulgate regulations to improve the management of tanks. The regulations would require such practices as inventory control, a simple method for detecting leaks soon after they start. The EPA would also issue performance standards for new tanks in order to reduce the future incidence of leaks.

The need for better control of underground storage tanks has been recognized by many States and local communities. For example, the New York State Legislature recently enacted a law applicable to the bulk storage of petroleum. Suffolk County, NY, which has experienced serious pollution of its sole-source aquifer, passed a strict local ordinance.

It is now time for Congress to act. There is no question that toxic chemicals are leaking from storage tanks to aquifers. Yet no clear Federal authority is currently available to tackle this threat.●

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I wish to thank Senator CHAFEE, Senator DURENBERGER, and also, of course, our distinguished chairman and distinguished ranking minority member of the subcommittee, and others who have worked on this for their cooperation.

I wish to make a few comments here. I will be as brief as possible. I know the floor managers of the bill are anxious to move on with this project and I think it is important.

Mr. President, reauthorization of the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act has been a long, complex, and arduous task. It began during the 97th Congress, when, in September 1982, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee passed a simple reauthorization of the act. That, in itself, shows what a strong statute RCRA is. The committee originally intended to keep it on the books as it was.

In this Congress, the committee changed direction, partly because of the problems that occurred at EPA, and began searching for more comprehensive language to the act. With that effort, more and more discretionary authority was yanked from EPA. The Senate was not only reauthorizing the act, it was establishing EPA's regulatory programs as well. When S. 757 came out of the committee last November, I opposed its passage, and outlined five major concerns that I felt had to be addressed before the bill was palatable to me. Those points were:

First, deadlines for EPA action must be attainable;

Second, a provision to consider mining waste differently than other waste because it is, by nature, high volume waste with low toxicity;

Third, a provision to exempt secondary and tertiary ponds from the double liner requirements of the bill;

Fourth, opposition to the House amendment requiring landfills to conduct risk assessment surveys that are too expensive and questionable in value; and Fifth, support for EPA's current study of underground storage tanks and opposition to efforts to tie the Agency's hands with requirements that are unnecessary and which presuppose the outcome of the study now underway.

First, I wish to say that without the cooperation of Senator CHAFEE, it would not have been possible, as far as this Senator is concerned, that I could be here on the floor supporting this legislation. And on these criticisms, which I think have been corrected, he certainly deserves a lot of commendation for his able leadership and his able staff to make these corrections and work these things out.

Let me address these points individually. Although they are not the only problems I have with S. 757, they do constitute the lion's share of those concerns.

First, the committee bill originally established some 35 deadlines for EPA. Now all of us know that EPA has never seen a deadline it could not miss. The problem is that oftentimes, EPA's resources are limited, and their priorities are not always in harmony with the demands of Congress. The result is that the moment EPA misses a deadline, they are in litigation, and the court mandates timetables or makes decisions that are not always in the best interests of good rulemaking. When EPA originally proposed the deadlines in the bill, they were acting under the assumption that they had unlimited resources. When those deadlines were incorporated into the bill, EPA realized how very unrealistic they were. I joined the battle in their support, and the result of those efforts is the committee amendment revising those deadlines. I feel that it is important for this body to be deliberative, especially in the case of highly emotional issues like this one. The committee amendment does that in this case—it substitutes deadlines that are workable for deadlines that were simply unattainable. It is my sincere hope that even these deadlines are not overly optimistic, because if they are the courts will make the decisions EPA is directed to make. Nonetheless, the House bill retains deadlines that are more unrealistic than those in the Senate bill. This body should adopt the more reasonable deadlines of the committee amendment, and it must stand firm with the House to see that the deadlines that find their way into law will result in deliberative and supportable rulemaking by the Agency.

I think this is most critical that this happen and that all Senators understand the critical nature of this and that the Senate be able to stand by its position on this particular issue.

Second, the bill as passed by the committee contains provisions that relate to banning certain land disposal practices. During committee consideration, Senator SIMPSON and I proposed an amendment to recognize that, for the purposed of this amendment, mining waste is not the same and should not be treated as the same as other wastes covered under RCRA. By its nature, mine waste must be disposed of in surface impoundments because of the sheer volume of waste rock, mill tailings, slag, and overburden generated on a daily basis in the extraction, beneficiation, and processing of ores and minerals. The double liner requirement of S. 757 is impracticable for these surface impoundments, and the effect of this requirement could be to shut down certain parts of the mining industry altogether. Although the language that the committee adopted originally left ambiguity in its application to the mining community, the committee has since agreed to offer an amendment to rectify that ambiguity, and I urge the adoption of this very important committee amendment.

In a related issue, my third concern revolved around the imposition of double liner requirements on secondary and tertiary treatment facilities. By nature, these facilities are also very large, often acres and acres in size. Double lining these ponds would be impractical, and most companies would simply opt to close them down altogether. This concerned me primarily because the ponds are usually used for secondary treatment of water which is close to being clean, and containing few of the hazardous wastes that this bill is designed to address. Tertiary ponds are often used only to cool the water before it is discharged into the receiving waters or to control the flows of those discharges. In either event, it is simply unnecessary to double line these facilities. Again, I commend Senator CHAFEE and Senator STAFFORD for their efforts in resolving this concern. The committee amendment would waive the double liner requirements if the NPDES permit requirements were being met by the facility.

My fourth concern revolved around an amendment that was passed by the House relating to risk assessment surveys. This amendment would require each of 450 landfill operators in the United States to choose and pay contractors to perform complete health risk assessments at their sites, within 1 year. The assessment would have to include comprehensive air and water monitoring and the taking of medical histories of all persons living or working within 2.5 miles of the site. It is doubtful whether EPA and all private contractors combined could perform these amendments. In addition, the studies would be highly questionable because of the small size of the samples, the lack of any consistent exposure at the site, and the lack of any meaningful control group. In short, what seems to be a good concept, is severely flawed. The risk assessments would be expensive—at least $300,000 a piece—and since the operator pays for the study, it is questionable whether anyone would believe the results. Senators HUMPHREY and CRANSTON have come up with an amendment that is satisfactory to me, and I hope the Senate will adopt it and stick to it in conference.

My final concern was one which was only resolved today. It deals with underground storage tanks.

First, EPA is currently doing a study to determine the extent of this problem. The Agency testified to the committee that it had the authority to establish a regulatory program if it deemed it to be necessary.

Second, the Agency and I opposed initial efforts to go beyond that, and I still have concerns over the extent of the Durenberger amendment. Nonetheless, I want to commend the Senator for his accommodations to the concerns we raised. Although his amendment still binds EPA to a regulatory program that is specific, he has come a long way to resolve the concerns I had over this problem.

Third, the amendment is not yet complete or reviewed by me or the committee. Consequently, I ask the indulgence of the Senate and the floor leaders that we have an opportunity to review it for its technical accuracy.

Fourth, in addition, since the language was only agreed to this afternoon, and I feel that a legislative history accompanying the amendment is essential, I hope the RECORD could remain open for a period of time adequate so that the Senate could clarify the legislative record as to exactly what is intended if there is no problem.

I thank the Senator very much.

I commend my colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee for their hard work and perseverance on this piece of legislation. It is a highly technical piece of legislation. I think we made substantial improvements from where we were 6 months ago with this. I thank all my colleagues.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] be added as a cosponsor to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Yesterday, Mr. President, on a vote of something like 72 to 19, a majority of this body chose to criticize the administration, and indirectly the EPA for going in the wrong direction in the area of the environment. And I think it is fitting today that the committee and members of this committee—particularly the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senator from Maine, who have been leaders, the chairman of the committee, Senator STAFFORD, and the ranking member, Mr. RANDOLPH, who has been the leader in this Congress in moving the country toward a sound environmental policy—are moving this particular bill. The Senator from Idaho has wisely pointed out a couple of potential problems while he is moving in a positive direction, one being overloading the EPA with work. I know this is a concern of those on this side of the aisle as it is on the other side of the aisle. We have tried carefully through the area of the work requirements, as well as in one case the rather open-ended deadlines that have been put in this bill, to take that under consideration.

The second point the Senator from Idaho makes that I think is important—that I make, too, as the author of this amendment—is that it could use some improvement in the legislative history. I hope that in the course of the next day or so the committee will be together for a markup, and that during the occasion of that markup on another piece of legislation all of us who have been in one way or another involved since November of last year in dealing with the subject of leaking underground storage tanks will come equipped to that markup to develop a piece of legislative history that can then be added to this bill.

I thank my colleague from Idaho for his sensitivity not only to the issue, the concerns that are expressed regarding the ground water, but for the practicality of dealing with those issues, and the sources of contamination which vary as much as they do across this wonderful land of ours.

I thank you very much for your help.

I move the passage of the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, we have had a fine explanation of this amendment from the Senator from Minnesota, from the Senator from Idaho, who had some severe reservations about it, and who has worked closely with the Senator from Minnsota and the EPA. We had a chance to talk with the authorities from the EPA on this subject. While they see some problems with it, nonetheless they are amenable to it going ahead.

It seems to me this is a matter that is of great concern to the Nation—these underground storage tanks. They are a matter that we are going to have to deal with sooner or later.

I had some reservations because we gave EPA a pretty full plate here. Anybody who studies these amendments to RCRA will acknowledge that we are making some very, very bold steps forward. I think the Senator from Minnesota quite accurately said that this will be the most significant piece of environmental legislation that we have passed this year, and indeed last year. We do not want to overburden EPA so they cannot get things done. I think the quote that the Senator from Idaho made that EPA has never had a deadline that it did not fail to meet is true. It is not because of negligence or ineptitude on the part of EPA.

It is just that these are very, very technical matters. They are difficult to handle. But with the assurance we have received and with the extended deadlines that have been placed in this bill, we are happy to proceed with it. It may be that there will be some further refinements necessary.

The Senator from Idaho mentioned that he would like the RECORD kept open for additional remarks or views. The train is leaving the station. So there is no more time for additional views and remarks. It is our hope to finish this in a half an hour. So if the Senator has something he wants to insert in the RECORD, now would be the time.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, if the Senator would yield, I think the request by the Senator from Idaho is for a more elaborate legislative history. That does not have to take place here this afternoon before final passage of the bill. My suggestion was that we consider developing that legislative history next week when we are engaged in the markup on the Superfund. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SYMMS. The Senator from Minnesota is correct in that. I say to my colleague from Rhode Island that what I was thinking about was the language in the text, the technical aspects of the amendment, and the highly technical nature of this. If we could finally get this—we think we have it the way we want it, and if it is written into the legislative history—established as to what our intention is, I certainly think we should move right ahead with it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Fine. As far as this side goes, the amendment is acceptable, and we congratulate the Senators involved in it.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Minnesota for his leadership in this area, consistent with his leadership in many areas of environmental policy. As the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island has just indicated, this is a complex and technical area. Pursuant to the discussions that we had within the past hour, it is my expectation that we will continue to make refinements in this area between now and the time of the conference, so that the ultimate product may not be identical to that which is being enacted here. But it is a very good beginning in a very difficult area, and under those circumstances the amendment is acceptable.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I wonder if I might yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. I support this legislation, and I commend the managers of the bill, and the leadership for bringing it to the floor.

Mr. President, I support S. 757, the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments. I am pleased that this very important legislation is receiving consideration by the Senate, and I commend the leadership for bringing the bill to the floor.

The problem of hazardous waste disposal in our country is reaching unacceptable proportions. While we have made some progress since 1976 with the enactment of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, it is imperative that we take further action now.

In August 1983, the Environmental Protection Agency released a report which let us know the full extent of the problems we face with disposal of hazardous waste, and these problems were worse than anticipated. What was assumed to be the amount of hazardous waste generated in the United States was in fact four times as great as assumed—150 million metric tons of hazardous waste; less than 25 percent of the 60,000 identified hazardous waste generators were subject to disposal regulation. The need for reauthorization of the act is clear.

The legislation before us today will strengthen and clarify the Federal role to ensure that public health and safety is protected from toxic or hazardous contamination. The bill contains new requirements on generators of hazardous waste; establishes deadlines by which the Environmental Protection Agency must complete regulatory tasks; and stiffens criminal penalties for violators.

I was one of the Senators requesting that S. 757 be considered by the Senate during these 3 weeks. I did this, Mr. President, both as an expression of my strong interest in protecting the environment generally throughout the country, and for more parochial interests concerning the healthy environment of my State of Mississippi.

The Mississippi Department of Natural Resources has pending before its Bureau of Pollution Control an application to locate a hazardous waste disposal site in Noxubee County. In my opinion, this bill provides the needed revisions and restrictions on hazardous waste disposal that more fully protect the lives and well-being of the public. The bill provides the necessarily strengthened framework which establishes guidelines that take the "guesswork" out of hazardous waste disposal. If property administered, this should prevent disastrous and tragic environmental contamination.

This bill will also aid us in our efforts to control mismanagement of hazardous waste. We have Superfund, which is a remedial solution to past mismanagement, and is in markup right now for its reauthorization. Mississippi has, until recently, been lucky enough to have only one site which needed to call on Superfund for cleanup. I am sad to report today that we have another potential chemical waste mess on our hands.

By passage of this legislation, we take another step toward wiping out the violators of hazardous waste disposal regulations. By tightening the monitoring of hazardous waste generators, we take preventive measures which will work with those remedial measures already in place. Mississippi will benefit from passage of this bill; the people of the United States will benefit from passage; and, future generations are protected from current abuses and mistakes.

I commend the managers of S. 757 and the members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works for their work in fashioning this consensus environmental protection legislation. I am pleased to support its passage.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Senator DURENBERGER to regulate most commercial underground storage tanks.

According to the General Accounting Office [GAO] report on Federal and State efforts to protect ground water, published in February 21, 1984, Michigan State officials believe that ground water contamination is a significant problem. An assessment of ground water contamination in July 1982 showed that there were 441 known contamination sites in Michigan, 456 suspected sites, and thousands of potential sites. Of those 441 contamination sites, 171 or 38.8 percent are contaminated by petroleum products storage, including underground gasoline storage tank leakage. Surprisingly, fewer of these sites are contaminated by industrial waste than by leaking petroleum products.

While the bill before us today addresses many problems with the current law, it can be strengthened by accepting the Durenberger amendment. Ground water is the primary source of drinking water for about 50 percent of the population in Michigan. Acceptance of this amendment can assure the citizens in Michigan that the Federal Government is concerned about their ground water contamination and will do something about it. EPA should have the authority to require owners and operators to monitor the leakage in these tanks and require proper cleanup. It is the responsible action to take. The amendment grants EPA wide discretion to deal with this problem and allows the EPA to tailor its regulations to different categories of tanks depending on the location and size. The amendment also gives special consideration to small businesses and special problems they may encounter with the new regulations.

I urge Senate adoption of this worthwhile amendment.●

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I move approval of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER].

The amendment (No. 3408) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NOS. 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2805, AND 2806

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I see no more Senators on the floor that have amendments. We have some committee amendments. The Senator from Alabama has an amendment.

Mr. President, I send amendment Nos. 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2805, and 2806 to the desk and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. RANDOLPH, and Mr. MITCHELL), proposes amendments numbered 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2805, and 2806, en bloc.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 2794

(Purpose: To make conforming amendments to title and short title)

AMENDMENT TO TITLE

Amend the title to read as follows:

"To amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize funds for fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, and for other purposes.".

SHORT TITLE

Strike the phrase "Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983" each place it appears and insert in lieu thereof "Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

AMENDMENT No. 2795

(Purpose: To make conforming amendments to change years and amounts of authorizations for appropriations)

AUTHORIZATION

Amend S. 757 by striking sections 2 and 3 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 2007(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking 'and' immediately following '1981', and by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof ', $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and $80,000,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989'.

"SEC. 3. Section 3011(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking 'and' immediately following '1981', and by inserting immediately following '1982' the following: ', $55,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, and $60,000,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989'."

AMENDMENT No. 2796

On page 35, line 8, strike "standards are" and insert in lieu thereof "variation is necessary by reason of the smaller size and the technical and managerial capability of such generators, and is".

AMENDMENT No. 2797

(Purpose: To clarify which dioxin-containing wastes are included in the first category of hazardous wastes to be considered by the Administrator for land disposal limitations)

On page 39, line 13, insert "(Proposed EPA Hazardous Waste Nos. F020, F021, F022, and F023)" immediately after "dioxin containing hazardous wastes".

AMENDMENT No. 2800

(Purpose: To make technical and clarifying amendments to Section 13 regarding export of dangerous waste)

On page 68, line 22, insert "and the shipment conforms with the terms of such agreement" immediately after "(f)".

Page 69, line 10, strike "concern" and insert in lieu thereof "contain".

Page 71, line 20, insert "or, (B) where there exists an international agreement between the United States and the government of the receiving country establishing notice, export, and enforcement procedures for the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of hazardous wastes, in a manner which is not in conformance with such agreement" immediately after "country".

AMENDMENT No. 2801

(Purpose: To make miscellaneous technical and clarifying amendments)

On page 33, line 4, insert "without a permit" immediately before the comma.

On page 46, line 10, insert "; Provided That the Administrator "shall not be precluded from requiring" installation of a new liner when the Administrator has reason to "believe that any liner installed pursuant to the requirements of this subsection is leaking" immediately after "such facility".

AMENDMENT No. 2802

(Purpose: To clarify authority of Administrator to enter into cooperative agreements with States to assist in the administration of new requirements and prohibitions)

On page 85, line 18, insert immediately after "requirement." the following new sentence: "Pending authorization under this section of a State program which reflects the amendments made by the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator may enter into an agreement with the State under which the State may assist in the administration of the requirements and prohibitions which take effect pursuant to such amendments.".

AMENDMENT No. 2805

(Purpose: To grant interim status to facilities not previously required to have a permit under Section 3005 of the Act)

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

INTERIM STATUS

SEC. . Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by amending paragraph (1) of subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(1) owns or operates a facility required to have a permit under this section—

"(A) which facility was in existence on November 19, 1980, or

"(B) which facility is in existence on the effective date of statutory or regulatory changes under this Act that render the facility subject to the requirement to have a permit under this section; Provided, That the facility has not been previously denied a permit under this section and authority to operate the facility under this section has not been previously terminated.".

(Purpose: To extend deadline for expiration of interim authorization of State hazardous waste programs)

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

INTERIM AUTHORIZATION OF STATE HAZARDOUS WASTE PROGRAMS

SEC. . Section 3006(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "twenty-four month period beginning on the date six months after the date of promulgation of regulations under Section 3007 through 3005" and inserting in lieu thereof "period ending no later than January 31, 1986".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking for consideration of those amendments en bloc?

Mr. CHAFEE. The answer is yes. I move the adoption of those amendments en bloc.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following explanations of amendments No. 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2805, and 2806 be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the explanations will be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the explanations of the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 2795

(To make conforming amendments to change years and amounts of authorizations for appropriations)

As introduced in March 1983 and reported in October 1983, S. 757 authorized funds for fiscal years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987 at levels based upon the administration's budget requests for fiscal years 1983 and 1984.

To account for the delay in Senate consideration of the bill, this amendment will retain the 5-year reauthorization cycle that was envisioned by the Committee and authorize funds for fiscal years 1985 through 1989. The amounts authorized are also increased to reflect the fact that both actual 1984 appropriations and Administrator Ruckelshaus' fiscal year 1985 budget submission to the Office of Management and Budget exceed the figures in S. 757. The Administrator's budget submission is the best estimate of funds needed for this program and, as such, form the basis for the amounts set forth in this amendment to sections 2 and 3 of S. 757.

There are no "implied authorizations" in S. 757. Agency actions that are directed by this bill, including reports to Congress, are to be carried out with funds that are available under the authority of other existing laws or are explicitly authorized by this bill.

(To clarify authority of Administrator to promulgate regulations for small quantity generators that differ from those applicable to large quantity generators)

As reported, the bill explicitly provides that the requirements that are to be promulgated by March 31, 1986 for small quantity generators "may vary from the requirements applicable to hazardous waste generated in quantities greater than one thousand kilograms during any calendar month, to the extent the Administrator determines such standards are adequate to protect human health and the environment." That phrase is explained on page 11 of the Committee Report.

Concern has been expressed that retention of the law's underlying requirement and ultimate standard that RCRA regulations assure protection of human health and the environment might undercut the explicit authority to vary for small quantity generators the requirements applicable to hazardous waste generated in quantities greater than one thousand kilograms per month. Such a concern is based upon an improper reading of the law. It is based upon a mistaken belief that the Administrator is required by law to select a single regulatory approach that is applicable to all hazardous wastes and generators of hazardous waste. Having promulgated a regulatory program for large generators of chemical hazardous wastes, a program that EPA contends is protective of human health and the environment and is necessary to assure such protection, it is argued that the same regulatory program must be used whenever EPA is directed to promulgate regulations that assure protection of human health and the environment from hazardous wastes. The notion is that if EPA is authorized and capable of developing different regulations for different situations, then the existing regulations for large generators are not "necessary" to protect human health and the environment and are, therefore, not legally defensible.

Such an argument assumes that use of the word "necessary" in Section 3004 imposes upon EPA a responsibility to select and promulgate only regulations that are "essential", "vital" or "indispensable". However, "necessary" denotes that which fills an urgent need, but not invariably an all-compelling need. The stronger "essential" and "vital" are applied to that without which something, by its nature, cannot exist. "Indispensable" even more specifically denotes that which cannot be sacrificed; frequently it is applied to part of a whole. There are undoubtedly portions of existing regulations that are "indispensable" and cannot be varied when faced with a requirement to "protect human health and the environment". To recognize that there are portions of existing regulations that are not "indispensable", however, does not in any way suggest that those portions are not "necessary" and, therefore, unlawful.

This amendment is a clarification of the Administrator's existing authority. As with mining wastes, the Administrator is able to choose from a range of regulatory options that will satisfy the mandate that protection of human health and the environment be assured. When faced with a specific problem, the Administrator can often identify several options, each of which would protect human health and the environment. The Administator is not required to select the option that would satisfy the statutory mandate in the most simple or most cost-effective manner. He has a responsibility to protect human health and the environment and, as such, may choose among several approaches. The selection of a particular approach shall be lawful provided it satisfies the statutory mandate and is not an arbitrary or capricious decision. Distinctions often can be and are made on the basis of waste characteristics, waste management practices and locational criteria. This amendment will simply clarify the Administrator's existing authority to make such distinctions in the specified instances and to consider whether variation is necessary by reason of the smaller size and the technical and managerial capability of small quantity generators.

It is recognized that many small quantity generators may be small businesses that may be adversely affected if the full set of subtitle C regulations are required. Nevertheless, these quantities of wastes from smaller individual generators may cause potential harm if they are improperly managed. Given these considerations, the Agency should determine whether requirements for small quantity generators can be varied from those applicable to other generators while assuring protection of human health and the environment. In particular, the Administrator should examine whether it is possible to simplify, reduce the frequency of, or eliminate the existing reporting and record keeping requirements and still provide adequate protection of human health and the environment. Distinctions may be made from requirements for larger generators, and among classes of small quantity generators or of wastes produced by them.

(To clarify which dioxin-containing wastes are included in the first category of hazardous wastes to be considered by the Administrator for land disposal limitations)

In hearings before the Committee, EPA stated that it planned to begin to promulgate land disposal limitation regulations and would initially review dioxin-containing hazardous wastes and hazardous wastes numbered F001, F002, F003, F004, and F005 in regulations promulgated pursuant to Section 3001. Recognizing that such wastes are properly candidates for early review, the bill specifies that these wastes have been selected to be reviewed first and on a "fast-track" basis.

On February 15, 1984, the Agency published an Advanced Notice of Proposed Rulemaking to announce the Agency's current activities to develop regulations to restrict or prohibit the land disposal of hazardous wastes (49 FR 5854). On page 5858, the Agency stated that the dioxin-containing hazardous wastes included in the "fast track" study are those identified and proposed to be added to 40 CFR 261.13 in an April 4, 1983, Federal Register notice. Those are proposed EPA Hazardous Waste Nos. F020, F021, F022 and F023. This amendment clarifies the reference to "dioxin-containing hazardous wastes" in this section of the bill by adding specific reference to the proposed hazardous waste numbers that are set forth in the April 4, 1983, Federal Register notice and cited in the February 15, 1984, notice.

It is noted that by including hazardous wastes numbered F003, the universe of wastes selected by the Congress for a "fast-track" review under this section is somewhat larger than that identified in the February 15, 1984, Federal Register notice.

AMENDMENT No. 2800

(To make technical and clarifying amendments to Section 13 regarding export of hazardous waste)

This amendment does not change the meaning or original intent of the provision. As stated on page 48 of the Committee Report "(s)hipments must conform with the terms of the (international) agreement to satisfy the requirements of this section." The language added by this amendment clarifies and codifies that original intent.

AMENDMENT No. 2801

(To make miscellaneous technical and clarifying amendments)

This amendment makes two clarifying amendments and one technical amendment to correct a typographical error.

This first clarifying amendment relates to on-site storage by small quantity generators and the second relates to preservation of the Administrator's authority, in the context of permit issuance or otherwise, to order new liners at landfills or surface impoundments which installed liners during interim status.

AMENDMENT No. 2802

(To clarify authority of Administrator to enter into cooperative agreements with States to assist in the administration of new requirements and prohibitions)

This amendment ratifies the current practice of using State-EPA agreements to enable States to participate as much as possible in the implementation of RCRA prior to authorization of a State program under Section 3006. For example, States that do not yet have adequate authority to obtain authorization may still have sufficient State authority to be able to enter into agreements to conduct inspections and draft permits for EPA. Other States may have made the necessary statutory and regulatory changes to implement an independent State regulatory program for small quantity generators between 100 and 1,000 kilograms that EPA can acknowledge in an agreement. In those cases, the Administrator may well wish to arrange to devote his priorities and resources to other areas where there is not already considerable State activity and/or to other States.

The agreement or existence of an operating State program does not mean that the Administrator relinquishes his authority or responsibility. Until a State receives interim or final authorization for a program component, the Administrator alone is charged with the legal responsibility under subtitle C. We do not intend agreements to be viewed as a de facto, more lenient type of authorization.

(To grant interim status to facilities not previously required to have a permit under Section 3005 of the Act)

New paragraph (1)(B) amends RCRA Section 3005(e) to allow facilities in existence subsequent to November 19, 1980 to qualify for interim status if those facilities become subject to the subtitle C requirements as a result of amendments to the RCRA statute or regulations issued pursuant thereto. Facilities subject to this provision include facilities in existence subsequent to November 19, 1980 which treat, store or dispose of newly listed hazardous wastes, including mobile treatment units, and facilities which treat, store or dispose of hazardous wastes which were previously exempted from certain RCRA requirements but subsequently became subject to these requirements as a result of legislative amendments (i.e., small quantity generator wastes). Facilities for which RCRA permits have been previously denied or interim status has been previously terminated would not be able to qualify for interim status pursuant to this provision under any circumstances.

AMENDMENT No. 2806

(To extend deadline for expiration of interim authorization of State hazardous waste programs)

This amendment will assure that the States have adequate time to fulfill the necessary requirements to become fully authorized under Section 3006. Without this amendment, the States' interim authorizations will expire on January 26, 1985. It is my understanding that approximately 7 to 14 States will not be able to meet this deadline, and so would lose their interim authorizations. Therefore, this amendment gives the States until January 26, 1986 to fulfill their requirements before they lose their interim status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the committee amendments?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I withdraw amendment No. 2794.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move adoption of those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments (Nos. 2795, 2796, 2797, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2805, and 2806) were agreed to en bloc.

AMENDMENT NO. 3409

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send a series of 18 committee amendments to the desk and ask for their immediate consideration. I ask that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendments.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 3409, en bloc.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To extend deadlines in various sections of the bill)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

SECTION 5 LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS

On page 39, line 11, strike "July 1, 1985" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

On page 41, line 11, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four".

On page 41, line 18, strike "thirty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-eight".

On page 41, line 20, strike "forty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty".

On page 41, line 21, strike "fifty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-two".

On page 41, line 22, immediately following "enactment" add the following new sentence: "The Administrator shall base the schedule on a ranking of such listed wastes considering their intrinsic hazard and their volune such that decisions whether or not to prohibit the land disposal of high volume hazardous wastes with high intrinsic hazard shall, to the maximum extent possible, be made by the date 42 months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and decisions regarding low volume hazardous wastes with lower intrinsic hazard shall be made by the date 72 months after the date of such enactment.".

On page 43, line 23, strike "one year" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen months".

SECTION 8 LISTING/DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

On page 51, lines 12 and 13, strike "twelve months after the date such petition is granted or six" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four".

On page 51, line 15, strike ", whichever is later".

On page 53, line 22, strike "two years" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-eight months".

SECTION 9 BURNING AND BLENDING OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

On page 54, line 16, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen".

On page 60, line 12, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen".

SECTION 24 AIR EMISSIONS FROM LAND DISPOSAL FACILITIES

On page 85, line 22, strike "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-six".

SECTION 28 REPORT TO CONGRESS

On page 90, line 24 and 25, strike "March 15, 1984" and insert in lieu thereof "June 15, 1984".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify Administrator's authority to require a permit to construct a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facility)

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

SEC. . Section 3005(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) Striking "a" immediately after "owning or operating" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "an existing facility or planning to construct a new";

(2) Inserting in the second sentence "and the construction of any new facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of any such hazardous waste" immediately after "any such hazardous waste"; and

(3) Striking the period after "permit" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "; Provided, however, that no permit shall be required under this section in order to construct a facility if such facility is constructed pursuant to an approval issued by the Administrator under section 6(e) of the Toxic Substances Control Act for the incineration of polychlorinated biphenyls and any person owning or operating such a facility may, at any time after operation or construction of such facility has begun, file an application for a permit pursuant to this section authorizing such facility to incinerate hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To authorize the Administrator to issue interim status corrective action orders)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, MITCHELL, and MOYNIHAN).

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS

"SEC. . (a) Section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

" '(h) INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS.—(1) Whenever on the basis of any information the Administrator determines that there is or has been a release of hazardous waste into the environment from a facility qualifying for authorization to operate under Section 3005(e) of this subtitle, the Administrator may issue an order requiring corrective action or such other respone measure as he deems necessary to protect human health or the environment or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in the district in which the facility is located for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

" '(2) Any order issued under this subsection may include a suspension or revocation of authorization to operate under section 3005(e) of this subtitle, shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the required corrective action or other response measure, and shall specify a time for compliance. If the person or persons named in an order fails to comply with the order, the Administrator may assess and such person or persons shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each day of noncompliance with the order.' "

(b) Subsection (b) of section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting 'issued under this section' immediately after 'Any order'.

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify the Administrator's authority to require evidence of financial responsibility for corrective action)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, MITCHELL, and MOYNIHAN).

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORRECTIVE ACTION

"SEC. . Section 3004(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (as redesignated by this Act) is amended by inserting '(including financial responsibility for corrective action)' immediately after 'and financial responsibility' in paragraph (6).".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify and perfect the financial responsibility and direct action provisions contained in RCRA and CERCLA)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

Amend S. 757 by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

DIRECT ACTION AMENDMENTS

SEC. . (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(m) FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY PROVISIONS.—(1) Financial responsibility required by subsection (a) of this section may be established in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the Administrator is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"(2) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in any State court of the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim arising from conduct for which evidence of financial responsibility must be provided under this section may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing such evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(3) The total liability of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim; Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish the liability of any person under section 107 or 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or other applicable law.

"(4) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'guarantor' means any person, other than the owner or operator, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator under the section.".

"(c) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in the Federal courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim authorized by section 107 or 111 may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(d) The total liability under this Act of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim, Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish the liability of any person under sections 107 or 111 of this Act or other applicable law.".

(2) Section 108(b)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following: "Financial responsibility may be established by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the President is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To provide funds for State programs enforcing solid waste management facility criteria and to modify the provisions of the bill dealing with such criteria)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Mr. RANDOLPH).

On page 73, after line 16, insert the following:

"(d) Section 4008(a)(2) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subparagraph:

" '(D) There are authorized (i) to be made available $15,000,000 out of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and (ii) to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, for grants to States and, where appropriate, to regional, local, and interstate agencies to implement programs requiring compliance by solid waste management facilities with the criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3) and with the provisions of section 4005. To the extent practicable, such programs shall require such compliance no later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984.'."

On page 72, strike lines 1 through 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) Not later than March 31, 1988, the Administrator shall promulgate revisions of the criteria promulgated under paragraph (1) and section 1008(a)(3) for facilities that may receive hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators under section 3002(b). The criteria shall be those necessary to protect human health and the environment and may take into account the practicable capacity of such facilities. At a minimum such revisions for facilities potentially receiving such wastes should require groundwater monitoring as necessary to detect contamination, establish criteria for the acceptable location of new or existing facilities, and provide for corrective action as appropriate.".

On page 72, beginning line 20, strike all through page 73, line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) CONTROL OF HAZARDOUS DISPOSAL.—(1)(A) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system of prior approval and conditions to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provision of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005) will comply with the applicable criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3).

"(B) Not later than eighteen months after the promulgation of revised criteria under subsection 4004(a)(2), each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system or prior approval and conditions, to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provision of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under secion 3005) will comply with the criteria revised under section 4004(a)(2).

"(C) The Administrator shall determine whether each State has developed an adequate program under this paragraph. The Administrator may make such a determination in conjunction with approval, disapproval or partial approval of a State plan under section 4007.

"(2) In any State that the Administrator determines has not adopted an adequate program for such facilities under paragraph (1)(B) by the date provided in such paragraph, the Administrator may use the authorities available under sections 3007 and 3008 of this title to enforce the prohibition in subsection (a) of this section with respect to such facilities. In no event shall the Administrator or any other person be authorized to bring a civil action under paragraph (a) of this section against any person subject to a compliance schedule issued by the State under a program that the Administrator has determined to be adequate under this paragraph. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'requirement of this subtitle' in section 3008 shall be deemed to include criteria promugated by the Administrator under sections 1008(a)(3) and 4004(a) of this title, and the term 'hazardous wastes" in section 3007 shall be deemed to include solid waste at facilities that may handle hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify when common carriers by rail are subject to citizen suits)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senator RANDOLPH).

On page 82, line 25, strike out "and".

On page 83, line 4, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

On page 83, after line 4, insert the following:

"(5) inserting after the first sentence thereof the following:

"A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractual arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

On page 80, line 10, insert immediately after "(g)." the following:

"A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal, taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractual arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify the Uniform Manifest requirements)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Mr. RANDOLPH).

On page 30, line 18, after "manifest" insert "promulgated under this Act".

On page 31, beginning line 1, strike all through page 32, line 9.

On page 32, line 10, strike "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 32, line 11, strike "(7)" each place it occurs and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 32, line 20, strike "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)" and strike "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraph (2)".

On page 32, line 24, strike "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 33, line 9, strike "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 33, line 18, strike "(7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 34, line 10, strike all after "practices." through line 14.

On page 35, line 15, strike "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 35, line 25, strike "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To make a clarifying amendment on the use of absorbents)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 44, beginning on line 2, strike "(including the minimization of free liquids by other means than the addition of absorbent material, where technologically feasible),".

On page 44, line 6, insert immediately after "landfills." the following new sentence: "Such regulations shall also prohibit the disposal in landfills of liquids that have been absorbed in materials that biodegrade or that release liquids when compressed as might occur during routine landfill operation.".

On page 44, line 8, strike "of" immmediately after "disposal" and insert in lieu thereof "in".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To substitute the phrase "oily materials" for the more narrowly defined term "used oil")

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 60, lines 4 and 6, strike "used oil" each place it appears and insert in lieu thereof "oily materials".

On page 60, line 4, insert a comma immediately after "refining".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To delete deadline for EPA to determine appropriateness of using extraction procedure toxicity characteristics for evaluating delisting petitions)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 53, strike lines 15 through 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(D) not later than twenty-eight months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, make".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To make locational criteria applicable if Administrator fails to meet land disposal limitation deadlines)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 43, lines 19, strike "(1)" immediately after "3004(f)".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify authority of Administrator to establish treatment standards applicable to land disposal practices)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 38, line 7, insert "(other than paragraph (7)" immediately after "subsection".

On page 42, line 19, insert "levels or" immediately after "those".

On page 42, lines 19 to 22, strike "are necessary before such method or methods of disposal of such hazardous waste would be protective of human health and the environment" and insert in lieu thereof "substantially diminish the toxicity of the waste or substantially reduce the likelihood of migration of hazardous constituents from the waste so that short-term and long-term threats to human health and the environment are minimized".

On page 42, lines 22 to 25, and on page 43, lines 1 and 2, strike all after "environment." and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If such hazardous waste has been treated to the level or by a method specified in regulations promulgated under this paragraph, such waste or residue thereof shall not be subject to any prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection and may be disposed of in a land disposal facility which meets the requirements of this subtitle. Any regulation promulgated under this paragraph for a particular hazardous waste shall become effective on the same date as any applicable prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection."

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify application of requirement to conduct ground water monitoring)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators BENTSEN, STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 86, line 18, strike the quotation marks and final period, and after line 18 insert the following:

"This subsection shall not be construed to affect other exemptions or waivers from such standards provided in regulations in effect on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 or as may be provided in revisions to those regulations, to the extent consistent with this subsection. The Administrator is authorized on a case-by-case basis to exempt from ground water monitoring requirements under this section (including subsection (f)) any engineered structure which the Administrator finds does not receive or contain liquid waste (nor waste containing free liquids), is designed and operated to exclude liquid from precipitation or other runoff, utilizes multiple leak detection systems within the outer layer of containment, and provides for continuing operation and maintenance of these leak detection systems during the operating period, closure, and the period required for post-closure monitoring and for which the Administrator concludes on the basis of such findings that there is a reasonable certainty hazardous constituents will not migrate beyond the outer layer of containment prior to the end of the period required for post-closure monitoring.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify scope of new section 3004(e) ban on certain wells)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

REINJECTION OF TREATED GROUND WATER

On page 44, line 23, after "water." insert the following: "This subsection shall not apply to the injection of contaminated ground water into the aquifer from which it was withdrawn, if such injection is a response action taken under section 104 or 106 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or part of corrective action required under this title intended to clean up such contamination and such contaminated ground water is treated to substantially reduce hazardous constituents prior to such injection.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To clarify authority of Administrator to modify application of certain requirements to some mining wastes)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators SIMPSON and RANDOLPH).

MINING WASTE AMENDMENT

On page 48, beginning on line 18, through line 2 on page 49, strike the sentence following "the environment.".

At the end of S. 757, add the following new section:

"SEC. . Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'( ) If solid waste from the extraction, beneficiation or processing of ores and minerals, including phosphate rock and overburden from the mining of uranium ore, is subject to regulation under this subtitle, the Administrator is authorized to modify the requirements of subsections (b), (f)(1) (other than the requirement for ground water monitoring), and (g), in the case of landfills or surface impoundments receiving such solid waste, to take into account the special characteristics of such wastes, the practical difficultues associated with implementation of such requirements, and site-specific characteristics, including but not limited to the climate, geology, hydrology and soil chemistry at the site, so long as such modified requirements assure protection of human health and the environment.'."

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To assure that the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 do not affect, modify, or amend the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senator SIMPSON).

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"URANIUM MILL TAILINGS

"SEC. . Nothing in the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 shall be construed to affect, modify, or amend the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended.".

AMENDMENT No. 3409

(Purpose: To establish minimum technological requirements for existing surface impoundments)

Proposed by Mr. CHAFEE (for himself and Senators BENTSEN, STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL).

On page 49, after line 19, insert the following:

(c)(1) Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "Interim Status. ", by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), each surface impoundment in existence on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and qualifying for the authorization to operate under paragraph (1) of this subsection, which—

"(i) does not have at least one liner, for which there is no evidence that such liner is leaking, or shall not receive, store, or treat hazardous waste after the date four years after such date of enactment unless such surface impoundment is in compliance with the requirements of seciton 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundment if it were new. For the purposes of clause (i) of this subparagraph, the term "liner" means a liner meeting the requirements of regulations for new surface impoundments in effect as of such date of enactment, and that the surface impoundment is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section.

"(ii) is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology as defined in subparagraph (G) or as determined by criteria or guidance for the acceptable location of facilities issued in accordance with section 3004(f),

"(B) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program), after notice and opportunity for comment, may modify the requirements of subparagraph (A) for any surface impoundment if, not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the owner or operator demonstrates that such surface impoundments is located, designed and operated so as to assure that there will be no migration of any hazardous constituent into ground water or surface water at any time during the period hazardous waste remains in such surface impoundment. Within 12 months after the receipt of evidence submitted under this subparagraph and not later than 36 months after such date of enactment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator as to whether and, if so, how the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall be modified and applied to such surface impoundment.

"(C) Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply to any surface impoundment which (i) contains treated waste water during the secondary or tertiary phase of an aggressive biological treatment facility subject to a permit issued under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (or which holds such treated waste water after treatment and prior to discharge), (ii) is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section, and (iii) is part of a facility in compliance with section 301(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act, or, in the case of a facility for which no effluent guidelines required under section 304(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act are in effect and no permit under section 402(a)(1) of such Act implementing section 301(b)(2) of such Act has been issued, is part of a facility in compliance with a permit under section 402 of the Clean Water Act which is achieving significant degradation of toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents contained in the untreated waste stream and which has identified those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents in the untreated waste stream to the appropriate permitting authority. The Administrator shall study and report to the Congress on the number, range of size, construction, likelihood of hazardous constituents migrating into ground water, and potential threat to human health and the environment of existing surface impoundments excluded by this subparagraph from the requirements of subparagraph (A). Such report shall address the need, feasibility, and estimated costs of subjecting such existing surface impoundments to the requirements of subparagraph (A). In the case of any existing surface impoundment or class of surface impoundments from which the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) determines hazardous constituents are likely to migrate into ground water, the Administrator (or, if appropriate the State) is authorized to impose such requirements as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, including the requirements of section 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundments if they were new.

"(D) The owner or operator of any surface impoundment potentially subject to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph who has reason to believe that on the basis of subparagraph (A)(i) or (ii) or subparagraph (C) such surface impoundment is not required to comply with the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall apply to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 for a determination of the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment. Such owner or operator shall provide evidence pertinent to such decision, including evidence as to compliance with ground water monitoring requirements and all reasonably ascertainable evidence on whether such surface impoundment is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (A)(i) or (ii) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrology that (i) such surface impoundment is not located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology, (ii) the liner of such surface impoundment is desinged, constructed and operated in accordance with the requirements of regulations, and (iii) based on a review of ground water monitoring information and other available information, there is no evidence such liner is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (C) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrololgy that such surface impoundment satisfies the conditions set forth in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (C), based on analysis of those toxic polluntants and hazardous constituents that are likely to be present in the untreated waste stream, and that hazardous constituents are not likely to migrate from the impoundment into ground water. Within twelve months after the receipt of such evidence and not later than 36 months after such date of enactment, and after notice and opportunity for comment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator on the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment.

"(E) In any case in which a surface impoundment is initially determined to be excluded from the requirements of subparagraph (A) but due to a change in condition subsequently becomes subject to subparagraph (A), the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be two years after the date of discovery of such change of condition. In any case in which a surface impoundment becomes subject to subparagraph (A) after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 due to the promulgation of additional listings or characteristics for the identification of hazardous wastes under section 3001, the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be four years after the date of such promulgation, the period for demonstations under subparagraph (B) and for submission of evidence under subparagraph (D) shall be not later than 24 months after the date of such promulgation, and the period for the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) to advise such owners or operators under subparagraphs (B) and (D) shall be not later than 36 months after the date of promulgation.

"(F) In the case of any surface impoundment is which the liners and leak detection system have been installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph and in good faith compliance with section 3004(f) and the Administrator's regulations and guidance documents governing liners and leak detection systems, no liner or leaf detection system which is different from that which was not installed pursuant to this paragraph shall be required for such unit by the Administrator when issuing the first permit under this section to such facility. Nothing in this subparagraph shall preclude the Administrator from requiring installation of a new liner when the Administrator has reason to believe that any liner installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph is leaking.

(G) For the purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), a surface impoundment is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology if the impoundment is over or hydrologically connected to—

"(i) a sole source aquifer, or

"(ii) a formation which contains an underground source of drinking water if such formation or the unsaturated soils hydrologically connected to such formation are characterized by high hydraulic conductivity of permeability (including karst formations, and medium-to-course-grained materials or fractured rock) or are geologically unstable, and there is no intervening natural barrier formamtion that would significantly restrict migration of waste constituents.".

On page 49, line 2, before the quotation marks insert the following:

"The Adminstrator shall promulgate regulations or issue guidance documents implementing the requirements of paragraph (1) within two years after such date of enactment. Until the effective date of such regulations or guidance documents, the requirement for the installation of two or more liners may be satisfied by the installation of a top liner designed, operated, and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into such liner during the period such facility remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period), and a lower liner designed, operated and constructed to prevent the migration of any constituent through such liner during such period. For the purpose of the preceding sentence, a lower liner shall be deemed to satisfy such requirement if it is constructed of at least a three-foot thick layer of recompacted clay or other natural material with a permeability of no more than 1×10^{-7} centimeter per second.".

On page 43, line 7, strike "section" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3409) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a series of explanations of the amendments which have just been agreed to. These explanations are in the same sequence as the amendments sent to the desk and considered en bloc and can be identified by the title at the top. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND DEADLINES IN VARIOUS SECTIONS OF THE BILL.

S. 757 contains numerous statutory deadlines for various actions and decisions by EPA. Since reporting the bill, we have met on several occasions with representatives of EPA to assure that the deadlines are reasonable and attainable. EPA requested several deadline extensions and assured us that they could meet the new deadlines we have agreed to. This amendment will make those changes.

As modified by this amendment, new section 3004(b)(6)(A) requires EPA to publish, not later than 24 months after enactment, a schedule for deciding whether or not to restrict the land disposal of wastes listed under Section 3001. This schedule must provide for review and decision on at least one-third of the listed wastes within 48 months after enactment, for at least two thirds of the listed wastes within 60 months after enactment, and all listed wastes not later than the date 72 months after enactment. These fractions refer to the number of wastes listed, and not the volume of wastes listed.

The schedule mandated by subsection (b)(6)(A) must be based on environmental considerations and objectives. It is not expected that EPA will know which wastes it intends to propose to ban prior to publication of the schedule, therefore we do not expect EPA to place in the first third wastes which will be restricted and in the last third wastes which will not be restricted. However, in establishing the schedule, EPA must consider factors such as the intrinsic hazard of a waste. In evaluating the intrinsic hazard of a waste, EPA should consider a waste's toxicity and may consider other factors such as mobility, persistence and propensity to bioaccumulate. In addition, EPA must consider the volume of a waste generated or managed in land disposal. Accordingly, large volume wastes with a high intrinsic hazard shall be placed in the first third and so on, with low hazard, low volume wastes in the last third. Because of the relatively short time frame for publication of the schedule, we expect EPA to rely on existing data for determining waste volumes.

As introduced on March 15, 1984, amendment number 2804 would have simply extended the deadlines in section 5 on land disposal limitations. Concern was expressed that, without the imposition of a statutory standard, pressure would be placed on EPA to establish a schedule that would place high-volume wastes and wastes with high intrinsic hazard in the last third and that decisions whether to prohibit the land disposal of such wastes would not occur for 72 months. Such a result would be unacceptable. Therefore, the amendment was modified to include a mandatory, judicially enforceable, statutory standard for the schedule.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY ADMINISTRATOR'S AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE A PERMIT TO CONSTRUCT A HAZARDOUS WASTE TREATMENT, STORAGE, OR DISPOSAL FACILITY

On May 19, 1980, EPA promulgated regulations establishing procedures for permitting hazardous waste management facilities. Among other things, these regulations prohibit the construction of new facilities before the issuance of a RCRA permit. See 40 C.F.R. §270.10(f)(1). This amendment will clarify the Administrator's authority to require a RCRA permit to construct a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facility and codify that portion of the May 19, 1980 regulations.

One purpose of this provision is to provide the Agency with an opportunity to review the choice of location for such facilities before there has been a significant commitment of resources. Recent studies have concluded that locational characteristics and requirements are at least as important to protection of human health and the environment as are minimum technological characteristics and requirements. For example, although double liners and leak detection systems are an improvement over the current most widely used technology, the fact that double liners are known to eventually leak means that even such double-lined facilities may not be protective of human health and the environment if they are located in areas of vulnerable hydrogeology. The need for EPA to establish and enforce locational criteria is as essential to protection of human health and the environment as is the need for periodic revision of technological standards.

As introduced on March 15, 1984, this amendment revealed an inconsistency between the EPA regulations under the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA) and the regulations under RCRA affecting the construction and operation of land-based incinerators. Under RCRA, no construction may begin prior to receipt of a final RCRA permit. Under TSCA, the process for obtaining EPA approval of an incinerator is generally to construct the facility, seek approval of a trial burn plan, conduct the trial burn and then receive a final TSCA "approval" (the analogue of a RCRA permit). Thus, a company seeking to construct an incinerator capable of burning PCB's and other hazardous wastes regulated under RCRA is placed in the anomolous position of being forced to choose between either seeking a RCRA permit for the facility, awaiting conclusion of the RCRA permit proceeding, then beginning construction and the start of the TSCA approval process or abandoning its plans to use the facility for RCRA wastes, beginning construction of the incinerator and seeking TSCA approval. Where the primary purpose in building the incinerator is to establish or augment PCB disposal capability, the company will choose the "fast track" second alternative. A decision to forgo plans to incinerate RCRA wastes at such a facility would enable a company to achieve their primary goal in a greatly expedited time frame but would be at odds with the congressional policy of encouraging the development of alternatives to land disposal of hazardous wastes.

For this reason, the original amendment is modified to correct this inconsistency. Where an incinerator has been constructed and approved pursuant to TSCA for the burning of PCBs, the owner or operator shall not be precluded from applying for a RCRA permit solely because a RCRA permit was not obtained prior to constuction. The EPA regulation being codified by this amendment was designed to assure that, when it has been unable to influence the location, design and construction chosen by the applicant, the permitting agency would not face a choice between approving an incinerator or "forcing the abandonment or devaluation of the premature investment." Here, however, if a company proceeded with construction, obtained TSCA approval and then sought a RCRA permit, the company would not have to abandon or suffer a devaluation of its investment if it was ultimately denied a RCRA permit for the incinerator. The company would still have a PCB incinerator.

AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE THE ADMINISTRATOR TO ISSUE INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS

Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act authorizes certain facilities that are required to have a permit to operate, on an interim status basis, pending the review and issuance of a final permit. In May of 1980, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) issued standards and minimum requirements for the operation of interim status facilities.

As of December 1983 there were approximately 8,000 interim status facilities. It has been estimated that it will take ten years to make final permit determinations on all of the interim status facilities.

The EPA estimates that between 50 and 60 percent of the interim status land disposal facilities have leaked or are leaking and will require corrective action. However, there is no current requirement that corrective action be taken at interim status facilities. Instead, when the EPA determines that there has been or is a leak at an interim status facility, the agency immediately brings such a facility under its permit review process and requires corrective action as a condition of issuing a final permit. However, it now takes the EPA over a year to go through the process of permit review and issuance. As a result, there are likely to be a number of leaks at interim status facilities that will go uncorrected for some time.

This amendment is designed to correct that situation. It adds a new subsection (h) to Section 3008 to provide the Administrator with authority to issue an administrative order requiring corrective action or such other response measures as he deems appropriate at interim status facilities where there is or has been a release of hazardous waste. The Administrator is also authorized to commence a civil action in federal district court for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction. The Administrator has similar authority now under other subsections of section 3008 to require corrective action at permitted facilities. The amendment directs that an administrative order shall specify the nature of the corrective action and a time for compliance. Civil penalties of up to $25,000 per day may be assessed when there is noncompliance with the order. In addition, any order issued under this new subsection may include a suspension or revocation of the authority to operate as an interim status facility without a final permit. The procedures set forth in subsection (b) are made applicable to orders issued under this new subsection.

This amendment provides the Administrator with a mechanism for protecting human health and the enviornment at interim status facilities similar to that which is presently available with respect to permitted facilities. Since there are some 8,000 interim status facilities, compared to 115 permitted facilities, it is most appropriate and necessary to extend the corrective action requirement to interim status facilities and to provide the Administrator with the authority to impose such requirements quickly.

● Mr. RANDOLPH. The deadline for required notification under the provisions for the control of burning or blending hazardous wastes has been modified. The Agency is authorized to determine administratively which entities must give notification, and the Administrator has asked that the notification deadline be postponed until the regulatory pattern is determined. In this way, notification can generally be required from those the Agency proposes to regulate.

Since petroleum coke is exempted from regulation under these provisions, the Agency would not be requiring notification from purchasers or consumers of petroleum coke.●

INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I join my distinguished colleagues, Senators CHAFEE, STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL, in offering an amendment to S. 757 to provide the Administrator of the Environment Protection Agency [EPA] with authority to issue an administrative order, or to commence a civil action in the U.S. district court, to require corrective action at interim status facilities where there is or has been a release of hazardous waste. This amendment adds a new subsection (h) to section 3008 of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA]. The Administrator has the authority currently under other subsections of 3008 to take the same steps to require corrective action at permitted facilities.

The amendment also provides that the administrative order shall specify the nature of the corrective action and a time for compliance, as well as for civil penalties of up to $25,000 per day when there is noncompliance with the order. In addition, any order issued under this new subsection may include a suspension or revocation of the authority to operate an interim status facility.

Section 3005(e) of the RCRA statute provides that any facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste that is required to have a permit to operate, in accordance with section 3005, and has made an application for such a permit, shall be deemed to have a permit to operate, on an interim status basis, pending the review and issuance of a final permit.

As of December 1983, there were 8,000 interim status facilities. In May 1980, the EPA issued standards and minimum requirements for the operation of interim status facilities. As a result, some 2,000 of the interim status facilities are required to perform ground water monitoring because they conduct activities capable of polluting ground water.

As of February 1984, only 115 final RCRA permits had been issued by the EPA. It will take an estimated 10 years to make final permit determinations on the remaining interim status facilities.

The EPA estimates that between 50 and 60 percent of the interim status land disposal facilities are leaking and will require corrective action. However, there is no current requirement that corrective action be taken at interim status facilities. Instead, when the EPA determines that there has been or is a leak at an interim status facility, the agency immediately brings such a facility under its permit review process and requires corrective action as a condition of issuing a final permit. However, it now takes the EPA over a year to go through the permit review and issuance process. As a result, there are likely to be a number of leaks at interim status facilities that will go uncorrected for some time.

This amendment simply provides the Administrator with the same mechanism for protecting human health and the environment at interim status facilities as is now provided for permitted facilities. Since there are some 8,000 interim status facilities, compared to 115 permitted facilities, it is most appropriate and necessary to extend the corrective action requirement to interim status facilities.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY THE ADMINISTRATOR'S AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE EVIDENCE OF FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORRECTIVE ACTION

Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act directs the Administrator to establish performance standards for the owners and operators of hazardous waste treatment, storage and disposal facilities. The statutory language includes a requirement for evidence of "financial responsibility as may be necessary or desirable." Current EPA regulations require financial responsibility assurances for closure and post-closure maintenance costs for RCRA facilities. There is, however, no requirement for financial responsibility assurances for corrective action.

In instances where corrective action may be required, cleanup costs could be substantial, especially if groundwater is contaminated. Such costs could far exceed the costs of closure or post-closure maintenance. Many companies faced with large corrective action costs may choose or be forced into bankruptcy. In such cases, it is likely that the sites would have to be cleaned up using Superfund monies.

This amendment is designed to avoid that eventuality. It modifies paragraph (7) of section 3004 to provide that in setting financial responsibility requirements for owners and operators of hazardous waste facilities, the EPA should, to the maximum extent feasible, include a requirement that owners and operators provide evidence of financial responsibility for corrective action that may become necessary at some future time.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORRECTIVE ACTION

Mr. President, I join my distinguished colleagues, Senators CHAFEE, STAFFORD, RANDOLPH, and MITCHELL, in offering an amendment to S. 757 to require the EPA to include financial responsibility assurances for corrective action in the performance standards that the agency sets for the owners and operators of hazardous waste facilities. Section 3004 of the RCRA statute provides for the administrator to establish performance standards for the owners and operators of hazardous waste treatment, storage and disposal facilities. The statutory language includes a requirement for "financial responsibility as may be necessary or desirable." Current EPA regulations require financial responsibility assurances for closure and post-closure maintenance costs for RCRA facilities. There is, however, no requirement for financial responsibility assurances for corrective action.

In instances where corrective action may be required, cleanup costs could be substantial especially if ground water is contaminated. Such costs could well far exceed the costs of closure or post-closure maintenance. Many companies, faced with large corrective action costs, may choose, or be forced into, bankruptcy. In such cases, it is likely that the sites would have to be cleaned up using Superfund moneys.

This amendment is designed to avoid that eventuality. It does so by modifying paragraph (7) of section 3004 to provide that in setting performance standards for owners and operators of hazardous waste facilities, the EPA should include financial assurances for corrective action, as may be necessary.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AND PERFECT THE FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY AND DIRECT ACTION PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN RCRA AND CERCLA

This amendment will clarify and perfect the financial responsibility and direct action provision contained in the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act ("RCRA") and in the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 ("CERCLA"). A primary purpose of the clarification is to make uniform the provisions in both RCRA and CERCLA that deal with financial responsibility and direct action. The objective of the amendment is to achieve the protection of the public that the financial responsibility provisions are designed to provide, while fostering the development of a vigorous, competitive market for insurance certified as evidence of financial responsibility.

The uniform financial responsibility system proposed in this amendment (1) provides claimants in appropriate circumstances with the right of direct action against so-called guarantors (defined in both RCRA and CERCLA as persons who provide evidence of financial responsibility to an owner or operator), (2) permits a guarantor when subject to a direct action suit to invoke as a defense, among other things, the terms and conditions contained in the guarantor's policy of insurance with the owner or operator and (3) confirms, without diminishing any other statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor, that the total liability of a guarantor is limited to the aggregate amount that the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to a particular owner or operator.

Direct action

The amendment provides claimants with a limited right of direct action against a guarantor. (With respect to CERCLA, this is a modification of an existing right of direct action.) With direct action, a claimant may file a lawsuit naming an insurance company or other entity serving as guarantor as a defendant in the case. Absent the right of direct action, an injured party would file an action only against the person who allegedly had caused the injury, and it is that person's liability which is litigated in the action. The insurer's initial obligation is to its insured, with whom the insurer has a contract. If the insured is found liable, then the insurer is obligated to make payment to the insured in accordance with and subject to the terms of the contract.

In some instances, however, an injured party, who is the intended beneficiary of the financial responsibility requirements in RCRA and CERCLA, may not be able to bring an action against the owner or operator to recover from that owner or operator or their guarantor. There are two specific circumstances where this may occur. First, it is possible that a claimant may not be able to obtain court jurisdiction over the owner or operator. Second, and perhaps more likely, the owner or operator either voluntarily or involuntarily may be a debtor in bankruptcy. These two circumstances include cases where an owner or operator may be identified and subject to court jurisdiction, but clearly unlikely to be solvent (i.e., capable of paying the judgment) at the time the litigation is resolved. The amendment would afford a claimant the right of direct action in both instances.

Policy terms and conditions

In a direct action lawsuit, the amendment permits the guarantor to invoke not only the defenses that would have been available to the owner or operator, i.e., acts of God, acts of war, unrelated third party acts in limited circumstances, but also the terms and conditions that the insurer had agreed upon with the insured in their policy of insurance. By authorizing a guarantor to invoke these rights and defenses, this amendment should foster the development of a competitive marketplace for insurance certified as evidence of financial responsibility. A competitive marketplace should lead to the greater availability of reasonably priced insurance certified as evidence of financial responsibility. This, in turn should encourage increased compliance with RCRA's and CERCLA's financial responsibility provisions (and the availability of direct action) which will ultimately benefit the claimants by providing them with greater financial protection.

In addition, a major goal of the financial responsibility requirements is to enlist insurers to provide additional policing and incentives to monitor the behavior of their insureds. The preservation of an insurer's policy terms and conditions vis-a-vis its insured may assist in meeting this objective. It is often policy terms and conditions, as well as inspection and rate-making, that form the basis of the insurer's ability to influence the insured to act carefully and responsibly.

At the time of enactment of RCRA and CERCLA, there are some concern that a guarantor may use its policy terms and conditions to diminish the risk it was undertaking, and therefore the value of the financial responsibility it had provided. We hope the cause for this concern will be minimized by several factors. One factor is the intensely competitive nature of the property-casualty insurance market. Owners and operators should have little incentive to purchase insurance certified as evidence of financial responsibility that does not provide meaningful coverage when insurance that would provide valid protection for their assets is readily available. Moreover, insurance companies are subject to comprehensive regulation at the State level so that, if this problem ever did arise, there would be an available procedure to correct it promptly. Nevertheless, as a further safeguard the amendment authorizes the Environmental Protection Agency to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions or defenses which EPA deems to be necessary or to be unacceptable in establishing evidence of financial responsibility.

Liability limits

The amendment also clarifies and defines more precisely the ultimate liability of a guarantor when providing evidence of financial responsibility. As written, present section 108(d) of CERCLA could be interpreted so as to expose an insurer to the full amount of the risk regardless of the insurer's policy limits should an insurer be found to have acted not in good faith. Section 108(d) does not define the term "good faith" nor does it specify to whom the guarantor must act in good faith. To cure this uncertainty, the amendment specifies that a guarantor's policy limits shall be binding, but that nothing in either RCRA or CERCLA is intended to limit any other statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor, including an insurer's traditional common law obligation to act in good faith toward its insured. Moreover, the amendment also makes explicit that the liability limit of a guarantor in any specific instance is to be determined by the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the particular owner or operator involved in the matter.

Evidence of financial responsibility

Finally, the amendment makes explicit and uniform how evidence of financial responsibility is to be provided. First, the amendment requires that evidence of financial responsibility is to be provided in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator of EPA. Thus, for example, the mere purchase of insurance by an owner or operator is not sufficient, in and of itself, to meet the financial responsibility provisions of RCRA and CERCLA. Rather, in order to meet the statutes' requirements, an owner or operator must obtain from a guarantor insurance or some other form of financial guarantee that qualifies as evidence of financial responsibility pursuant to the EPA's regulations. Second, the amendment provides that evidence of financial responsibility may be provided by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, letter of credit, guarantee, surety bond or qualification as self-insurer.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY WHEN COMMON CARRIERS BY RAIL ARE SUBJECT TO CITIZEN SUITS

New section 7002(a)(1)(B), added by S. 757, allows citizens to sue any persons who are contributing to the transportation or disposal of hazardous waste which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment. Under this section, transporters performing mere transportation functions potentially may be sued for dangers presented by hazardous waste at hazardous waste facilities. Common carrier transporters of hazardous waste must accept for transport shipments of hazardous waste. They cannot choose which shippers or consignees they would like to serve. However, under section 7002(a)(1)(B), such transporters may be sued even though they properly transported the hazardous waste and had no other role. This amendment would correct this inequity.

This amendment would be consistent with the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA). CERCLA provides that a transporter may be liable for damages resulting from the release of hazardous waste from a facility, which the carrier transported to that hazardous waste facility—but only if the carrier actually selected that facility. Under new section 7002(a)(1)(B), however, a citizen could bring an action against the transporter for contributing to the past transportation of this hazardous waste even though it did not select the site. The action could include a claim that an innocent transporter should undertake or contribute to site cleanup. CERCLA recognizes that such a transporter should not be liable under those circumstances. With this amendment section 7002(a)(1)(B) will also deal with transporters in the same manner.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY THE UNIFORM MAINFEST REQUIREMENTS

Since the Committee reported S. 757 the Uniform Hazardous Waste Manifest regulations have been promulgated, in March of this year. The Department of Transportation has indicated that several conforming changes to the bill would be desirable, particularly to the small quantity generator provisions.

This amendment responds to the concerns raised by the Department, principally by striking new section 3002(b)(2). This will avoid confusion about the applicability of the Hazardous Materials Regulations as to containerization of wastes. Also, it will eliminate the suggestion that States can impose manifesting requirements other than those consistent with the Uniform Hazardous Waste Manifest regulations.

Under those regulations, however, there are a number of regulatory options relating to manifest requirements that are available to the States and that are not preempted by the rules.

Although no other form may be required by a State to accompany a waste shipment, the Uniform Manifest form contains space to allow the entry of certain optimal State information items in addition to the federally-required items. These items include State manifest numbers; State identification numbers for generators, transporters, and treatment, storage, or disposal (TSD) facilities; telephone numbers for the transporter and TSD facility, EPA or State hazardous waste numbers; additional waste descriptions; and handling codes. States may require generators to complete any of the informational items included in the optional State section of the form prior to the transportation of the hazardous waste, and may require owners or operators of facilities to complete any of these State information items as a condition of the acceptance of waste at TSD facilities.

States may also require generators or TSD facilities to send the Uniform Manifest or other information related to the shipment under separate cover (e.g., by mail), as long as this does not interfere with the actual movement of the waste. By this means, States in which hazardous waste disposal facilities are located may obtain information from all generators using those facilities, including generators located in other States.

These requirements may be imposed both by the State in which the generator is located and the State in which the designated facility is located. States may impose sanctions against generators for failing to provide required State information.

In addition to shipments that are subject to the Federal manifest requirements, States may require the Uniform Manifest to accompany shipments of waste that are not subject to the Federal requirements. For example, States may require the Uniform Manifest for shipments of wastes that are defined as hazardous wastes under State law, but not under Federal law. Furthermore, States may require the Uniform Manifest for shipments by generators qualifying for the Federal small generator exemption.

In addition to the additional information which States may require, a State may also require, with some limitations, generators to use forms printed by the State; and the State may print its name, State-assigned document number, and other information on the required form. For example, a State may print on its form a notice to generators that they are required to submit copies of the Uniform Manifest to the State.

AMENDMENT TO MAKE A CLARIFYING AMENDMENT ON THE USE OF ABSORBENTS

The regulations to be promulgated under new §3004(c), "Liquids In Landfills," shall prohibit the disposal of liquids in landfills that have been absorbed in material that biodegrades or releases liquids when compressed as might occur in routine landfill operations. The use of absorbents should be consistent with the purposes and objectives of this Act and particularly with the finding that land disposal in general is the least desirable form of waste management because of the problems associated with assuring long-term containment of hazardous wastes.

The bill's current language regarding "minimization of free liquids by other means than the addition of absorbent material, where technologically feasible" does not clearly state the intent of the provision. In addition, the language only refers to containerized liquids. This amendment will clarify the intent and make the provision applicable to containerized as well as bulk or noncontainerized liquid hazardous wastes.

The goal of minimizing liquids is to reduce the ready migration of liquid wastes and the potential for subsidence. To this end, the preferred liquids waste management methods are: (1) reduction in liquid waste generation by process design changes (e.g., using less liquid or recirculating rinse water) and by not mixing hazardous wastes with liquids, (2) recycling and recovery (e.g., solvent extraction), (3) treatment by destruction (e.g., incineration), (4) treatment to render the waste or liquid fraction nonhazardous (e.g., coagulation and precipitation), (5) treatment by removing liquids (e.g., decanting, centrifuge, vacuum drum or conveyor, filter press, distillation, reverse osmosis) and (6) treatment by mixing with agents (e.g., chemical reagents and certain absorbents) that remove "free liquids."

Chemical reagents solidify and stabilize liquid wastes by such reactions as encapsulation, ion exchange, precipitation and chemical transformations. They also tend to reduce the leachability of chemical constituents. Examples of chemical reagents include cement—or lime-based materials, pozzolanic materials, and thermoplastic or organic binders. By contrast, absorption is primarily a physical process governed mainly by capillary action, surface tension, and filling void space. Absorption does, however, also involve chemical and electromagnetic reactions, and includes many chemical reagents.

Some absorbents are unacceptable for treating liquids before landfill disposal because they either biodegrade or fail to provide structural stability. Absorbents that biodegrade (e.g., sawdust, municipal waste and shredded paper) are unacceptable because when they biodergrade they collapse and release free liquids. Absorbents that fail to provide structural stability (e.g., sawdust, shredded paper and certain vermiculites) are also unacceptable because of their sponge-like behavior; i.e., they absorb liquids but readily release them under pressures that may occur in landfills. Examples of absorbents that are likely to be found to be acceptable are the chemical reagents discussed above and fine-grained earthen materials (e.g., bentonite, montmorillionite, kaolinite, and Fuller's earth). Fine-grained materials have a large-capillary potential when unsaturated, and may be acceptable if they provide structural stability as well as removal of "free liquids." The ability of absorbent materials to retain liquids under pressure is a function of the amount of pressure, the percent of void space filled with liquids, and the structural strength of the material (i.e., the percent of void space retained under pressure).

EPA is expected to develop and formulate criteria distinguishing between acceptable and unacceptable absorbents. A list of unacceptable mixing agents (e.g. biodegradable materials and materials that readily release water) or unacceptable characteristics may be developed to exclude certain absorbents altogether from use in hazardous waste management practices. Absorbents not listed as unacceptable, e.g., fuller's earth, would have to pass specific performance standards or test criteria to be proven acceptable. Each material from each source projected for use would have to be subjected to testing to determine that it will perform adequately during transport and in the landfill environment. Such criteria might also be applied to specific hazardous wastes and specified absorbents to determine compatibility on a case by case basis under controlled pressure and temperature test conditions simulating the in-use environment.

In addition to performance criteria, EPA is expected to develop operating guidelines for use on a case by case basis to control management and disposal practices. For example, even an acceptable absorbent may become unacceptable if used in limited quantities for absorbing a relatively large quantity of hazardous waste. The material could then become saturated with the liquid waste and subject to readily releasing fluids. Use of a larger quantity of absorbent would be needed in this case to prevent the absorbent from yielding free liquids. Hence, the quantity of absorbent per unit quantity of hazardous waste used in determining that the material is acceptable on the basis of performance tests should be also be used. The operating guideline pertaining to the relative quantities would, therefore, be directly based on test results used to evaluate performance.

EPA should specify standards for performing and evaluating tests for absorbent evaluation and acceptability. As experience and correlations with performance are developed with time on given products, the specific surface area of the absorbent and degree of saturation or fluid content which control soil suction may be used in lieu of actual tests to produce and, hence, evaluate performance.

AMENDMENT TO SUBSTITUTE THE PHRASE "OILY MATERIALS" FOR THE MORE NARROWLY DEFINED TERM "USED OIL"

The statutory definition of "used oil" in RCRA makes use of that phrase in this section of the bill inappropriate. The defined term is, for the purposes of this section, too narrow and use of it would result in less recycling of valuable petroleum materials.

Several types of oily materials are recovered but would not be included in the term "used oil". For example:

On off-shore platform's crude is sometimes spilled and caught in a waste water system. This is skimmed and put into the crude line to the refinery;

Gas pipelines have liquid condensates which may be drawn off and put into the crude line; and

A well may be treated or flushed with water or oil and the oily material can be recovered and sent to the refinery via a crude line.

Use of the term "oily materials", in combination with the existing restrictions ("resulting from normal petroleum refining, production, and transportation practices") would be broad enough to encompass the recycling of appropriate materials and yet restrictive enough to prevent undersirable practices.

AMENDMENT TO DELETE DEADLINE FOR EPA TO DETERMINE APPROPRIATENESS OF USING EXTRACTION PROCEDURE TOXICITY CHARACTERISTIC FOR EVALUATING DELISTING PETITIONS

S. 757 adds a new paragraph (5)(D) to section 3001(b) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. New subparagraph (D) requires EPA to evaluate, within 6 months, the appropriateness of using the extraction procedure toxicity characteristic (EP) when determining whether to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from regulation as a hazardous waste. The new subparagraph also requires EPA to modify, within 2 years, the EP.

A statutory requirement that EPA evaluate the appropriateness of using the EP within 6 months after enactment is no longer necessary, particularly in light of the recently announced Agency position to request additional information from petitioners prior to taking action on petitions to exclude, or delist, a waste generated at a particular facility. The Agency now recognizes that the EP should only be used in evaluating exclusion petitions to the extent the procedure is totally appropriate. In those cases where, for example, the oily nature of a waste might impair the effectiveness of the EP, another procedure is used that measures the metals in the waste. For inorganic wastes that are treated to retard the mobility of inorganic constituents, a multiple extraction procedure is applied to simulate the potential for release that might occur over thousands of years. For the organic-containing wastes where the EP may not be an effective tool, the Agency uses the total concentration of the contaminant in the waste, rather than in the extract, when considering the petition. EPA's recent adoption of a policy to request information on additional constituents in the waste, a policy codified in this bill, assures that the Agency will base its decision on all potentially harmful constituents. Finally, because each petition must be separately evaluated on the merits and data from each facility, looking at such things as volume of waste and planned disposition, the Agency must go beyond looking at just the wastes' constituents and mobility in reaching its decision.

This amendment will, therefore, delete the requirement that EPA evaluate, within 6 months, the appropriateness of using the EP when determining whether to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from regulation as a hazardous waste. The requirement that EPA make such changes as are necessary in the EP to predict the leaching potential of wastes upon exposure to leaching media more aggressive than the media currently utilized is retained in the bill. The only change this amendment would make to that requirement is an extension of the deadline from not later than 2 years after enactment to not later than 28 months after enactment. The extension was requested by EPA with assurances from the Agency that 28 months is a reasonable and adequate amount of time to complete the task.

AMENDMENT TO MAKE LOCATIONAL CRITERIA APPLICABLE IF ADMINISTRATOR FAILS TO MEET LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATION DEADLINES

New subsection (b)(9) of section 3004 provides that if the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations establishing land disposal limitations within the time frames established by subsection (b) for certain wastes, the wastes in question may continue to be land disposed pending promulgation of such regulations, provided that disposal of such wastes in landfills or surface impoundments occurs only at landfills or surface impoundments that are in compliance with the requirements of new section 3004(f)(1). New section 3004(f)(1) establishes minimum technologies requirements for new landfills and surface impoundments. As such, only landfills and surface impoundments that are equipped with the technology required for new facilities can be used to satisfy new subsection (b)(9) of section 3004.

A key component of new section 3004(f) is the mandate that EPA specify criteria for the acceptable location of new and existing facilities. Adding technology to land disposal facilities is not the cure-all many would have us believe. All liners will eventually leak and, as such, locational criteria are a much more important and effective method to protect human health and the environment. Indeed, such criteria are a necessary component of any program designed to assure such protection.

This amendment will modify new subsection (b)(9) of section 3004 to make it clear that a facility fitted with double liners and leachate collection systems, or some approved alternative technology, will not necessarily satisfy new subsection (b)(9). In addition to being equipped with acceptable technology, such landfills and surface impoundments must satisfy EPA's locational criteria.

As stated in the Committee Report at page 21, this provision is intended to provide temporary protection against the migration of particularly dangerous wastes. However, it should not be considered a substitute for the land disposal prohibitions intended by Section 5 of the bill. The Agency is expected and required to meet its statutory deadlines.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATOR TO ESTABLISH TREATMENT STANDARDS APPLICABLE TO LAND DISPOSAL PRACTICES

Under S. 757, land disposal of hazardous wastes, particularly in landfills and surface impoundments, should be the management method of last resort. New section 3004(b) provides for the prohibition of land disposal of certain hazardous wastes unless it is determined to be protective of human health and the environment.

For certain wastes, such as metals and inorganics, there are no practical treatment technologies at this time that permanently eliminate their toxicity. Also, residues of other treatment processes must be land disposed. S. 757 makes Congressional intent clear that land disposal without prior treatment of these wastes with significant concentrations of highly persistent, highly toxic, highly mobile and highly bioaccumulative constituents is not protective of human health and the environment. Under paragraph (7) of new section 3004(b) as revised by this amendment, in order to allow land disposal of these restricted wastes with metals and inorganics, EPA is authorized to specify levels or methods of treatment to assure that when the treated wastes is placed in the ground, its toxicity or mobility, or both, are substantially minimized.

Pre-disposal treatment standards are necessary for wastes containing metals and other inorganic constituents because known treatment technologies cannot destroy these hazardous constituents. The migration of metal finishing and other hazardous inorganic wastes may be prevented or minimized through treatment processes that immobilize the constituents. Hazardous wastes that are organic which have significant concentrations of organics in combination with significant concentrations of inorganics that are highly toxic or highly mobile should be treated so that land disposal involves predominantly inorganic constituents, and only those for which mobility is substantially reduced.

Treatment should substantially diminish the toxicity of the waste or substantially reduce the likelihood of migration of hazardous constituents from the waste so that short-term and long-term threats to human health and the environment are minimized. This test cannot be satisfied through the use of absorbent material as a sole means of treatment prior to land disposal. Treatment is required not only for purposes of protecting against the short-term or acute risks associated with the land disposal of hazardous wastes, but more importantly focuses on the long-term hazards associated with migration of the wastes and subsequent contamination of ground or surface water.

The requisite levels of methods of treatment established by the Agency should be the best that has been demonstrated to be achievable. This does not require a BAT-type process as under the Clean Air or Clean Water Acts which contemplates technology-forcing standards. The intent here is to require utilization of available technology in lieu of continued land disposal without prior treatment. It is not intended that every waste receive repetitive or ultimate levels of methods of treatment, nor must all inorganic constituents be reclaimed. In establishing particular levels or methods of treatment, EPA may, for example, establish a performance standard for leachability of inorganic constituents. EPA should also require the maximum reduction of certain toxic constituents, for example, the reduction of hexavalent chromium to its less toxic form of trivalent chromium. Destruction of total cyanides should be required as a precondition to land disposal. For wastes with a high organic content, incineration should be required in lieu of land disposal, and incinerator residues with small amounts of inorganic hazardous wastes may be land disposed without further treatment.

Determinations for treatment requirements prior to land disposal do not have to be on a waste-by-waste basis. The Administrator is not required to wait for the schedule established under paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of new section 3004(b) to make determinations for wastes with similar constituents. The Administrator may make "generic" determinations of appropriate levels or methods of treatment for similar wastes.●

CERTAIN LAND DISPOSAL PRACTICES

● Mr. JOHNSTON. My question concerns the scope of paragraph (7) of the land-disposal provisions as modified by amendment 2798. For example, the drycleaning industry has developed new treatment technology and techniques which reduce the perchloroethylene content of its wastes below 2.8 percent. Preliminary testing indicates that leachate from such wastes contains very little perc. Would paragraph (7) be applicable to this type of treatment?●

● Mr. CHAFEE. Yes; one objective of amended paragraph (7) is to give EPA the discretion to authorize the land disposal of wastes which have been treated. The focus of the amended language is the protection of health and the environment by diminishing toxicity of wastes or reducing migration of hazardous constituents in wastes. Thus, if wastes treated as you describe are of low toxicity or if leachate from them contains safe levels of hazardous constituents, EPA may, in its discretion, promulgate regulations specifying the circumstances in which land disposal is authorized. In considering such questions, EPA will almost assuredly take into account whether vast quantities or only small amounts of such wastes are generated. I would anticipate that EPA will promptly determine whether such wastes meet the criteria in paragraph (7) and then promulgate the necessary regulations within the specified time. In making this determination, EPA will certainly use the best information available to it at the time.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY APPLICATION OF REQUIREMENT TO CONDUCT GROUND WATER MONITORING

This amendment will provide an incentive for the development of safer and more protective land disposal methods for hazardous waste. It would do so by giving the Administrator of EPA the authority, under certain limited circumstances, to exempt facilities from the groundwater monitoring requirement now included in S. 757.

The requirement for groundwater monitoring at conventional landfills, surface impoundments, and other treatment, storage or disposal facilities as set forth in the Bill, is retained. This amendment would authorize waiver of these requirements only when EPA can find that they are unnecessary. In order to make this finding, the Administrator would have to conclude that the facility would, in essence, be designed to incorporate the functional equivalent of groundwater monitoring within its self-contained structure. EPA could not make such a finding for a conventional land disposal facility.

A facility which could qualify for the exemption under this amendment must first of all be an engineered structure which receives only waste that is in solid form, such as contaminated soil or debris, or has been solidified. A facility accepting liquid waste, or waste containing free liquids, would be disqualified from further consideration for the exemption. A qualifying structure would also have to be engineered to have inner and outer layers of containment enclosing the waste.

The facility would also have to meet an additional series of stringent protective standards. It must be designed and operated to keep out water from precipitation or runoff. This means that the intrinsic engineering of the structure must keep water away from the waste. A conventional clay or synthetic cap would not be good enough. The facility would also have to incorporate internal leak detection and leachate collection systems. These systems, which would be built into the structure at each internal containment layer would provide the functional equivalent of groundwater monitoring. In the unlikely event that any leachate did form, the detection systems would signal the operator before any leachate reached the outer layer of containment.

An example of such a structure could be an above grade concrete bunker or vault within which waste would be placed, totally surrounded by multiple liners, and which would include internal leak detection systems above, between, and below the internal liners. An above grade bunker can be designed so that rainfall would run off the structure away from the waste. This would be in contrast to traditional below grade landfills where the rainwater can penetrate through the surface above the waste and move down through the waste, carrying leachate to groundwater.

Finally, the Administrator could not exempt any structure unless he was reasonably certain that no hazardous constituents from the facility would get out of the structure and reach ground, groundwater, or surface water. In other words, he would have to be sure, under reasonably foreseeable circumstances, that the structure would safely contain the waste and its constituents. Thus, the amendment does not give the EPA Administrator unbridled discretion to ignore the basic intent of the Bill. It does give him the authority to exempt groundwater monitoring when he finds that such monitoring would be unnecessary or redundant. It also gives the hazardous waste disposal industry an incentive to design facilities which are inherently safer and more protective.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY SCOPE OF NEW SECTION 3004(e) BAN ON CERTAIN WELLS

New Section 3004(e) as added by S. 757 would preclude the injection of ground water contaminated with hazardous waste into or above formations containing underground sources of drinking water even where such injection is part of a clean-up action under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) or RCRA. This amendment will clarify the intent of that provision and give EPA the discretion to allow the use of Class IV wells in certain limited circumstances to conduct clean-up operations

The injection of hazardous waste into or above drinking water sources is an inherently dangerous disposal practice that poses an unacceptable risk to human health and the environment. This amendment does not alter the intent that such injection facilities be properly closed in short order and that new facilities not be allowed in the future.

While we seek to establish a complete prohibition on such injection as a disposal technique, we recognize the potential value of such injection practices as an integral part of some clean-up actions at hazardous waste sites. The pumping, treatment and re-injection of already contaminated water may be the preferred removal or remedial technique to assure adequate clean-up in a cost effective manner. We do not intend to bar such injections when they are environmentally beneficial and conducted solely as a means of clean-up, rather than as a form of initial disposal. The prohibition, therefore, is not intended to extend to those situations where injection into or above drinking water sources is used as a method to clean-up contaminated aquifiers at hazardous waste sites and the clean-up plan has been approved under the procedures established under this Act or under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act.

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATOR TO MODIFY APPLICATION OF CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS TO SOME MINING WASTES

This amendment would modify and expand a provision of Section 6(a) of S. 757, as reported, concerning the authority of the Administrator of EPA to modify certain requirements that might become applicable to some mining wastes under Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

The amendment provides that, if certain mining wastes become subject to regulation as hazardous wastes, the Administrator of EPA has the authority to modify the requirements of new subsections (b), (f)(1), and (g) of section 3004 regarding land disposal limitations, minimum technological requirements for new landfills and surface impoundments (other than the groundwater monitoring requirement), and corrective action for releases of hazardous waste, as they apply to landfills and surface impoundments receiving such mining wastes, to take into account the special characteristics (e.g. high-volume, low-toxicity) of the mining wastes, the practical difficulties associated with the implementation of such requirements, and various site-specific factors. The modified requirements would continue to be subject to and must satisfy the law's underlying requirement and ultimate standard that RCRA regulations assure protection of human health and the environment. Practical or economic considerations can only be used to select among alternative requirements which assure protection of human health and the environment.

The purpose of this amendment is simply to assure that if the Administrator of EPA decides to regulate mining wastes under Subtitle C, he is not limited to the regulatory framework or standards that are developed under section 3004(b), (f)(1), and (g) for hazardous chemical wastes. The Committee Report (at p. 28-29) includes a description of some mining wastes and some of the reasons it may be inappropriate to subject them to the same requirements which apply to other types of waste.

Retention of the requirement that protection of human health and the environment be assured is not intended to invoke a specific technical standard of containment, such as a "no migration" standard. Such an interpretation would in fact completely frustrate the purpose of the amendment. In this context the phrase is used in a broad, overarching, nontechnical sense, which can only be translated into technical standards after careful consideration of all of the factors enumerated in the amendment.

This amendment is a clarification of the Administrator's existing authority. As with chemical and other hazardous wastes, the Administrator is able to choose from a range of regulatory options that will satisfy the mandate that protection of human health and the environment be assured. When faced with a specific problem, the Administrator can often identify several options, each of which would protect human health and the environment.●

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I wish to comment briefly on the mining waste amendment which is included in the package of committee amendments.

After S. 757 was reported it came to my attention that some high-volume, low-toxicity mining wastes might become subject to regulation under RCRA. This would not necessarily be inappropriate, but what did concern me was the possibility that such wastes might become subject to standards and regulations developed in an entirely different context solely for the purpose of containing highly toxic chemical wastes.

This amendment was designed to ensure that the law will not require that mining wastes simply be lumped together with hazardous chemical wastes.

The amendment provides that if certain mining wastes become subject to regulation as hazardous wastes the Administrator of EPA will have the authority to modify the requirements of the act regarding land disposal limitations, minimum technological requirements for new landfills and surface impoundments—other than the ground water monitoring requirement—and corrective action for releases of hazardous waste, as they apply to such mining wastes, to take into account the special characteristics of the mining wastes, the practical difficulties associated with the management of such wastes, and various site-specific factors. The modified requirements would continue to be subject to the underlying requirement that they always assure protection of human health and the environment, which is, of course, the goal of all of the major environmental laws.

I think that it is important to point out that protection of public health and the environment is a broad, overarching goal, which is only given precise meaning within the context of a specific regulatory decision. Consequently, the Administrator would not be bound by a decision made in a different factual context in determining the appropriate manner in which to regulate mining wastes.

I wish to extend my gratitude to the floor manager of S. 757, Senator CHAFEE, for recognizing this problem and working closely with me to resolve it with this amendment.●

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATOR TO MODIFY APPLICATION OF CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS TO SOME MINING WASTES

● Mr. RANDOLPH. I am pleased to join as a sponsor of this amendment, and I agree with the description of the intent and need for this amendment given by the distinguished floor manager [Mr. CHAFEE].

This amendment is a clarification of the Administrator's existing authority. As we have made clear in the report and with other amendments, the Administrator is able to choose from a range of regulatory options that will satisfy the mandate that protection of human health and the environment be assured. When faced with a specific problem, the Administrator can often identify several options, each of which would protect human health and the environment. The Administrator is not required to select the option that would satisfy the statutory mandate in the most simple or most cost-effective manner. He has a responsibility to protect human health and the environment and, as such, may choose among several approaches. The selection of a particular approach is consistent with the law if it satisfies the statutory mandate and is not an arbitrary or capricious decision. Distinctions often can be and are made on the basis of waste characteristics, waste management practices and locational criteria. This amendment will simply clarify the Administrator's existing authority to make such distinctions in the specified instances. A letter from Administrator Ruckelshaus to Senator SIMPSON dated April 26, 1984, sets forth the Administrator's interpretation of EPA's existing authority to make such distinctions, and I ask to have it included in the RECORD at this point.

The letter follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY,
Washington, DC, April 26, 1984.

Hon. ALAN K. SIMPSON,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: This responds to your letter of April 11, 1984, requesting clarification of EPA's authority to modify the Subtitle C standards for mining wastes subject to regulation under RCRA. As you know, mining wastes are temporarily excluded from regulation under Subtitle C of RCRA by Section 3001(b)(3)(A), pending completion of a study mandated by Sections 8002 (f) and (p) of the Act. Our current plan is to submit this report to Congress in the summer of 1985. Section 3001(b)(3)(C) of RCRA requires EPA within six months of submitting the study to determine (after notice and comment) whether to promulgate regulations for these wastes. If regulations are deemed warranted, the rulemaking process will be initiated. This process generally takes two years to complete.

EPA's mandate under Subtitle C is to write regulations for hazardous waste that protect human health and the environment. This does not preclude the Agency from taking into account the special characteristics of the waste when writing regulations. Thus, if a design standard is technically infeasible, or there are other methods to achieve the same protection at a lower cost, the Agency is allowed to modify the Subtitle C standards for the particular waste. EPA is not authorized, however, to tailor the standards if the sole reason for doing so is the high cost of the prescribed technology.

The Senate bill provides detailed direction on how to modify the existing hazardous waste rules, but does not prevent the Agency from designing special standards for mining waste within the framework of this directive. Two provisions in the bill appear to be generating particular concern. The first requires a double liner and leachate collection under new or extensions of existing disposal units. The bill allows the use of alternative design and operating practices that provide equivalent protection of groundwater and surface water. This variance could be applied, for example, where installing such a liner and leachate collection system is infeasible or ineffective. The second provision of concern is the prohibition on land disposal of hazardous wastes that contain significant concentrations of highly toxic, highly mobile and highly bioaccumulative constituents. EPA has not developed the criteria for determining which wastes to ban, or completed the mining waste study discussed above. We have difficulty, therefore, predicting the effect of the provision on the mining industry. We would note, however, that, even if some mining wastes were banned, a pending amendment to the bill authorizes EPA to prescribe pretreatment standards that allow disposal of such wastes where the mobility or toxicity of the constituents can be substantially minimized.

The desirability of increasing EPA's flexibility when writing standards for mining wastes can be better assessed after the Section 8002 mining waste study is completed, and the public has been given an opportunity to comment on it. As noted above, mining wastes will likely not become subject to regulation until at least 1988. It may be better to allow EPA to gather additional information on these wastes before amending the statute to provide EPA further discretion.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM D. RUCKELSHAUS.

Mr. President, of course, we recognize that under the ongoing reexamination of what wastes the mining waste suspension should apply to, some wastes—including previously listed wastes—may be regulated earlier than 1988 or even earlier than the conclusion of the study.

In adopting this clarifying amendment, we strike from the bill the mining waste waiver provisions of section 3004(f)(1) as no longer needed. The description of those provisions in the committee report, however, are a good description of our understanding and intent for the amendment we are adopting, and I ask that the appropriate portion of the report on S. 757 be included in the RECORD at this point.

The material follows:

MINING WASTES

Also included in this amendment is a provision which authorizes the Administrator to promulgate an exception to the double liner-leachate collection system requirement for certain wastes generated by the mining industry. The 1980 amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act (section 3001(b)(3)(A)(ii)) deferred from coverage under subtitle C, solid wastes from the extraction, beneficiation and processing of ores and minerals including phosphate rock, and overburden from uranium mining, pending completion of the studies mandated under section 8002 (f) and (p). Those EPA studies have not been completed. When the studies are completed, the EPA is required to determine which of those wastes should be regulated under subtitle C.

Solid wastes from mining and mineral beneficiation and processing are primarily waste rock from the extraction process and crushed rock, commonly called tailings, produced from concentrating steps such as grinding, crushing, sorting, sizing, classification, washing, dewatering, amalgamation, gravity treatment, flotation, agglomeration and cyanidation. The 1980 amendments covered wastes from the initial stages of mineral processing, where concentrations of minerals of value are greatly increased through physical means, before applying secondary processes such as pyrometalurgical or electrolitic methods. Smelter slag might also be included. Massive volumes of this waste ore are produced annually at mining and mineral processing facilities—roughly estimated by the American Mining Congress (AMC) to be approximately 1.75 billion tons in a typical year, which is clearly significantly greater in volume than the solid waste generated by all other industries combined. These wastes were considered "special wastes" under the 1978 proposed regulations as being of large volume and relatively low hazard.

On an individual mine basis, past AMC estimates for a typical lead/zinc underground mine producing 50,000 tons of metal per year requires removal of as much as 5,000-6,000 tons per day of rock. That tonnage breaks down as follows: roughly 1,000 tons per day of development rock, which is the rock that has to be removed to reach the ore, and 4,000 to 5,000 tons of mineral bearing ore. Of that 4,000-5,000 tons of ore, 150 to 200 tons of mineral concentrate are produced. Because of such large volumes of waste and rock tailings, mine surface impoundments and landfills typically cover large areas close to the mine. These land disposal facilities, unlike those of other industries, often cannot be dredged, bulldozed or dug out of the earth, and cover very large areas where the corresponding natural features, such as boulders, trees, stumps, depressions, and elevations, cannot always be reasonably cleared or excavated in connection with disposal. Maintaining the integrity of a liner with the massive weight of typical mining waste would be extremely difficult. Consequently, lining such areas may be impractical in many cases.

If landfills and surface impoundments containing mining and mineral processing wastes are determined by the Administrator to be appropriate for regulation under subtitle C after conclusion of the studies mandated under sction 8002 (f) and (p) of the Act, new section 3004(f) requires groundwater monitoring at the site and whatever other requirements are necessary for the landfill or impoundment to assure the protection of human health and the environment. The Administrator must determine, however, whether to modify the statutory double liner-leachate collection system requirement for such mining wastes, and if he determines that requirement is not necessary to protect human health and the environment, he may promulgate substitute requirements. The amendment, therefore, preserves the performance standards of subtitle C but provides the Agency with the flexibility it needs to determine the most appropriate approach to manage the particular hazardous waste at the site. The amendment does not preclude EPA from requiring double lining of landfills or surface impoundments for mining and mineral processing wastes in those cases where it is appropriate to do so.

In making a determination on whether or not an exception to the double liner requirement for mining waste is appropriate, EPA is to consider whether the modified requirements assure protection of human health and the environment. Practical or economic considerations can only be used to select among alternative requirements which assure protection of human health and the environment.

The mining waste modification authority of this amendment does not cover wastes specifically listed as hazardous wastes prior to the 1980 legislation because of their hazardous nature.

AMENDMENT TO ASSURE THAT THE SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984 DO NOT AFFECT, MODIFY, OR AMEND THE URANIUM MILL TAILINGS RADIATION CONTROL ACT OF 1978, AS AMENDED

This amendment is designed to assure that the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 do not affect, modify, or amend the Uranium Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended.

S. 757, as it was reported from Committee, includes a number of provisions which, if adopted in their present form, may have a significant impact on the regulatory program established by the Congress for uranium mill tailings. That program is now underway pursuant to the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended (UMTRCA)—the statute that establishes the basic framework and the underlying legal authority for uranium mill tailings regulation.

A question was raised during the Committee's consideration of this bill as to whether the restrictions on land disposal contained in section 5 are intended to apply to uranium or thorium tailings subject to regulation under UMTRCA. As stated in the Committee Report at page 21, section 5 is not intended to affect the statutory program that has been established by Congress in UMTRCA.

In addition to section 5 of the bill, it appears that there are other provisions of S. 757 which may, in the absence of further clarification, also have an impact on the regulatory program for uranium mill tailings. Although S. 757 does not directly amend UMTRCA, it does change, in a number of respects, the Solid Waste Disposal Act. And because UMTRCA requires that certain standards promulgated pursuant to UMTRCA "shall provide for the protection of human health and the environment consistent with the standards required under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended, which are applicable to such hazards", it does, in fact, appear that the potential exists for construing S. 757 as requiring changes in the uranium mill tailings regulatory program, in order to ensure continuing "consistency" with the standards of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended.

This is not the Committee's intent, and this amendment is intended to clarify that nothing in S. 757 is intended to affect, modify, or amend UMTRCA—the basic statutory authority for the regulation of mill tailings. Similarly, the Committee did not intend to alter, amend, repeal, ratify, or suspend any of the regulations or standards of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or the Environmental Protection Agency, if they were lawfully promulgated in accordance with the requirements of UMTRCA.

S. 757 is not intended, and should not be construed, to require changes in the regulatory program for mill tailings that is now underway, in order to satisfy the statutory requirement of UMTRCA that certain standards promulgated under that Act for the regulation of uranium mill tailings should be "consistent" with the standards of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended. To the extent that S. 757 adds to, or modifies the provisions of, the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended, this amendment would clarify that the uranium mill tailings regulatory program need not be changed to meet these new or modified requirements for the purpose of satisfying the statutory requirements of UMTRCA that certain standards promulgated pursuant to UMTRCA shall be consistent with the standards of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended.

The regulatory program promulgated pursuant to UMTRCA is a controversial program that is being challenged in the courts by both environmental groups and industry. Both the standards promulgated by EPA and the regulations promulgated by NRC are in question. By adopting this amendment, Congress is neither endorsing nor criticizing the existing regulatory program.

I should like to emphasize that this amendment would not limit or otherwise affect in any way the Administrator's authority or flexibility to treat uranium mill tailings wastes in a fashion similar to the approach taken for all other mining wastes that are subject to regulation under RCRA. Indeed, if the Administrator should decide to exercise his authority to tailor the requirements of RCRA to address the special characteristics of mining wastes, in general—an authority which, in a separate amendment, we have confirmed the current law provides—then the Administrator shall, if he deems it appropriate, pursue a similar approach for uranium mill tailings wastes.

I would also note that, in several instances, this bill either endorses or repeals existing portions of EPA's RCRA regulatory program. By doing so, and by being silent on other portions of that program, we do not intend to tacitly endorse portions of the RCRA regulations. The volume and complexity of these regulations makes such an assumption unreasonable.●

URANIUM MILL TAILINGS AMENDMENT

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I am most grateful for the efforts of the Senator from Rhode Island and of his staff to assist us in the resolution of this complex issue, and I am pleased to join him as a cosponsor of this amendment. I trust that this provision will serve to clarify much of the confusion that might otherwise have arisen over the applicability of the various new or amended provisions included in S. 757, and thereby we can enable the Uranium Mill Tailings Regulatory Program to move forward. In addition, I am pleased to have the important assurances of the Senator from Rhode Island that the Administrator of EPA has the broad latitude to treat uranium mill tailings wastes in a fashion similar to the approach that he takes for all other mining wastes covered by RCRA, and that he is agreeable to confirming this broad discretionary authority in a separate amendment agreed to by the Senate on this bill. Indeed, since uranium mill tailings wastes are similar in nature to other mining wastes because of their high-volume, low-toxicity nature, such an approach makes a great deal of sense and it would satisfy the requirement of UMTRCA that EPA's generally applicable standards for nonradiological hazards shall provide for the protection of human health and the environment consistent with the standards required under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended, which are applicable to such hazards, while at the same time ensuring appropriate and uniform treatment of all mining wastes.

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH MINIMUM TECHNOLOGICAL REQUIREMENTS FOR EXISTING SURFACE IMPOUNDMENTS

This amendment establishes a minimum technological retrofit requirement (double liners or equivalency) for certain existing surface impoundments as an interim status requirement, and provides statutory guidance on what qualifies as a liner.

Surface impoundments in interim status must come into compliance with the minimum technological double liner and leak detection requirements of new section 3004(f) within 4 years after enactment, or stop receiving hazardous waste. Permit action is not required.

Surface impoundments with one or more intact liner that meets current EPA requirements, as set forth in 40 CFR 264.221(a), are not subject to this requirement, unless located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology as defined in subparagraph (G) or as determined by criteria or guidance issued by EPA. One condition of this exclusion is compliance with those portions of the groundwater monitoring requirements contained in 40 CFR Part 264 that are not dependent upon issuance of a permit.

Surface impoundments which contains treated waste water during or after the secondary or tertiary phase of an aggressive biological treatment facility subject to a permit issued under section 402 of the Clean Water Act are not subject to this requirement if those portions of the groundwater monitoring requirements contained in 40 CFR Part 264 that are not dependent upon issuance of a permit are being complied with and if the impoundment is part of a facility that is compliance with best available technology effluent guidelines issued under the Clean Water Act. For those facilities for which no BAT guidelines are in effect and no Clean Water Act permit implementing such guidelines has been issued, the facility must be in compliance with a Clean Water permit, and must have identified to the appropriate permitting authority the toxic pollutants and hazardous constitutents contained in the untreated waste stream and be achieving significant degradation of those pollutants and constituents.

EPA or an authorized State may waive the section 3004(f) technology requirements for existing impoundments if the operator demonstrates the facility is located, designed and operated so as to assure no migration of a hazardous constituent into ground or surface water while waste remains in the impoundment.

All of the provisions of section 3004(f) apply for existing surface impoundments; that is, operators may demonstrate that alternative technologies prevent migration at least as effetively as double liners, and certain mining wastes may be exempted from the double liner requirements.

Surface impoundments that retrofit in compliance and good faith reliance on the statutory definition and EPA guidance documents, could not be required to do nore at the time of their first permit unless there is evidence of leakage.

Until EPA regulations or guidance documents are published, a satisfactory upper liner is defined as one which prevents migration into the liner during the operating and post-closure monitoring period, and a satisfactory lower liner is one which prevents migration through the liner in such period. Three feet of 10-7 cm/second permeability clay constitutes an adequate lower liner.

One variance from the double liner requirement allows a single liner, that meets the current 40 CFR 264.221(a) liner requirements, provided that there is no evidence that such liner is leaking. Evidence that the liner is leaking includes: (1) contaminants from the impoundment detected in ground water; (2) seeps and leaks observed coming out of the impoundment dike; and (3) a sudden or unexplained drop in the fluid level in the impoundment. Any one of these three conditions is evidence that the liner is leaking. To make these determinations, the impoundment owner and operator must: (1) monitor ground water downgradient and upgradient of the impoundment and compare these for significant differences; (2) periodically inspect the whole outside perimeter of the dike for seeps and leaks; and (3) monitor the fluid level in the impoundment and do a liquid balance (i.e., compare the level expected based on a calculation of inflow, outflow, and percipitation/evaporation with the actual fluid level). Of course, a sudden drop in liquid level in an impoundment without an outflow of essentially equivalent volume is an indication of a major leak. The variance does not apply whenever such evidence of a leak exists.

This amendment is meant to provide only a minimum level of protection during interim status. EPA can require higher level of protection and is free to require more sophisticated liner systems and/or compliance with locational criteria as part of a corrective action order or as a permit requirement.

Since the early 1900s, liquid industrial wastes or wastes containing liquids have been dumped into "surface impoundments"—natural ponds, pits and lagoons, or shallow excavated depressions in the ground above the water table. Surface impoundments of chemial wastes are used to separate, through evaporation, solid wastes from the water in which they are suspended and for the disposal, temporary storage, and treatment of industrial wastes.

The use of surface impoundments poses a threat to public health an the environment because the wastes deposited in them escape. The pressure of the liquids forces hazardous contents to flow downward into the surrounding soils where even dilute concentrations of toxic substances can, over time, pollute the ground water. Heavy rainfall can cause ponds to overflow into surrounding areas, resulting in contamination of nearby streams and, eventually, contamination of subsurface waters. Many of the most dangerous contamination sites in the nation have been caused by hazardous materials escaping from surface impoundments. Almost one-third of the federal "Superfund" sites were a result of leaking surface impoundments. Ten of the 15 dump sites identified for maximum priority cleanup in California were contaminated by unlined impoundments.

Under present federal laws and regulations, hazardous waste impoundments constructed after January 26, 1983, must be double lined, have leak detection systems, and comply with standards regulating where these facilities may be located. However, the hundreds of ponds built before 1983 are exempt from preventive safety features. Instead, these ponds are only required to have four ground water monitoring wells—one "upgradient" from the impoundment and three "downgradient."

Current law does not ensure that hazardous wastes in surface impoundments will not contaminate underground water supplies.

Facilities built before January 26, 1983, are not required to have construction features that impede or prevent wastes from escaping, nor are they required to have leak detection systems. Regulation of these impoundments relies on monitoring procedures which require technologies that have not been fully developed and are difficult to implement. Further, these regulations have not been complied with nor enforced. Present federal and state regulations fail to prevent contaminants from entering ground water supplies because they rely on timely, effective corrective action which is extremely costly and generally ineffective.

Reliance on ground water monitoring to regulate facilities built before January 26, 1983, will neither preserve drinking water quality nor protect public health for the following reasons:

(1) Monitoring ground water is difficult, complex and does not often produce accurate, reliable results. To detect hazardous substances, monitoring must be: (a) located near the toxic pond; (b) constructed and drilled properly; (c) designed to detect the constituents placed in the pond; (d) placed properly to intercept the flow of hazardous contaminants in underground basins and streams; and (e) operated pursuant to a reliable sampling plan.

(2) Monitoring is useful only to the extent that effective, timely corrective action can be taken on the basis of information derived from the monitoring. Corrective actions, such as removing contaminated soils or pumping out contaminated ground waters, are always expensive, but seldom effective, in preventing the spread of contamination.

Waiting until pollution occurs and then attempting to contain the contamination is extremely costly. The U.S. Office of Technology Assessment estimates that it costs 10 to 100 times more to clean up a contaminated site and compensate victims than to prevent pollution migration through adequate waste containment. A thousand pounds of waste generated today can mean one million to 10 million pounds of contaminated soil in three or four years and millions of gallons of contaminated water later.●

SURFACE IMPOUNDMENTS

● Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished floor manager's description of our amendment establishing certain requirements for existing surface impoundments. I would like to ask for additional clarification of one point. As I understand one provision in the committee's amendment, a surface impoundment which does not qualify to continue to receive or store hazardous waste after 4 years after enactment may, however, receive nonhazardous waste after that date for storage or disposal. Is that correct?

● Mr. CHAFEE. Yes, the amendment provides for this.

● Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator. This is important to West Virginia, and I believe to other States. In my State there is at least one surface impoundment that receives waste for disposal which is primarily ash from the combustion of West Virginia coal; but also includes sludge from a city-owned sewage treatment plant, sludge from an industrial waste water treatment plant that is a RCRA hazardous waste facility and which is thus a hazardous waste, and some other nonhazardous wastes that are solids. These solid materials are all conveyed to the impoundment in a water slurry form through a pipeline system. The solids settle out in the impoundment to remain there permanently, while the carriage water is decanted and returned to the city sewage plant for treatment prior to discharge. When the impoundment is full, it will be covered and closed out.

Since such an impoundment and pipeline system represents a major capital investment of between $20 and $30 million and has many years of useful life remaining, it would be a serious matter if it could no longer be used. The development and construction of a new site would not only be extremely costly, but could involve significant environmental problems, since this is an area which does not have large parcels of land available for disposal sites.

As I understand the committee amendment, if hazardous wastes were no longer received at the impoundment after the 4-year date in the amendment, the impoundment could otherwise continue to operate as it has. Does the Senate agree that this is within the intent of the committee amendment?

● Mr. CHAFEE. Yes, Senator, I do. It would not be proper to require that impoundment to be closed out permanently prematurely if it can handle wastes that are not hazardous wastes while being protective of human health and the environment.

● Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the Senator.●

WASTEWATER TREATMENT FACILITIES

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, during the development of the amendment to control the use of surface impoundments, there were a number of issues raised with regard to the specific language on the subsection addressing wastewater treatment facilities. I would like to discuss a number of these items with my colleague from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. I would be pleased to discuss these issues with my colleague from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. The amendment refers to wastewater during the secondary or tertiary phase of treatment. Questions have been raised regarding the distinction between primary treatment and secondary or tertiary treatment of wastewater. It is my understanding that primary treatment at wastewater treatment facilities are largely mechanical or chemical treatment. These include operations such as oil/water separation, neutralization ponds, and equalization ponds. Secondary and tertiary treatment operations are largely biological in nature. They include both aerated and natural ponds. These are distinctions that are well known and recognized. The exclusion provided for wastewater treatment surface impoundments applies only to secondary or tertiary phases. It does not apply to primary treatment operations. The exclusion would not apply to primary treatment operations which someone would attempt to make appear to be secondary treatment, such as putting an aerator in a primary operation in the hope that some biological activity would take place. Is this an accurate delineation of the distinction between primary and secondary or tertiary treatment?

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator presents an accurate description of the differences.

Mr. BENTSEN. There has also been some concern that the use of the words "secondary" and "tertiary" are intended to mean the second and third ponds of a multi-impoundment system. This is clearly not the case. These terms refer to the type of waste water treatment.

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator is correct. There can be systems where the first pond is a secondary treatment operation and there will be systems where there will be more than three ponds, all of which will be secondary or tertiary treatment operations.

Mr. BENTSEN. Another issue which has been raised is what constitutes an "aggressive biological treatment facility". This term is used to describe a facility which has biological treatment as a planned and primary function of its operation. An example would be an impoundment system in which some or one of the ponds would include aeration. The use of the word "aggressive" is included to distinguish between these types of facilities and impoundment systems where biological activity is an incidental rather than primary purpose of the impoundment system. An example of where a biological activity is an incidental purpose would be evaporation ponds that rely upon extended retention periods during which some biological activity will occur. It is not intended to suggest that all elements of the impoundment wastewater treatment system must include aeration. It this description accurate?

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BENTSEN. The amendment, for certain situations, requires the facility to demonstrate it is part of a facility—

. . . which is achieving significant degradation of toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents contained in the untreated waste stream. . . .

This phrase is intended to apply to the waste water treatment facilities as a whole. It does not require that each impoundment of a multi-impoundment system must achieve a significant degradation. It does not require that the impoundment system taken as a whole must achieve a significant degradation where other components of the waste water treatment system have significantly degraded the toxic pollutants or hazardous constituents in the untreated waste stream. For example, in some instances it is more effective and appropriate to remove contaminants from waste streams prior to sending them to the biological waste water treatment system. Thus, the test required in this amendment is intended to look at the entire wastewater treatment operations at a facility. Is this the Senator from Rhode Island's understanding of the terms in the amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator from Texas has accurately described the intent of this phrase.

Mr. BENTSEN. In the instance where the facility has no effluent guidelines required under section 304(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act in effect and no permit under section 402(a)(1) of the Clean Water Act implementing section 301(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act has been issued, it must be in compliance with a permit under section 402 of the Clean Water Act and it must, among other requirements, identify—

. . . those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents in the untreated waste stream to the appropriate permitting authority.

Is it the intent of this requirement that the operator of the facility make a positive identification of only those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents which appear in its wastewater?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes, this requirement is designed to assure that the permitting authority knows of these substances. Because the list of hazardous constituents under the Solid Waste Disposal Act can be large, it is not the intent that the operator make a determination regarding the absence of all constituents which are not present. Rather, the operator is expected to know which substances are present and make an identification of those substances.

Mr. BENTSEN. A condition of obtaining the exception for wastewater treatment facilities provided in this amendment is the compliance with a permit under section 402 of the Clean Water Act. Because the process of developing effluent guidelines for the purposes of implementing sections of the Clean Water Act or permits under the Clean Water Act requires a statistical assessment of the effectiveness of wastewater treatment facilities, there is a statistical certainty that a small percentage of the time permit limits will be exceeded. Consequently, it would not be realistic to require absolute permit compliance as a condition to receive the exception provided in this amendment. Is this the intent of the amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. The language of the amendment is intended to recognize the realities of permit and effluent guideline development. EPA is well aware of the limitations of its wastewater treatment permitting process and the Administrator should view the exception for wastewater treatment surface impoundments in the context of these realities.

Mr. BENTSEN. I appreciate the opportunity to discuss these issues with the manager of the bill.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, that completes it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is today turning to consideration of S. 757, the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983. This important piece of legislation will strengthen our Nation's system of hazardous waste management, thereby providing greater assurance of protection of human health and the environment. I supported this bill in committee, and urge my colleagues to support it today.

This comprehensive 5-year reauthorization of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is based on two essential premises with which I believe all Americans will agree: first, wherever feasible, the generation of hazardous waste should be reduced or eliminated as expeditiously as possible, and; second, waste that is nevertheless generated should be treated, stored, or disposed of so as to minimize the present and future threat to human health and the environment.

Among its major sections, the bill directs the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to promulgate regulations prohibiting land disposal of certain hazardous wastes, brings generators of small quantities of hazardous wastes into the reporting system, establishes minimum technological requirements for landfills, surface impoundments and incinerators, gives EPA full authority to regulate the burning and blending of hazardous wastes for energy and heating purposes, improves enforcement of hazardous waste provisions, increases controls over hazardous waste exports, takes a first step toward minimization and reduction of the generation of hazardous wastes, and requires EPA to promulgate regulations for monitoring and control of air emissions from hazardous waste facilities as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.

This last provision is one which I offered during committee markup of the bill. Although the bill as reported included a 30-month deadline for promulgation of these regulations, EPA subsequently asked that this deadline be extended to 42 months. I am pleased that Senators CHAFEE and MITCHELL have agreed not to grant this extension in its entirety, but rather to compromise on a 36-month deadline. Promulgation of these regulations is already several years overdue; if we are to close a significant loophole and ensure that liquid hazardous wastes are actually treated and rendered nonhazardous rather than merely shifted to surface impoundments or other forms of land disposal, then these regulations are essential. Accordingly, I urge EPA to move rapidly and diligently to address this requirement.

Mr. President, I am also delighted that the distinguished manager of this bill, Senator CHAFEE, has agreed to accept an amendment I authored with Senator CRANSTON, which will address the many concerns raised about the threat to public health posed by operating an abandoned hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities. By conducting health assessments and studies at such sites and facilities, we will not only be able to respond to immediate public health concerns, but will also build a comprehensive body of data that will help us better understand the threat that exposure to hazardous wastes may pose to human health. In the long term, greater knowledge of the human health effects of exposure to toxic substances will improve the prevention and control strategies required to protect and improve the health of the citizens of this country.

Mr. President, it is my strong hope that we will enact this reauthorization before the year is out. Finally, I wish to express my sincere thanks and congratulations to Senators CHAFEE, MITCHELL, STAFFORD, and RANDOLPH, as well as to the dedicated staff of the Environment and Public Works Committee, for their hard work and persistence in getting this bill reported and to the Senate floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 3410

(Purpose: To amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act and the Solid Waste Disposal Act to provide for health assessments to determine potential risks to human health resulting from exposure to releases of hazardous substances from landfills and surface impoundments)

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator CRANSTON, Senator STAFFORD, Senator RANDOLPH, and myself, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. CRANSTON, and Mr. RANDOLPH, proposes an amendment numbered 3410.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

USE OF FUND FOR HEALTH ASSESSMENTS, REGISTRY OF EXPOSED INDIVIDUALS, AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

SEC. . (a) Section 111(c)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by inserting "in accordance with subsection (m)," after "(4)"; and

(2) by striking "epidemiologic studies" and inserting in lieu thereof "epidemiologic and laboratory studies and health assessments".

(b) Section 111 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m)(1) For fiscal year 1985, not less than $18,000,000 shall be used for the purpose of carrying out activities described in subsection (c)(4), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated, or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(2) The activities described in subsection (c)(4), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, shall be carried out by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i), either directly, or through grants to the State (or political subdivisions thereof) in the case of States (or political subdivisions) which the Administrator of such Agency determines are capable of carrying out such activities. Such activities shall include conducting health assessments, including those required under section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(3) In determining sites at which to conduct health assessments under this subsection, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall give priority to those facilities or sites at which there is documented evidence of release of hazardous constituents, at which the potential risk to human health appears highest, and for which in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency existing health assessment data is inadequate to assess the potential risk to human health as provided in paragraph (5).

"(4) Any State or political subdivision carrying out an assessment shall report the results of the assessment to the Administrator of such Agency, and shall include recommendations with respect to further activities which need to be carried out under this subsection or section 104. The Administrator of such Agency shall include the same recommendations in a report on the results of any assessment carried out directly by the Agency, and shall issue periodic reports which include the results of all the assessments carried out under this paragraph. Such assessments or other activities shall be reported after appropriate peer review.

"(5) For the purposes of this subsection and subsection (c)(4), the term 'health assessments' shall include preliminary assessments of the potential risk to human health posed by individual sites and facilities subject to this subsection, based on such factors as the nature and extent of contamination, the existence of potential for pathways of human exposure (including ground or surface water contamination, air emissions, and food chain contamination), the size and potential susceptibility of the community within the likely pathways of exposure, the comparison of expected human exposure levels to the short-term and long-term health effects associated with identified contaminants and any available recommended exposure or tolerance limits for such contaminants, and the comparison of existing morbidity and mortality data on diseases that may be associated with the observed levels of exposure. The assessment shall include an evaluation of the risks to the potentially affected population from all sources of such contaminants, including known point or nonpoint sources other than the site or facility in question. A purpose of such preliminary assessments shall be to help determine whether full-scale health or epidemiological studies and medical evaluations of exposed populations shall be undertaken.

"(6) In any case in which a health assessment performed under this subsection (including one required by section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) discloses the exposure of a population to the release of a hazardous substance, the costs of such health assessment may be recovered as a cost of response under section 107 of this Act from persons causing or contributing to such release of such hazardous substance or, in the case of multiple releases contributing to such exposure, to all such releases.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(j) EXPOSURE INFORMATION AND HEALTH ASSESSMENTS.—(1) Beginning on the date nine months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each completed application for a permit under subsection (c) for a landfill or surface impoundment shall be accompanied by information reasonably ascertainable by the owner or operator on the potential for the public to be exposed to hazardous wastes or hazardous constituents through releases related to the unit. At a minimum, such information must address:

"(A) reasonably foreseeable potential releases from both normal operations and accidents at the unit, including releases associated with transportation to or from the unit;

"(B) the potential pathways of human exposure to hazardous wastes or constituents resulting from the releases described under subparagprah (A); and

"(C) the potential magnitude and nature of the human exposure resulting from such releases.

The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment for which a completed application for a permit under subsection (c) has been submitted prior to such date shall submit the information required by this paragraph to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) no later than the date nine months after such date of enactment.

"(2) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) shall make the information required by paragraph (1), together with other relevant information, available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program), a landfill or a surface impoundment poses a substantial potential risk to human health, due to the existence of releases of hazardous constituents, the magnitude of contamination with hazardous constituents which may be the result of a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed to such release or contamination, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall conduct a health assessment in connection with such facility in accordance with section 111(m) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 and take other appropriate action with respect to such risks as authorized by section 104(b) and (i) of such Act.

"(3) Any member of the public may submit evidence of releases of or exposure to hazardous constituents from such a facility, or as to the risks or health effects associated with such releases or exposure, to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Diseases Registry, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program).".

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator CRANSTON, and Senator RANDOLPH, I am offering an amendment that addresses the vital issue of the potential health effects of operating and abandoned hazardous waste sites. In recent years, the possibility that releases of hazardous substances into the environment may pose a direct threat to public health has received increasing attention and concern. In particular, in the case of both operating and abandoned hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities, many members of the public, as well as the scientific community, have suggested these sites may be having an effect on the health of nearby residents due to releases of hazardous substances from the sites into the air, land, or water and subsequent human exposures.

This possibility raises two primary needs: First, to respond to the immediate necessity of assessing the potential effects these sites may be having on the health of community residents, and to provide advisories for the protection of human health, and second, to build a comprehensive body of consistently gathered and analyzed data from a large number of sites in order to better understand the overall nature and extent of the problem and to help determine the magnitude of the threat these sites and facilities may pose to human health.

The amendment we are offering today is based on the observation that generally the same kinds of public health concerns are raised by currently licensed and operated hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities—regulated under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA], and the Solid Waste Disposal Act—as by closed or abandoned sites—usually regulated by the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act [CERCLA], or Superfund. Hence, while our proposal is offered as an amendment to the Solid Waste Disposal Act, it also amends both RCRA and CERCLA.

In enacting CERCLA in 1980, Congress recognized the need to address these public health concerns, for it included in the law two important provisions: Section 104(i) mandating establishment of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry [ATSDR], to which various responsibilities were assigned, and; section 111(c)(4) allowing moneys from the hazardous substances response trust fund to be used to fund the activities of the ATSDR. Our amendment builds on this existing authority by further defining the nature of the work to be undertaken by the ATSDR and by directing the ATSDR to oversee health effects studies at RCRA as well as CERCLA sites.

The amendment amends section 111(c)(4) of CERCLA to clarify that laboratory—including toxicological—studies, as well as health assessments and epidemiological studies are eligible and allowable expenses under the hazardous substances response trust fund.

The amendment provides an authorization for appropriation for fiscal year 1985 for the ATSDR of not less than $18,000,000, such funds to be taken from the hazardous substances response trust fund. To implement its authorities, the ATSDR must be provided with adequate personnel, but no fewer that 100 full-time equivalent employees [FTE's]. At the current time, ATSDR has 47 FTE's, which is an inadequate level. It is the intent of this amendment to provide increased personnel for the ATSDR without forcing a concomitant reduction in FTE's in other components of the Department of Health and Human Services. Furthermore, this authorization shall not preclude the ATSDR from seeking and receiving additional funds from the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] under separate interagency agreements for the implementation of health studies.

The amendment grants authority to the ATSDR to enter into cooperative agreements with States or political subdivisions thereof for the purpose of delegating any or all of the functions of the ATSDR under this subsection and providing funding for the delegated functions, which may include the conduct of health assessments of RCRA and CERCLA sites. This cooperative agreement authority is modeled after similar authority provided under section 104(d) of CERCLA, except that it is the amendment's purpose to allow such cooperative agreements to cover any or all of, but not necessarily limited to, the following: Health assessments, health and epidemiological studies, health referral systems, data collection systems, disease registries, and establishment of ongoing environmental health risk assessment programs—including personnel and overhead expenses. Other activities may also be delegated through cooperative agreements at the discretion of the Administraton of the ATSDR.

The Administrator of the ATSDR is directed to establish a priority system for determining at which RCRA and CERCLA sites health assessments shall be conducted. Highest priority shall be given to those sites at which all three of the following criteria apply: First, there exists documented evidence of release of hazardous constituents into the environment; second, the potential risk to human health as a result of the documented risk appears highest, and third, in the Administrator's judgment, existing health survey data gathered at the given site and other similar sites are inadequate to assess the potential risk to human health posed by the site. The existence of these criteria, however, is not intended to require the ATSDR to first survey the entire universe of RCRA and CERCLA sites in order to establish a ranking before choosing to conduct health assessments or other studies at individual sites.

The amendment makes implicit reference to a standard four-step approach to site-specific health studies developed by the ATSDR. As described in testimony by Dr. James O. Mason, Administrator, ATSDR, before the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on May 24, 1984, the first step is to assess the potential health hazard of a site on the basis of the results of environmental sampling.

These "health assessments" are defined in the amendment to include a broad overall examination of the site or facility and to assess its potential risk to the health of the nearby population. Health assessments should include: First, a determination of the nature and extent of the release or contamination—that is, what the hazardous constitutents are and in what amounts and concentrations have they been released; second, information on existing or potential pathways of human exposure to the release—including contaminated ground or surface water, air emissions, and contamination of the food chain; third, the size and potential susceptibility of the community within the existing or potential pathways of human exposure—that is, how many people, and of what age and fitness could possibly be affected; fourth, a comparison of observed—measured—or expected human exposure levels at the site with known short-term and long-term—acute and chronic—health effects associated with the identified contaminants and any available recommended exposure or tolerance limits for such contaminants; fifth, analysis of available existing morbidity and mortality data for the population under study on diseases that may be associated with the observed levels of exposure, including comparison of observed versus expected morbidity and mortality rates where appropriate, and sixth, an evaluation of the risks to the potentially affected population from all sources of the contaminants, including known point or nonpoint sources other than the site or facility in question—that is, the assessments should not assume a priori that the site or facility in question is the sole source of the contaminant included in the release, and therefore should also consider whether any suspected or observed health problems may be related to sources other than the site or facility in question.

All health assessments at CERCLA and RCRA sites shall include recommendations as to whether further activities should be carried out under sections 104 or 111 of CERCLA. On the basis of a health assessment, recommendations should also be made as to whether any immediate actions should be taken to protect human health—that is, health advisory information should be provided.

If, on the basis of a health assessment, potential for a serious health hazard is deemed to exist, and if the Administrator of the ATSDR concurs, the second step would be to conduct a pilot epidemiologic study—cross-sectional or retrospective—of a group of those people identified as being the most highly exposed. If the pilot study appears to validate the presence of excess morbidity or mortality, the third step will be to conduct a health study, including medical evaluations where indicated, of the entire potentially affected population. The fourth step is to establish a registry of exposed individuals for extended follow-up when scientifically justified and feasible.

It is the intent of the amendment to require peer review of any and all such studies prior to their release to the public. We recognize that time may not always permit, and the Administrator of the ATSDR may not always find it necessary or appropriate to conduct peer reviews of each individual site health assessment. Whenever conducted, the peer review shall be performed by panels consisting of no fewer than three and no more than seven disinterested scientific experts, selected by the Administrator of the ATSDR on the basis of their reputation for a lack of advocacy and a lack of institutional ties with any person involved in the conduct of the study under review. The support staff for the review panels shall come from the ATSDR. Peer reviewers shall remain anonymous until such time as their findings are made known. After completion of the peer review process, the ATSDR will make the significance of the results known to the study participants. The background data, calculations, results, interpretations and conclusions of any and all studies conducted under this authority shall be published as appropriate in peer reviewed scientific journals. In addition, summaries will be periodically published as supplements to the Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

These peer review and reporting requirements are necessary in order to ensure that sound and valid scientific work is performed and reported to the public, as well as to ensure the objectivity and credibility of the ATSDR. In addition, the ATSDR is expected to publish periodic reports of the results of health assessments and other studies which it conducts or oversees in order to provide further information on the overall extent and nature of the potential threat to public health posed by hazardous waste sites.

The costs of any health assessments or further health studies conducted at CERCLA or RCRA sites under this authority may be recovered under the provisions of section 107 of CERCLA from the owner or operator of such site or others physically contributing to the release. If sources other than the RCRA or CERCLA site under study also contributed to the release, they would have to bear their share of liability.

The amendment adds a new section 3005(j) to subtitle C. It requires that owners/operators of landfills and surface impoundments submit to the Agency—or authorized State—an assessment of the potential for the public to be exposed to hazardous substances released from these units. The assessment must address reasonably foreseeable potential releases from both normal operations and accidents. The former includes the steady release of small quantities of volatile chemicals into the air, and the seepage of waste constituents through clay liners. The latter results from abnormal operating conditions and includes fires, explosions, and major liner failures, as well as transportation accidents. Owners/operators are required to obtain reasonably ascertainable information on both types of releases, the potential pathways of human exposure, the magnitude of the exposed population, and the nature and toxicity of the hazardous substances.

Owner/operators should already have access to most of the information required under this section. Regarding accident data, there are many reasons why such information should already have been compiled. Concern for worker safety, avoidance of plant shutdowns, and a desire to keep insurance premiums at a minimum all create an existing incentive for owners/operators to identify sources of potential accidents at their facilities and to take preventive measures to correct them. Thus, for example, it is a common practice for plant operators to identify existing hazards with the "standard checklist" method—see, for example, American Institute of Chemical Engineers, Fire and Explosion Index Hazard Classification Guide, 1980. Where such assessments have been conducted, all that owners/operators need further do to comply with section 3005(j) is identify the potential pathways—for example air, surface water—for hazardous substances released during an accident, and the nature and magnitude of the release and the potentially exposed population.

Similarly, owners/operators should already have access to data on routine releases from their facilities. In order for insurance carriers to compute premiums for nonsudden liability coverage—as required under 40 CFR part 264—they often survey their client's facility to determine the risk of exposure of third parties to anticipated releases. Where insurance carriers provide this information to their clients, this should largely relieve owners/operators of the burden of developing the data required under section 3005(j).

The assessment must be submitted to the Agency—or an authorized State—either with the part B application or, for facilities for which a complete part B application has already been submitted, 9 months after enactment. However, submission of an adequate exposure assessment is not a condition for permit issuance; noncompliance with section 3005(j) is a separate violation of RCRA and should not be viewed as a vehicle to delay the permitting process. Furthermore, owners/operators should not postpone conducting the assessment in section 3005(j) in anticipation that EPA will subsequently promulgate regulations interpreting the statutory requirement. Congress believes that exposure assessments at facilities handling hazardous substances have become fairly routine and, therefore, the requirement in section 3005(j) needs no implementing regulation. Of course, EPA is not precluded from publishing an interpretive rule if it chooses to do so.

The EPA shall make all information collected under section 3005(j) available to the ATSDR. If, in the judgment of the Administrator of the ATSDR, the Administrator of the EPA, or a State—in the case of a State with an authorized program—conditions exist which warrant a health assessment at a particular landfill or surface impoundment, such assessment shall be conducted by the ATSDR in accordance with the provisions of section 111(m) of CERCLA. Further appropriate actions may be taken under the authorities of section 104(b) and (i) of CERCLA. A health assessment at a RCRA landfill or surface impoundment would be appropriate if the facility posed a substantial potential risk to human health for any one of a variety of reasons: The existence of actual releases of hazardous constituents; the magnitude of contamination with hazardous constituents which may be the result of a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed to such release or contamination.

Members of the public may submit to the Administrator of ATSDR, the Administrator of EPA, or an authorized State, evidence of releases of or exposure to hazardous constituents from RCRA landfills and surface impoundments. In light of this information, ATSDR, EPA, or the State may choose to take further actions in accordance with section 3005(j)(2).

In summary, Mr. President, the amendment Senator CRANSTON and I are offering today deals comprehensively, fairly and responsibly with the difficult issue of health concerns raised by past, present and future storage, treatment, and disposal of hazardous wastes. We believe it is crucial for Congress to take steps to build our knowledge of the effects of exposures to hazardous materials, so that we may better respond to public health concerns raised by people living near sites where hazardous wastes have been disposed as well as to concerns raised by the general public. As structured, the amendment makes clear that such advances will best be made on the basis of a Federal/State partnership, and will be greatly enhanced by the provision of adequate personnel and resources for the lead Federal agency, the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

Mr. President, I urge support for, and adoption of, our amendment.

Mr. President, this amendment has been carefully worked out and agreed to by both sides. It does not need very extensive discussion. There is unanimous agreement with the amendment.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON].

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, in offering this amendment which will begin to resolve the serious problem of potential health effects posed by hazardous waste sites around the country.

As I have traveled around California and the rest of the country over the past 2 years, I have personally heard from large numbers of people who are increasingly concerned about the risks posed by hazardous waste facilities in their communities. I am convinced the level of concern is just as great in States as far away as Massachusetts as it is in California. The public wants to know—and I believe deserves to know—what are the effects on the health of residents near operating and abandoned hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities due to the release of hazardous substances from the sites into the air, land, or water.

During House consideration of H.R. 2867, the Hazardous Waste Control and Disposal Act of 1983, Congressman ESTEBAN TORRES of California, whose district includes the BKK landfill, raised this vital issue and offered an amendment requiring that health effects studies be conducted for all operating landfills. The amendment was adopted.

The amendment Senator HUMPHREY and I are offering today addresses the same concerns raised by Congressman TORRES—but is broader in scope. It is not limited to landfills. The amendment recognizes that the same kinds of public health concerns are raised by currently operating surface impoundments as well as by landfills regulated under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA] and the Solid Waste Disposal Act and abandoned hazardous waste sites generally regulated by the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act [CERCLA or Superfund]. Thus, our amendment to S. 757 amends both RCRA and Superfund.

With the enactment of Superfund in 1980, Congress established the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry [ATSDR] to deal with health concerns. Our amendment expands existing authority by giving ATSDR the responsibility to oversee health effects studies at both RCRA and Superfund sites. The amendment clarifies that laboratory studies as well as health assessments and epidemiological studies are eligible expenses under the Hazardous Substances Response Trust Fund. The amendment authorizes $18 million for fiscal year 1985 to conduct such studies with the moneys coming from the Hazardous Substances Response Trust Fund.

Under the amendment, the Administrator of ATSDR is directed to establish priorities for determining at which RCRA and Superfund sites health assessments shall be conducted. Highest priority is to be given to those facilities or sites at which there is documented evidence of the release of hazardous chemicals, at which the potential risk to human health appears highest, and for which, in the judgment of the Administrator of ATSDR, existing health assessment data gathered at the site is inadequate to assess the potential threat to human health posed by the site.

The preliminary assessments of the potential risk posed are to cover the nature and extent of contamination, the existence of potential pathways for human exposure—including ground or surface water contamination, air emissions, and food chain contamination—the size and potential susceptibility of the population likely to be exposed, the comparison of expected human exposure levels to the short-term and long-term health effects associated with the contaminants released, and the comparison of existing morbidity and mortality data on diseases associated with levels of exposure.

All health assessments at RCRA and Superfund sites are to include recommendations as to whether further activities should be carried out—such as health advisories and full-scale health or epidemiological studies and medical evaluations.

With respect to currently operating landfills and surface impoundments, the amendment requires that beginning 9 months from the date of enactment, operators or owners of such facilities who submit applications to EPA for operating permits must provide information regarding the potential for public exposure to hazardous substances from releases from these facilities or sites. For those operating landfills and surface impoundments for which a completed permit application has already been submitted, the owner or operator will have 9 months to provide such information. The requirement for health risk information to accompany permit applications is not intended to delay—and should not delay—the permitting process. But it will provide EPA and ATSDR with more complete information on health effects posed by landfills and surface impoundments.

The amendment provides that whenever, in the judgment of the Administrator of EPA, the Administrator of ATSDR, or the State in the case of a State with an authorized program, a landfill or surface impoundment poses a substantial potential risk to human health due to releases of hazardous substances, the magnitude of contamination with hazardous substances which may be from a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed, the Administrator of ATSDR shall conduct a health assessment. Finally, the amendment provides that any member of the public may submit evidence of releases or exposure to hazardous substance from a landfill or surface impoundment regarding the risks or health effects associated with the release or exposure.

It is my expectation that with passage of this amendment residents of West Covina, CA, will seek a health assessment of the potential risk to human health posed by the landfill operating in their community. Recent releases of methane gas and vinyl cloride from the site itself, ground water contamination at a monitoring well outside the landfill and transportation spills strongly suggest that a health assessment is warranted.

Mr. President, our amendment responds to two very serious needs—the immediate need to assess the potential effects hazardous waste sites may be having on the health of the American people and to take appropriate follow-up action, and second, to compile a comprehensive body of consistently gathered information from a large number of sites to understand better the overall nature and extent of the problem posed by hazardous waste facilities. It merits support. I urge my colleagues to approve the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment (No. 3410) was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3411

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] proposes an amendment numbered 3411.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 40, line 3, strike the word "dissolved".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, S. 757 as reported by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee contemplates that certain hazardous wastes would henceforth be prohibited from land disposal. The bill further contains a list of hazardous wastes the Administrator of EPA must review and consider for land disposal prohibition. The list is based on the experience of the State of California. California has conducted a rulemaking procedure and begun implementing restrictions on these hazardous wastes at the specified concentration levels. One of the prohibitions involves liquid hazardous wastes continuing certain "dissolved" metals. But by specifying "dissolved" metals, California has unintentionally created a major loophole in its law. By tracking California law, the committee bill perpetuates this loophole. My amendment would close it.

California intended certain metals be removed from liquid hazardous waste and disposed of as solids in a secure landfill. The ban was originally limited to "dissolved" metals on the theory that suspended metals would not migrate as quickly as "dissolved" metals do. But since the ban is on "dissolved" metals and not on metals in suspension in otherwise liquid form, operators can continue to dispose of heavy metals in landfills by precipitating the metals and putting them into suspension. This is accomplished by raising the pH by adding lime or some other alkaline substance.

In retrospect the California prohibition has several deficiencies. First, enforcement is a problem. I'm told there is no good field test for determining the difference between dissolved and suspended metals. Thus, there is no viable way to determine whether a specific liquid going into an impoundment consists of "dissolved" metals or metals in suspension. Second, there is no ban on codisposing suspended metals with wastes that have a pH of 2.1 or more. This disposal of such an acidic waste with suspended metals will redissolve the metals and allow them to migrate easily, especially at the very high concentrations specified in the bill. Third, complete precipitation is very difficult to achieve outside a scientific laboratory setting. Dissolved metals likely will be the liquid residue. Thus, some of these metals may still find their way to ground water.

The solution to the problem is straightforward and simple—delete the word "dissolved" from the bill. This will permit a ban on landfill disposal of liquid wastes containing certain highly toxic metals in specified concentrations whether in dissolved or suspended form. I urge my colleagues in joining me in correcting this deficiency in the bill. I ask for adoption of my amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable to this side. It is a fine one. I commend the Senator for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment (No. 3411) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished handlers of the bill very much for their cooperation on both amendments.

AMENDMENT NO. 3412

(Purpose: To add a provision regarding the use of recycled materials by Federal agencies)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have a series of amendments submitted by Senators. The first is an amendment on behalf of Senator KASTEN. I send it to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], for Mr. KASTEN, proposes an amendment numbered 3412.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Redesignate sections 22 through 29 as sections 23 through 30, and insert after section 21 the following new section:

USE OF RECOVERED MATERIALS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 22. (a) Section 6002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(h) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, in the case of paper products, the term 'recovered materials' includes—

"(1) post consumer materials such as—

"(A) paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes from retail stores, office buildings, homes, and similar establishments, after they have passed through their end-usage as a consumer item, including (but not limited to) used corrugated boxes, newspapers, magazines, mixed wastepaper, tabulating cards, and used cordage; and

"(B) all paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes which enter and are collected from municipal solid waste; and

"(2) manufacturing wastes, forest residues, and other wastes such as—

"(A) dry paper and paperboard waste generated after completion of the papermaking process (that is, those manufacturing operations up to and including the cutting and trimming of the paper machine reel into smaller rolls or rough sheets) including—

"(i) envelope cuttings, bindery trimmings, and other paper and paperboard waste, resulting from printing, cutting, forming, and other converting operations;

"(ii) bag, box, and carton manufacturing wastes; and

"(iii) butt rolls, mill wrappers, and rejected unused stock;

"(B) finished paper and paperboard from obsolete inventories of paper and paperboard manufacturers, merchants, wholesalers, dealers, printers, converters, or others;

"(C) fibrous byproducts of harvesting, manufacturing, extractive, or wood-cutting processes, flax, straw, linters, bagasse, slash, and other forest residues;

"(D) wastes generated by the conversion of goods made from fibrous material (that is, waste rope from cordage manufacture, textile mill waste, and cuttings); and

"(E) fibers recovered from waste water which otherwise would enter the waste stream.

"(i) PROCUREMENT PROGRAM.—(1) Within one year after the date of publication of applicable guidelines under subsection (e), each procuring agency shall develop an affirmative procurement program which will assure that items composed of recovered materials will be purchased to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with applicable provisions of Federal procurement law.

"(2) Each affirmative procurement program required under this subsection shall, at a minimum, contain—

"(A) a recovered materials preference program;

"(B) an agency promotion program to promote the preference program adopted under subparagraph (A);

"(C) a program for requiring (i) estimates of the total percentage of recovered material utilized in the performance of a contract, (ii) certification of minimum recovered material content actually utilized, where appropriate, and (iii) reasonable verification procedures for estimates and certifications; and

"(D) annual review and monitoring of the effectiveness of an agency's affirmative procurement program.

In the case of paper, the recovered materials preference program required under subparagraph (A) shall provide for the maximum use of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1).

"(3) In developing the preference program, the following options shall be considered for adoption:

"(A) Case-by-case policy development.—Subject to the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1), a policy may be established for awarding contracts to the vendor offering an item composed of the highest percentage of recovered materials practicable (and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)). Subject to such limitations, agencies may make an award to a vendor offering items with less than the maximum recovered materials content.

"(B) Minimum content standards.—Minimum recovered materials content specifications may be set in such a way as to assure that the recovered materials content (and in the case of paper, the content of post consumer materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)) required is the maximum available without jeopardizing the intended end use of the item, or violating the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1).

Procuring agencies shall adopt one of the options set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B), or a substantially equivalent alternative, for inclusion in the affirmative procurement program.".

(b) Section 6002(c)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting after "highest percentage of recovered materials practicable" the following: "(and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1) practicable)".

(c) Section 6002(d)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "five years after the date of enactment of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "18 months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

(d) Section 6002(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting after "section" the following: ", and in the case of paper, provide for maximizing the use of post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)"; and

(2) in the matter following paragraph (2), by striking out "for at least three product categories" and all that follows through "1982", and inserting in lieu thereof "for paper within 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, and for three additional product categories (including tires) by October 1, 1984".

(e) Section 6002(g) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "the policy expressed in" and inserting in lieu thereof "the requirements of"; and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and to report to the Congress every two years, beginning in 1984, on actions taken by Federal agencies and the progress made in the implementation of this section, including agency compliance with subsection (d)".

(f)(1) Section 4003(d) of such Act (as added by section 21(b) of this Act) is amended by inserting ", including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002(h)," after "adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably naticipated future needs".

(2) Section 1006(b) of such Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b) Integration With Other Acts.—" and by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in developing solid waste plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of a waste-to-energy facility, adequate provisions shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs, including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002(h), of the recycling and resource recovery interests within the area encompassed by the solid waste plan.".

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering today encourages the Federal Government to use recycled paper. Each year the Federal Government consumes 472,065 tons of paper. Yet it does not have a program to encourage the use of recycled paper.

Increasing the use of recycled materials is a wise use of our resources. Not only do we reduce the consumption of raw materials, but recycling reduces energy consumption and the volume of solid waste that must be disposed of.

I am concerned that we use our natural resources well. The Federal Government should lead the way in using our financial and natural resources well.

All too often we see materials that can be economically recycled used for other purposes. For example, approximately 65 percent of the volume of municipal waste is paper. Instead of converting this material into a new consumer item. It has become a part of our solid waste problem.

In other cases, paper is burned as a heat source in electrical generation.

While this alternative may be better than simply putting paper in a landfill, it is still not the highest and best use of wastepaper as a resource.

The amendment I am offering today is very simple. It does not add to the cost of Government. Bids of potential paper suppliers are currently evaluated on the basis of two criteria: (1) Does the paper meet the required specification, and (2) price. This amendment simply adds a third criteria. That is that preference be given to the paper which contains the highest percentage of recycled material. Most simply stated this means that of substantially equal low bids meeting product specification the paper which contains the highest percentage of recycled materials would be selected.

In developing this amendment, I have worked closely with the paper industry, conservation groups, and my colleagues in the Senate. Senator MATHIAS and I have communicated several times on this issue. As vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, he is especially concerned about any changes in Federal policies for purchasing paper. Senator MATHIAS and I have entered into a colloquy on this amendment which I would like included in the RECORD at this time.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, as vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing with oversight responsibility for the Nation's printer and paper procurer, the Government Printing Office, I have a duty to ensure that the paper products purchased by GPO are of the highest quality for the money. The Joint Committee on Printing has the statutory responsibility to fix the standards of paper for the variety of needs of the Federal Government. For this reason, I take more than a passing interest in the pending amendment by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN].

Mr. President, I wish to make it clear that the amendment being offered by the Senator from Wisconsin simply adds a third criterion to the current guidelines for Federal paper procurement. This amendment does not change existing JCP specifications nor the requirement that low price prevail before a paper products contract is awarded.

Mr. KASTEN. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] is correct. Under my amendment, all paper products purchased by the Federal Government must continue to meet JCP specifications, and, most importantly, lowest price continues to be the determining factor in awarding these contracts. My amendment simply adds another criterion to JCP and GPO paper products contract decisions, namely that priority consideration be given to recycled paper.

The amendment proposes several options for buying recycled paper products. Each Federal agency authorized by law to procure paper products from commercial paper suppliers may proceed on a case-by-case basis or it may prescribe a minimum-content standard for all purchases or it may develop another plan consistent with congressional intent and EPA guidelines.

Mr. MATHIAS. Are we to understand, for example, that if GSA establishes a 25-percent-minimum-content standard for "post consumer waste product" and one supplier can meet that requirement at a cost of $20 per given amount and another supplier can offer the same amount of virgin paper for $15, then GSA is obligated to buy the virgin paper?

Mr. KASTEN. The Senator is correct. This amendment only adds a third criterion to Federal paper product purchases. All other things being equal, this amendment states that recycled paper will be purchased by the Federal Government. The purpose of this amendment is to send a message that the Federal Government supports and encourages efforts to recycle paper.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President I also ask unanimous consent there be added the following cosponsors to the Kasten amendment: Senators PELL, SARBANES, and DECONCINI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I urge and move passage of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment (No. 3412) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. Pesident, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3413

(Purpose: To amend the listing/delisting modifications provision of the Solid Waste Disposal Act)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I now send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senator SPECTER and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE), for Mr. SPECTER, proposes an amendment numbered 3413.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 8. LISTING/DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

On page 50, line 23, insert "information that provides" immediately before "a reasonable basis".

On page 51, line 3, immediately after "hearing." add the following new sentence: "To the maximum extent practicable the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a proposal to grant or deny such a petition within twelve months after receiving a complete application to exclude a waste generate at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste and shall grant or deny such a petition within twenty-four months after receiving a complete application.".

On page 51, line 3, strike "hearing" and insert in lieu thereof "comment".

On page 51, line 6, insert ", after notice and opportunity for public comment," immediately after "shall".

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the amendment provides that when reviewing a petition to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste, the Administrator should consider factors or constituents not originally considered in the decision to list the waste initially only if he has information that provides a reasonable basis to believe that such factors could cause it to be listed.

It also provides that to the maximum extent possible EPA shall publish their proposal to deny or to grant the petition within 12 months after receiving the application and shall grant or deny the petition within 24 months.

In addition, it provides for public comment rather than hearing, and provides for EPA amendment of the basis for lifting the amendment only after public comment.●

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this amendment on behalf of Senator SPECTER deals with setting time limits, to the maximum extent possible, on EPA consideration of listing and delisting petitions. It also provides for a public comment and provides for clarifying the basis on which factors not orginally considered in the decision to list can be considered in the decision whether to delist.

Mr. President, I move passage of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment (No. 3413) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3414

(Purpose: To provide that funding for remedial action for a release at a facility owned by a State or political subdivision but operated privately shall be the same as funding for remedial action for a release at a privately owned facility)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator LUGAR, for himself and Mr. BRADLEY, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], on behalf of Mr. LUGAR and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3414.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

FUNDING OF REMEDIAL ACTION AT FACILITY OWNED BY A STATE OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISION BUT OPERATED PRIVATELY

SEC. 30. Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—(1) by amending section 104(c)(3) to read:

"(ii) 50 per centum (or such greater amount as the President may determine appropriate, taking into account the degree of responsibility of the State or political subdivision for the release) of the capital, future operation, and future maintenance costs of the response action relating to a release at a facility, primarily used for treatment, storage, or disposal, that was owned and operated by the State or a political subdivision thereof at the time of any disposal of hazardous substances in such facility. For the purpose of subparagraph (c)(ii) of this paragraph, the term "facility" does not include navigable waters or the beds underlying those waters.", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of any State which has paid, at any time after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, in excess of 10 percent of the costs of remedial action at a facility owned but not operated by such State or by a political subdivision thereof, the President shall use money in the Fund to provide reimbursement to such State for the amount of such excess.".

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment to provide for a more equitable State and local share requirement for the cleanup of hazardous-waste facilities which are owned but not operated by a State or local political subdivision. My amendment would add the words "and operated" after the word "owned" in section 104(c)(3)(C) of the 1980 Superfund law. Under my amendment, only those facilities which are operated as well as owned by a State or by one of its political subdivisions would be subject to the special 50-percent minimum-share requirement for a Superfund cleanup. Sites like the Seymour site, which are owned but not operated by a State or by one of its political subdivisions would be subject only to the regular 10-percent share requirement.

Because the Seymour Recycling Corp. site was located on land owned by the aviation board of the city of Seymour, the Environmental Protection Agency has treated the SRC site as being subject to the special 50-percent minimum-share requirement of section 104(c)(3)(C). But I do not believe that this is equitable.

A brief review of the history of the Seymour recycling facility will help to judge the degree of responsibility which the State of Indiana and the city of Seymour should bear for what happened there.

The Seymour recycling facility was a 13-acre site located within Freeman field, an industrial park near the city of Seymour. The land on which the industrial park is located was originally federally owned, but was deeded to the board of aviation commissioners of the city of Seymour for use as an airport and for industrial development. There are dozens of industries located on Freeman field. The board of aviation commissioners rents properties to them and the city provides police, fire protection, and other services to these industries. The Seymour Recycling Corp. was just one of many industries located within the industrial park.

The Seymour recycling facility was owned by the Seymour Manufacturing Corp., a company which has manufactured hand tools and fireplace accessories in Seymour since 1872. The Seymour recycling facility began operation on Freeman field in 1970. In 1976, the Seymour Recycling Corp. was formed, but it remained under the same ownership as Seymour Manufacturing until 1978, when the Seymour Recycling Corp. was sold to the Environmental Processing Corp. The Environmental Processing Corp. was also the owner of the Chem Dyne facility in Hamilton, OH.

Seymour Recycling's initial activities consisted of redistilling solvents generated by the firm's manufacturing activities. However, it began to accept other wastes and it installed additional distillation equipment, two incinerators, and a cyanide treatment system. However, over a period of time, large amounts of waste began accumulating at the site. And most of this waste could not be processed with SRC's equipment. What was supposed to be a recycling center turned into a very large hazardous-waste facility at which tens of thousands of drums of hazardous waste were improperly stored.

In 1978, the State of Indiana asked that the site be closed and its owners forced to clean it up. An agreed order was issued by the Jackson circuit court allowing the operation to continue with the intent of providing adequate revenues to reduce the waste stored on the site and to turn it into a viable recycling operation. At about the same time, the Seymour Recycling Corp. was sold to the Environmental Processing Corp. Repeated attempts by the State of Indiana to force the owners of the SRC site to comply with the terms of the agreed order were unsuccessful. In 1980, the owners abandoned the site. A receivership was appointed and the site was closed.

In hindsight, one can certainly question the adequacy of the supervision of the SRC facility by all levels of government. But the Seymour recycling facility problem arose at a time when there was a very inadequate appreciation of the toxic-waste problem at all levels of government. Neither State nor Federal hazardous-waste regulations were well designed to address the indiscriminate accumulation of waste that occurred at the SRC site. Both State and Federal regulations needed to be strengthened. Since the 1970's, these regulations have been strengthened and they will be further strengthened by this bill.

There is good reason for assigning to the State of Indiana and the city of Seymour only the regular degree of responsibility for financial participation in any Superfund clean up of the Seymour Recycling Corp. site rather than special 50-percent minimum-share requirement. A city does not normally regulate industrial safety and health or industrial pollution more strictly merely because that industry is located within an industrial park or publicly owned land. The industry or business itself is liable for any accidents, health, or environmental problems that result from its operations. The Seymour Recycling Corp. was privately owned and privately operated. The operator of a site has a much greater degree of responsibility for and knowledge of any mismanagement that may occur. The gross mismanagement of waste that was supposed to be recycled was the responsibility of the operators of the facility, not the Board of Aviation Commissioners. While I do not deny that a city should closely monitor the activities of all the waste-disposal facilities within its border, that is true whether or not these facilities are located on publicly owned land.

Thus, I would contend that it is not equitable for the city of Seymour and the State of Indiana to have to meet a special 50-percent minimum cost-sharing provision for any Superfund cleanup of the Seymour Recycling Corp. site. In addition to this consideration, I do not believe that the State of Indiana would be able to afford a 50-percent minimum-share requirement for the cleanup of the SRC site if Superfund moneys do have to be used for the remainder of the cleanup.

In 1982, the State of Indiana's hazardous waste disposal tax went into effect. This law places a tax on every ton of hazardous waste which is land disposed in a hazardous waste disposal facility. Revenues from this tax have been far less than the State anticipated. In February 1984, the Indiana General Assembly acted to increase revenues from this tax. But there are currently 17 sites in Indiana on the national priority list for Superfund cleanup. The State board of health estimates that the average Superfund cleanup in Indiana will cost $6 million. In addition to these 17 sites, there are several hundred sites in Indiana under investigation in the EPA's emergency response and remedial inventory system. Even with the recent change in State law, it would be difficult for the State to meet a 50-percent share requirement for the SRC without seriously delaying State efforts to clean up other sites in Indiana.

I am very pleased with the progress which has been made so far at the SRC site. All of the approximately 50,000 barrels and over 100 storage tanks have been removed. The sludges have been taken out of the lagoon and the buildings cleaned out. A foot of topsoil has been removed and replaced with clean fill material.

With the surface cleanup virtually complete, the EPA is now able to study the nature and extent of the subsurface problems at the SRC. Old monitoring wells will be continuously sampled and new ones have been installed. Soil borings and remote-sensing techniques are being used to examine the subsurface. A court has ordered that the extension of city water lines to the Snyde Acres subdivision and to other nearby residences be funded out of moneys collected from responsible waste generators. A 1982 preliminary study indicated contamination of the aquifer and confirmed that the ground water is flowing in the direction of these homes. I hope that whatever cleanup of the subsurface may be required can begin expeditiously. But the EPA does not presently know the extent of the subsurface contamination, if indeed there is significant underground contamination. It will then determine what remedies best address any subsurface problems that may be identified.

The surface cleanup was accomplished through a 1982 settlement with a group of waste generators whom the EPA estimated were responsible for half of the hazardous waste disposed of at the site. At that time, the EPA estimated that in the worst case the surface cleanup might cost $15 million and the subsurface cleanup might cost another $15 million. So far other groups of generators have agreed to contribute over $5 million to the cost of the subsurface cleanup until the new studies are completed. If the cost of cleaning up the subsurface exceeds the amount available from settlements with waste generators, Superfund moneys would have to be used for the subsurface cleanup. The State of Indiana would then be liable for half of those costs under current law.

In sum, my amendment would eliminate the 50-percent minimum-share requirement for a site which is owned but not operated by a State or by one of its political subdivisions. Only the 10-percent cost-sharing requirement would apply in such a case. While I believe that State cost sharing is desirable, a heavier burden should fall on the State only when it or one of its political subdivisions actually operates a site where hazardous waste was stored.

I believe that my amendment would make the cost-sharing provisions of the Superfund law more equitable. The Seymour problem arose at a time prior to the recognition of the need for stronger hazardous-waste regulation. Neither the State of Indiana nor the city of Seymour had any special responsibility for supervising its management merely because it happened to be located within an industrial park on land leased to the facility's owners by the Aviation Board of the city of Seymour. To impose a 50-percent cost-sharing requirement in this case could interfere with the expeditious cleanup of the SCR site and with the cleanup of other sites in Indiana in a rational and expeditious manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3414) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3415

(Purpose: To delay the effective date of certain statutory deadlines applicable to halogenated organic compound wastes if the Administrator fails to promulgate certain regulations)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator JOHNSTON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island, for Senator JOHNSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 3415.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 43, line 12, strike "If" and insert in lieu thereof "Except as provided in paragraph (10), if";

On page 43, line 20, insert "and paragraph (10)" immediately after "This paragraph"; and

On page 43, following line 22, insert the following new paragraph:

"(10) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under paragraph (1) with respect to non-liquid hazardous wastes containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/kg by the date thirty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, effective twenty-four months after such date, and until the Administrator promulgates such regulations under paragraph (1), such wastes from the refurbishment of textiles and apparel containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration less than 28,000 mg/kg may be disposed of in a landfill or surface impoundment only if such facility is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) of this Act. All other such wastes shall be subject to the provisions of paragraph (9).".

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I have been contacted by a number of drycleaners who have expressed considerable concerns about S. 757. This industry has always used recycling and has recently developed new technology and techniques to reduce the hazardous constituents of its wastes. Further, the Laundry Cleaning Council has been actively pursuing additional recycling measures. Since dry cleaners have made and are making sincere efforts to reduce any hazards presented by their wastes, they should be entitled to additional time to comply with the bill's land disposal provisions if, and only if, EPA fails to promulgate regulations in a timely manner. Accordingly, I am offering an amendment which would give dry cleaners additional compliance time if EPA does not act, and if the wastes in question are reduced below 2.8 percent in perc content. In such circumstances, my amendment would give drycleaners 24 months beyond the period specified for promulation of regulations before they would have to ship their wastes to a facility which meets the requirements of section 3004(f).

Mr. CHAFEE. Let me ask the Senator from Louisiana about his amendment. Is it his intention to provide that if the Administrator fails to take action within the prescribed period of time, that wastes from dry cleaning facilities which are reduced to concentrations of less then 28,000 mg/kg may continue to be disposed of under current methods for a period of 24 months?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, that is the intent of the amendment. Reductions to 28,000 kg/mg would continue to qualify for current disposal methods. At the end of the 24-month period these and all other halogenated organic compounds for which the Administrator has not acted must go to an upgraded facility.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank the Senator for his explanation, and his amendment is acceptable to me.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3415) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DEEPWELL INJECTION

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I should like to seek clarification of the intent of section 5(b) of this bill with regard to the use of deepwell injection in disposing of hazardous wastes from the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. In section 5(b) of the bill, limitations on the use of certain classes of land disposal facilities—specifically landfills and surface impoundments—can occur, if the EPA Administrator fails to determine whether such disposal facilities will be protective of human health and the environment for certain hazardous wastes by the specified deadlines in the bill.

The terms "landfills" and "surface impoundments" for the purposes of section 5(b) are not defined, but it appears from the provisions of this section that disposal of hazardous wastes in class I injection wells would not be prohibited if EPA should fail to act by the specified deadlines. Is this correct?

Mr. CHAFEE. The interpretation of my colleague from the State of Texas regarding section 5(b) of this bill is correct. Under this section, land disposal methods for certain hazardous wastes, other than landfills or surface impoundments, are not prohibited if EPA should fail to act by the specified deadlines. Properly permitted class I injection wells would be allowed to continue receiving hazardous wastes if EPA does not act within the specified time.

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank my colleague for clarification of this matter.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the amendment sponsored by Senator KASTEN and myself requires the EPA to establish procurement guidelines for Federal agencies in the acquisition of recycled materials, when economically feasible. That section not only relates to paper products but tires as well. I interpret the provision to include scrap and retreaded tires. I believe for clarification sake, we should include language in the conference report further defining the term "tires" and additional language giving guidance to the Defense Acquisition Regulatory Council and the Civilian Agency Acquisition Council in carrying out the purposes of this section. When this legislation goes to conference committee, will the chairman support the inclusion of language on scrap and retreaded tires and accompanying interpretive language on tire/asphalt materials for road construction and maintenance?

Mr. CHAFEE. I believe the procurement section on the procurement of recycled materials is quite explicit in its inclusion of tires. However, I agree that we should further define what the Congress intended to include in this provision and will support language in the conference report on the development of a preference program including scrap and retreaded tires. This section builds on existing law and redirects the Administrator of EPA, after consultation with the Administrator of General Services, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Public Printer, to establish guidelines for the use of all Federal procuring agencies in the cost-effective acquisition of recycled materials. Certainly, the agencies should consider the use of those materials and combinations of materials like asphalt and rubber for road construction purposes. If the Senator would like additional clarification in the conference report, I will be happy to work out appropriate language.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the chairman. I think clarification is necessary, and I hope he will work with me and my staff on the proper language.

COMMUNITY RELOCATION

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the Committee on Environment and Public Works saw fit to include in this bill, at the request of the Senators from Missouri, an amendment to the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980. This amendment clarifies the Environmental Protection Agency's authority and flexibility in dealing with situations such as that presented by dioxin contamination in Missouri.

Specifically, the amendment provides that the Agency can move immediately to permanently relocate the residents of a contaminated site if such a step is found to be cost effective or may be necessary to protect health or welfare. For example, in some cases it may make more sense—economically and socially—to buy up and seal off a highly contaminated residential area immediately, rather than locate the residents indefinitely in temporary housing during a protracted, possibly impractical cleanup.

The amendment also gives the Agency the authority to pay the interest and principal on business debt during a period of temporary relocation. Temporary relocation is intended to protect the residents of a contaminated area, but when a community is evacuated, businesses are cut off from their customers. Their income abruptly ceases, while their obligations continue unabated. Thus, they are not protected but are harmed. This amendment seeks to hold them harmless with respect to business debt only. There is no intent to make up for lost income.

To cite but one example of the need for this authority, the Quail Run Mobile Home Park in Franklin County, MO, was found to be contaminated with dioxin at levels up to 1,000 times the amount deemed acceptable in a residential area. The families living at the trailer park were offered temporary relocation. But the owners of the park, who were in no way responsbile for the contamination of the soil, then found themselves with no way to meet their financial obligations. This amendment provides the Agency with a way to hold such people harmless with respect to business debt, and business debt alone, until the situation is resolved.

Our amendment also gives the Agency specific authority to provide special assistance to individuals unable to work as a result of such an evacuation. In effect, the same assistance would be available as is already available in natural disasters—unemployment and reemployment assistance, food stamps, and grants to meet necessary expenses or serious needs not covered by other aid programs. As under the Disaster Relief Act, this assistance would be provided by Federal agencies with appropriate programs and expertise, using money from the Superfund, and not directly by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Mr. President, I would like to express the appreciation of the Senators from Missouri for the committee's consideration of this matter. However, I must note that similar legislation approved by the other body does not contain comparable language, and I fear that this provision, so important to our State, might get overlooked in the process of seeking a compromise. Can the distinguished manager of the bill offer me any assurances in this regard?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has my assurance that the provision he refers to will not be overlooked in Conference Committee. He has worked long and hard with the members of our committee to craft this important amendment.

The situation presented by dioxin contamination in Missouri established the need for the amendment. However, it should be recognized that the provision is of interest not just to residents of that State. The interests of all citizens are served by this amendment, and I am confident that our colleagues in the House will agree.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I should like to engage the managers of this legislation in a brief dialog regarding the recovery of used motor oil and lubricants. There is a discrepancy between the House-passed version of this legislation and the bill which is before us today.

Mr. CHAFEE. We would be happy to respond to the Senator's questions.

Mr. SARBANES. Section 27 of H.R. 2867 encourages the recovery of waste oil. It recognizes the fact that waste oil is profitably collected and recycled and provides a simple means by which service stations and other small businesses can continue to recover waste oil with minimum regulatory burden and at the same time protect the environment.

In my home State of Maryland, the service station operators several years ago agreed to join the State government in promoting proper disposal and recycling of waste oil. The service stations serve as collection centers for anyone wishing to dispose of waste oil.

In turn, there are commercial collectors who pick up the accumulated waste oil and pay the dealers for it. The oil then goes to commercial rerefiners or reprocessors.

We are very pleased with the way this program has run, and I know similar efforts to encourage waste oil recycling are underway in many other States.

My colleague from Maryland, Representative BARBARA MIKULSKI, added language to H.R. 2876 which takes into account the special nature of waste oil collection. Her amendment provides that service stations and other collection points for waste oil shall be required only to keep track of how much waste oil they take in, how much is picked up for recycling, and how much is used on premises. Of course, this applies only if the waste oil generator can show, as required in H.R. 2867, that he turns the material over only to licensed and regulated collectors or haulers who are responsible for its proper disposition in a manner consistent with protection of human health and the environment.

This provision was accepted by voice vote in committee and included without objection in the bill as it was approved by the House.

Have the managers of this legislation here in the Senate considered the Mikulski amendment? I am concerned, because we do not seem to have any comparable provision in the legislation that is before us.

Mr. CHAFEE. We are familiar with the Mikulski amendment. It respresents a careful effort to balance the stringent environmental protection requirements of this legislation against the practical experience of businesses that are already engaged in successfully recycling material that otherwise would be harming the environment.

While there have been some isolated problems, in general the waste oil industry has demonstrated how a potentially hazardous substance can be safely collected and profitably recycled into new, useful products. We do not want to upset an industry that already is doing voluntarily what we now are requiring others to do.

Mr. SARBANES. Can we assume then, that the Senate conferees on this legislation will be able to accept the basic principles of the Mikulski amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. As the Senator is aware, there are often a number of different approaches, different but equally effective means to an end. Each such approach has strengths and weaknesses. The amendment the Senator refers to represents one approach to the problem. After further analysis, it may turn out to be the best approach. At this time, however, I would prefer to address the issue in conference committee. The problem clearly warrants a legislative solution; and I am confident that, in consultation with our House colleagues, my colleague from Maryland, representatives of EPA, the environmental community, and interested members of the affected industries, a solution to this problem can be agreed to.

The Mikulski amendment should not pose a problem in conference.

Mr. SARBANES. I am pleased to hear that. Based upon those assurances, I will refrain from offering specific language at this time.

CITIZEN SUIT PROVISION OF RCRA

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield to my good friend, the Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, one important provision provided by this bill is the citizen suits provision in section 18(a). It is my understanding that this section will allow any citizen to seek relief in instances where the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any hazardous or solid waste may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment. Is this a proper reading of the provision?

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WILSON. The need for this provision is clear and immediate. During testimony before the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee, one witness stated that this provision was unnecessary due to protections already granted under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, better known as Superfund. However, earlier this year, a Federal district court in California held that a private party, under Federal law, does not have a right of action that would allow it to secure a cleanup order.

If the distinguished Senator will allow me to continue for a moment, I believe the circumstances in this situation will show it to be the type of situation Congress intends to be covered by Federal law. In 1942, a tract of land was bought by the Federal Government for the war effort and facilities were built on the site for the manufacture of synthetic rubber. The facilities were then leased to several companies until 1955 when the Federal Government sold the property to one of the companies. In 1972, the company decided to get out of the synthetic rubber business and sold the land to a developer who in 1976 sold the land to the plaintiff in the case. Between 1976 and 1980, the plaintiff developed the property into commercial and light industrial property. In 1981, the plaintiff negotiated a sale to a third party. Portions of this purchase were mutually rescinded when unknown hazardous wastes were discovered on the site.

Subsequently, the plaintiff investigated the problem and determined that the wastes were migrating towards an aquifer that supplies water to communities downstream. The plaintiff notified the companies that had leased the facilities and the General Services Administration—successor to the Government agency that had originally purchased the land—of the problem and requested that they take action. No party would agree to abate the problem. In December of last year, the plaintiff filed suit to force the responsible parties to clean up the site. In March of this year, the court ruled that the plaintiff did not have a right of action to secure a cleanup order.

My understanding, Mr. President, is that Congress intended the Superfund law to include an implied right for private parties to obtain a cleanup order. Under the Cort against Ash doctrine, authorization for private parties to bring an action to force cleanup of a hazardous waste site is implied when Congress intended to allow such a result. The Federal district judge in California erroneously ruled that the Congress had not intended to authorize such actions.

Mr. CHAFEE. The Senator's understanding is correct.

Mr. WILSON. The citizen suits provision included in this legislation clearly states the intent of Congress that this right exists in Federal law. Under RCRA, the right is made explicit. There have been adequate safeguards placed on such suits to ensure that they will not interfere with Federal regulatory and enforcement programs. The provision is intended to allow citizens the same substantive and procedural claim to relief as is already available to the United States. By creating an explicit right of action under RCRA, we are in no way altering the implied right that exists under Superfund.

If the Senator will yield further, I feel that this citizen's suit provision will rededicate our commitment to eliminate the dangers to the public health and environment which hazardous wastes pose. It is my sincere hope that any language compiled for the legislative history of this bill will show our strong belief that private citizens have the right to go to court to secure cleanup of hazardous waste sites.

I thank my good friend for yielding to me for this discussion.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as always, the Senator from California makes his points sincerely and concisely. Let me assure him that I will seek to have the conference report show the importance we attach to this provision.

AMENDMENT NO. 2809 TO THE REAUTHORIZATION OF RCRA

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I understand the committee would prefer that I withhold offering amendment No. 2809 to S. 757. I appreciate the committee's concern.

At the same time, I am sure the committee recognizes that there is a need to encourage innovation in the treatment of hazardous wastes. The committee has led the way in establishing a new national policy that will rely less on land disposal of hazardous wastes. If we are to rely less on landfills, we must have methods of treating this material. The amendment I am offering encourages the development of new treatment technologies.

The House version of the reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act contains a provision that is similar to amendment 2809. There are, however, two significant differences between the House version and this amendment. Those differences are as follows: First, this amendment specifies that research development and demonstration permits are to be effective for 365 operating days. The House version does not specify operating days, and could be interpreted to mean 1 calendar year. Second, this amendment provides that research permits may not be renewed after it has expired. The House version has no such provision.

While these are minor differences, they are important to conservation and industry groups. For this reason, I believe amendment 2809 is superior to the provision in the House bill.

Mr. CHAFEE. I recognize the concerns of the Senator from Wisconsin. He is correct that there are important differences between the House version and his amendment.

I appreciate the Senator's efforts to expedite action on this bill. He has been most helpful in considering withholding his amendment.

Let me assure the Senator that I recognize the importance of his amendment. I agree that we need to encourage innovation in the treatment of hazardous wastes.

If the Senator will agree not to offer his amendment, I will do my best to have the House language on this issue modified to clarify that the permits run for 365 operating days, and that the permits are not renewable.

Mr. KASTEN. I thank the Senator. He is most gracious in his offer. With his assurances that every effort be made to address this issue in conference, I will not offer this amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, many of us in coastal States see the disposal of sewerage sludge as among the most important solid waste issues facing the country. The problem is most critical because many municipalities and authorities continue to dump tons of this waste into the ocean daily with little regard to the effects on our marine environment.

I believe that it is somewhat regrettable that we must even discuss this issue today. The Congress has spoken very clearly by providing in the 1977 ocean dumping amendments that harmful dumping would be ended by December 31, 1981. Along the Delaware River, municipalities took us seriously and developed safe and efficient land based disposal alternatives.

In other areas the practice continues. It continues in an atmosphere of legal uncertainty caused by a Federal district court decision which we believe inaccurately interprets the 1977 amendments.

It has also come to my attention that there is an ongoing debate within the administration over the development of a policy on the use of the oceans for waste disposal. The lack of a defined policy can only mean that decisions are made on a case-by-case basis without consistency.

Mr. President, we in Delaware believe that the ocean disposal of harmful wastes should be ended. We believe that the atmosphere of legal and administrative uncertainty can only be cleared by the Congress once again reviewing this matter and clearly defining a national policy that will insure the preservation of our valuable marine resources.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of and to reiterate the views that have been expressed by my senior colleague from Delaware on ocean dumping and on the pressing need to end the practice. I also agree with his view that it is high time that the Senate and Congress take affirmative steps to end the confusion that EPA and the courts have created concerning the permissability of sludge dumping in the ocean.

Mr. President, as most Delawareans already know, the issue of ocean dumping is not at all partisan in our State. Not only do the senior Senator and I agree on this issue, but also our sole Member of the House, Mr. CARPER, and the Governor, and countless other public officials throughout the State. Our message is simple, very clear, and unyielding, we want stopped any plans and activity to dump harmful sewage sludge off the Delaware coast.

For those unfamiliar with the activity of ocean dumping the issue can be summarized briefly. For some years, the Environmental Protection Agency has continued to allow the practice of ocean dumping of sludge in coastal waters off the east coast. But when Congress passed the Marine, Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act and later amended the law in 1977, it was generally believed that all ocean dumping would cease by the end of 1981. What happened to change that belief was a challenge by the city of New York to plans by the EPA to end dumping. The current EPA not only lost that case, but failed to appeal a decision that many have argued was erroneous.

Mr. President, I do not wish to repeat the statements made by my colleague from Delaware, and it would take too long to detail all the public policy and technical reasons to oppose ocean dumping. Suffice it to say, that we find—all Delawareans find unacceptable, and vehemently oppose EPA's acquiescence to the sludge dumpers over the past 3 years. We will continue to work together to get harmful sludges out of the oceans and to stop the apparent EPA practice of simply looking for the most "out of sight, out of mind" solution to difficult problems.

Mr. President, I would note that for the last two Congresses, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House has acted to consider legislation that would amend the Ocean Dumping Act and address many of our concerns. I look forward to working further with the senior Senator from Delaware and with the chairman of the Environment Committee and the chairman of the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee on hearings and legislation that will follow suit in the Senate.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield I would like to address a question to the distinguished chairman of the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee, the Senator from Rhode Island, and the chairman of the Environmental and Public Works Committee.

I would ask my two colleagues; in light of the situation that exists with regard to ocean waste disposal, is it not timely for the Committee on Environment and Public Works to be considering this issue and is it possible that the committee will be conducting hearings and considering legislation in the near future.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Senators from Delaware have raised some very important questions.

Rhode Island is the ocean State and we in Rhode Island share their concern for the ocean and depend on the same economic and recreational marine resources that our friends in Delaware enjoy.

I assure them that consideration of ocean dumping legislation has the highest priority on the Environmental Pollution Subcommittee's agenda and it is my intention to conduct hearings and report an ocean dumping bill to the Senate for consideration early next year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I should just like to indicate that I concur with my colleagues about the importance of this matter and assure them of my commitment ot the schedule and agenda proposed by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution.

Mr. ROTH. I thank my friends for their consideration and commend them for their exceptional leadership in environmental matters.

AMENDMENT NO. 3416

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator DENTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], for himself and Mr. DENTON, proposes an amendment numbered 3416.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 49, after line 2, add the following: "Any permit under this subsection which is issued for a landfill located within the State of Alabama shall require the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above and between such liners, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act".

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which deals with an exception to the double liner requirement described in section 6 of this bill, on pages 47 and 48.

We have a peculiar situation in Alabama with regard to this issue: My amendment is an effort to see that the exception contained in the subject provision of the bill, known as the Simpson amendment, would not apply to a certain hazardous waste landfill located in Emelle, AL.

In effect, the amendment which I am offering would require the installation of two liners with leachable collection systems between them in the Emelle landfill. The adoption of my amendment would mean that the exception—this is, of other technology and or other methods—would not apply to commercial landfills in Alabama.

I think that in conference we can clarify the language of this amendment such that it would apply only to this particular landfill in Alabama.

I have discussed this amendment with, both the minority and the majority committee staff. In fact, I believe that the language was even written by certain staff members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works in an effort to rectify this particular problem that we have in Alabama.

Senator DENTON joins me as an original cosponsor of this amendment. It is my understanding that he will submit a statement in support thereof in tomorrow's RECORD.

Again, Mr. President, I have discussed this amendment generally with both floor managers and their staffs, and I believe it is acceptable to them. I also believe that it is acceptable to Senator SIMPSON, as well as to the landfill owner in Emelle.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, we have consulted with the distinguished Senator from Alabama, and the amendment he has submitted is acceptable to this side. As he has pointed out, we will straighten out in conference whatever problems exist in this amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Alabama for his diligence in this matter. It is my understanding that this amendment seeks to insure that double liners will be installed at the expansion of the Emelle facility.

It is an existing facility which comes within section 6 of the bill by virtue of its expansion. As presently drafted, the bill requires double liners for expansions of facilities but provides an exception for that requirement upon application to and approval by the Administrator of EPA. It is that exception which the Senator seeks to have rendered inapplicable to this facility, which the State is requiring to install a double liner.

The owner of the facility intends to install double liners for those cells of the landfill which contain PCB's, which is the principal aspect of the problem, and is exploring the possibility of the installation of double liners at any other cells.

The amendment as drafted exempts from the exception provision of the bill any landfill located within the State of Alabama. It is the understanding of all concerned that that language will be refined at the conference, to make clear that whatever description accurately describes the facility at Emelle, this provision applies only to that facility.

Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. Accordingly, Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, this is a correction of an amendment I previously applied to this legislation. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama; but, frankly, I do not feel it is necessary. Apparently, the chap in Alabama who wrote letters to the editors around the country has confused it thoroughly.

The Senator from Alabama has always been most helpful. I have visited with some of the citizens of Alabama, and if this amendment allays their fears, it is acceptable to me. It has never been my intention to prevent the people of Alabama or any other State from imposing whatever regulations they wish upon their facilities.

We have different geological situations in Wyoming and in Alabama and different sites and different levels of toxicity, and I think this is appropriate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3416) was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss for a moment the regulatory program promulgated pursuant to the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act—a program that has been quite controversial.

In 1978, when Congress passed the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act [UMTRCA], the Environmental Protection Agency was directed to promulgate "standards of general application" in order to protect the public health, safety, and the environment from the radiological and nonradiological hazards associated with uranium mill tailings. For nonradiological hazards, EPA's standards were to provide for the protection of human health and the environment consistent with the standards required under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act which are applicable to such hazards.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, in turn, was directed to come up with a detailed regulatory program for its licensees who operated uranium mines, incorporating EPA's standards and prescribing the steps that NRC licensees would be required to take to meet the general environmental standards established by EPA. NRC was also charged with the responsibility for all implementation and enforcement.

In October of last year, EPA promulgated its "standards of general application." The EPA standards resulted in instant controversy. The NRC swiftly objected, arguing that, rather than promulgating a "general environmental standard," EPA had really established detailed prescriptive engineering requirements that intruded on the NRC's jurisdiction. Lawsuits were filed by both the uranium industry and the environmentalists—virtually within minutes of promulgation of EPA's standards—challenging their adequacy. Numerous Members of Congress expressed grave concerns about the approach taken by EPA, questioning EPA's interpretation of its jurisdiction, as well as EPA's decision to apply the highly prescriptive RCRA requirements—which were originally established for low-volume, high-toxicity wastes, to the high-volume, low-toxicity wastes that result from uranium mining. An absurd result.

Of particular concern to me is the dispute that has now developed between EPA and NRC over the jurisdictional responsibilities of each agency. This problem appears to be most acute in—but is by no means limited to—the area of ground water protection, where EPA, pressed to meet a statutory deadline to promulgate its standards, has simply applied the detailed and highly prescriptive regulatory requirements of RCRA. This process gives little recognition of the jurisdictional difficulties that such an approach has created for the NRC, and very little, if any, flexibility to tailor the RCRA requirements—which were initially intended for high-toxicity, low-volume wastes—to the unique situation posed by the high-volume, low-toxicity uranium mining wastes.

Unfortunately, the regulatory program for uranium mill tailings is now at a total impasse as a result of the disagreement that has emerged over the EPA standards, with no clear resolution now in sight. Deadlines established by Congress have come and gone. Some of the States that are responsible for the regulation of the uranium mining industry are wholly confused over what direction to take. And the NRC licensees are left in limbo.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a number of letters from various individuals, groups, and agencies describing the confusion that we now have as a result of the standards promulgated by EPA.

It is absolutely essential that the agencies get this regulatory program back on track and do so promptly. If these problems are not resolved in a timely fashion, Mr. President, it is my intention to ask the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, the Senator from Vermont, to schedule hearings early next session for the purpose of considering whether the authority that has been conferred upon EPA to promulgate various standards for nuclear activities is necessary, in light of the poor performance of EPA in this arena and in light of the broad authority that the NRC already has to regulate these activities.

Finally, before I yield the floor, Mr. President, I should like to discuss just briefly one other important consideration that has led me to conclude that perhaps the time has come for us in the Congress to reexamine the NRC-EPA relationship.

This particular jurisdictional question that is now dividing the NRC and EPA over uranium mill tailings regulation is not a new question. In fact, the entire question of where the jurisdiction of the EPA stops and the jurisdiction of the NRC begins has been the subject of extensive discussion over the years, and there is now a considerable body of precedent, developed since 1970, to guide these two agencies in the exercise of their respective responsibilities.

Because of that substantial body of precedent, Mr. President, I must say that I am truly frustrated, chagrined, and awfully disappointed that we find these two agencies at increasing odds over their respective jurisdiction over nuclear matters—an issue that I thought we had settled a long time ago and on which the Congress has already provided clear and consistent guidance to each of these two agencies.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON] correctly brings a serious situation to the attention of the Senate.

I fully agree that we should not have two important Federal agencies arguing with each other over the extent of their jurisdictions. This situation is unsatisfactory and must be resolved.

I will be pleased to work with Senator SIMPSON to bring about a reasonable and precise solution to a problem that should never have developed and certainly cannot be allowed to continue.

The Senator has asked for hearings on this subject, and I will join in the arrangement of this inquiry. I also believe that we, and hopefully others, should contact EPA and NRC to urge and help facilitate an end to the difference of opinion that exists.

Again, I commend the Senator from Wyoming for his interest and his work on this problem.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 3417

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR], for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. MITCHELL, proposes an amendment numbered 3417.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 93, after line 20, add the following new section:

SEC. 30. Study of the problems associated with disposal of hazardous wastes generated by educational institutions.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, the States, and appropriate educational associations, conduct a comprehensive study of the problems associated with the accumulation, storage and disposal of hazardous wastes from educational institutions. The study shall include an investigation of the feasibility and availability of environmentally sound methods for the treatment, storage or disposal of hazardous waste from such institutions, taking into account the types and quantities of such waste which are generated by these institutions, and the non-profit nature of these institutions.

(b) Not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Congress containing the findings of the study carried out under subsection (a).

(c) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "hazardous waste" means hazardous waste which is listed or identified under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act;

(2) the term "educational institution" includes, but shall not be limited to,

(A) secondary schools as defined in Section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(B) institutions of higher education as defined in Section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. MITCHELL, I send an amendment to the desk.

It requires the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to conduct a study of the problems associated with the disposal of hazardous waste which is generated by educational institutions.

Mr. President, I know of no problem on either the majority or the minority side with this amendment. I urge adoption of this amendment which addresses the concerns expressed by several educational associations, including the National Education Association and the National PTA. Additionally, I am advised that the distinguished chairman of the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation, and Tourism, Mr. FLORIO, has expressed his desire to address this issue in the upcoming conference on these amendments to the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

Mr. President, I trust this study will help Congress and EPA ensure that educational agencies which generate hazardous wastes—often in very small amounts—will be regulated in an appropriate manner. I do not believe that we wish to impose an unwarranted degree of burden on these nonprofit institutions.

Mr. President, before the vote I ask unanimous consent to add the names of Senator DURENBERGER and Senator MITCHELL, who are not listed on my amendment, as cosponsors of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this has been submitted to us and it seems like an excellent one on this side. We support it.

We commend the distinguished Senator from South Dakota for his excellence in pursuing this matter.

Mr. ABDNOR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this amendment is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment (No. 3417) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REAUTHORIZATION OF THE RESOURCE CONSERVATION AND RECOVERY ACT (RCRA)

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the generation of hazardous waste is not new—yet it has only been in the last few decades, with the use of new industrial processes and the development of synthetic materials, that we have discovered how widespread the harm to the public and the environment could be. Only very recently have we discovered the problem to be as large as it is.

New studies released this year by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) quadruple earlier estimates of the amount of hazardous waste produced annually. The EPA now believes that 150 million metric tons or 40 billion gallons of hazardous waste are generated each year. This means that, every year, close to 1 ton of hazardous waste is added to the environment for every person in the Nation.

People in my own State of Illinois have particular reason to take the hazardous waste problem seriously. Because of our large industrial base, we, along with five other Midwestern States, produce more hazardous waste than any other region in the country. A day does not pass by that I do not hear from a constituent in Illinois concerned about a hazardous waste site in the State.

In 1976, I supported the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the first major piece of legislation dealing with hazardous waste disposal. The bill established a cradle-to-grave system for tracking hazardous waste, from generation to final disposal. New technical information, and EPA's experience to date in implementing the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, make it clear that the law should be strengthened. For instance, we are just now coming to understand the problems associated with disposing of certain hazardous wastes in landfills.

That is why I am supporting the passage of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983 (S. 757). The bill reported by the Committee on Environment and Public Works is not perfect, but it goes far in addressing many weaknesses of existing law. It expands the number of generators covered by Federal law. It minimizes the landfilling of liquid hazardous wastes and establishes land disposal as the least favored method for managing hazardous waste. It provides a method for listing such new types of hazardous waste as dioxin and makes the delisting procedure more stringent. It addresses the problem of the burning and blending of fuels.

I am particularly pleased that the bill increases the penalties for criminal violations of hazardous waste laws. At a hearing of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, of which I am a member, it became clear that, while we require every company and individual to comply with the rules and regulations established by the EPA, this does not always occur. It touches a raw nerve to hear about the crimes the witnesses described—knowingly mixing toxic substances with other sewage and selling the result as fertilizer, which then contaminates our farmland and our food—or mixing oil with flammable toxic substances and reselling it to unsuspecting customers. Some of the culprits may have existing criminal records; others may just be greedy businessmen in search of an easy profit. They are all threats to our society.

Proper disposal of hazardous waste is sometimes costly. If penalties are small and enforcement inadequate—which may now be the case—some companies may resort to midnight dumping rather than proper hazardous waste treatment. Under such circumstances, crime may pay. Now is the time to remedy this situation.

Currently, these crimes are misdemeanors. This does not begin to match the penalty to the crime. The monetary cost to society of cleaning up improperly disposed of waste can be up to 100 times the cost of disposing of it properly in the first place. The cost in human suffering can barely be imagined. The bill before us today toughens Federal enforcement ability and raises the maximum penalty for serious violations of the hazardous waste laws from a maximum fine of only $25,000 per day of violation and 1 year imprisonment to $250,000 per day of violation and imprisonment for as long as 15 years. By enacting this law, we will ensure that crime does not pay.

With renewed emphasis on criminal enforcement in the bill, I expect that the Environmental Protection Agency will devote sufficient resources to criminal investigation and enforcement. Currently, for instance, EPA has only four field criminal investigators located in Chicago for the 10-State region which generates the most hazardous waste in the Nation. And these investigators are responsible for investigating criminal violations of all Federal environmental laws, not just hazardous waste. I recently wrote to Administrator Ruckelshaus urging him to increase resources for this effort. In many respects, highly visible criminal prosecutions can provide a more effective deterrent to future illegal hazardous waste disposal than numerous reprimands or penalties for minor violations of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

There are a number of hazardous waste issues, beyond the scope of the legislation before us, which still must be addressed. While today's legislation deals with the critical areas of generation and disposal of hazardous waste, it does not deal with the cleanup of existing waste sites. This is why the Superfund was established in 1980, as a fund available for cleanup of the worst sites across the country. I welcome the President's support for a 56-percent increase in the amount of Superfund dollars available for cleanup of hazardous waste sites next year. Yet the number of sites awaiting cleanup far exceeds the currently available resources.

The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, the bill establishing the Superfund, must be reauthorized with a fee system providing incentives to minimize waste generation, and adequate to meet the continuing needs across the country.

Today's reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, combined with future action on Superfund legislation, will go a long way toward remedying the problems associated with hazardous waste in Illinois, and across the Nation.

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am pleased to vote for the passage of S. 757. These amendments contain several needed reforms in the existing hazardous waste management system. For the first time, EPA will have the authority to regulate small generators of hazardous waste. According to congressional testimony, as much as 15 million metric tons of hazardous waste from small generators is not subject to regulation.

S. 757 will also discourage land disposal and will impose tighter requirements on wastes that are land disposed. Currently, nearly 80 percent of the hazardous wastes being generated is disposed of in, or on, the land. RCRA's promise to provide environmental and health protection from the dangers of hazardous waste has not been fulfilled. It is imperative that we enact S. 757 and start to aggressively enforce a cradle to grave management system for hazardous waste.

In addition, S. 757 sets up deadlines for completion of regulatory decisions by EPA. Further delay in issuing regulations is unconscionable in view of the environmental and health threat posed by unsafe disposal.

It is extremely shortsighted to think that hazardous wastes we fail to control now can be taken care of later. The tragedies of Love Canal and Times Beach are only the beginning of the consequences of past failure to monitor and control toxic substances. Unfortunately, we do not yet know the dimensions of the problems created by previously uncontrolled wastes. Moreover, by failing to act now, we will be subjecting future generations to possibly tragic risks. We took the first step toward controlling hazardous waste by enacting RCRA in 1976; now we must finish the task by closing loopholes and strengthening the existing regulations.●

SECTION 8 OF S. 757 REGARDING INFECTIOUS WASTE

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, in response to S. 346, which I introduced and testified on before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, section 8 of S. 757 directs the Administrator to identify within 6 months of enactment those wastes for which a decision whether to list as a hazardous waste will be made within time periods of 2 and 5 years. The Agency is also to promulgate regulations identifying additional characteristics of hazardous waste within 2 years of enactment. The committee report states: "Where technical questions cannot yet be definitively answered, EPA should not delay but should make reasonable assumptions based on the need to protect human health and the environment."

A particular concern I have is over EPA's inactivity in establishing regulations and final guidelines for infectious waste management. Infectious waste is a category of waste which includes isolation wastes, cultures and stocks of disease-causing agents, blood and blood products, pathological wastes, residues of and materials contaminated with chemotherapy drugs, wastes from surgery and autopsy, contaminated laboratory wastes, needless and other sharp objects, dialysis unit wastes, animal carcasses and body parts, animal bedding and other wastes from animal rooms, discarded biological matter, contaminated food products, and contaminated equipment.

Infectious waste can be treated by incineration. Technology is available, as is capacity. Treatment is not being utilized because it is more expensive than improper disposal, and because it is not required. Ineffective and improper management of infectious waste represents a growing problem for which Federal regulation is necessary to protect human health and the environment.

At this time there is no final Federal definition of infectious waste. EPA has not established an infectious waste characteristic or listed infectious wastes. Consequently, it is not regulated as a hazardous waste. More than 7 years after RCRA was enacted, there are no Federal management requirements, no regulations for proper storage, transportation, treatment, and disposal of infectious wastes. Some States have adopted regulations requiring treatment of all infectious waste. But like other hazardous wastes, the health and environmental consequences of improper management of infectious waste knows no State boundaries. A national program is necessary. Otherwise, we may be facing a new round of Superfund sites, only this time with infectious waste.

EPA apparently does not consider infectious waste a priority issue so that no further regulatory action is anticipated in the near future. This is unacceptable.

Infectious wastes therefore clearly are intended to be regulated in accordance with the schedule under section 8 of S. 757. More than enough time has elapsed to enable EPA to have made the basic decisions for minimum regulation of infectious waste. One of the purposes of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is to prevent releases of hazardous wastes, including infectious waste. EPA should therefore give infectious waste a much higher priority than it has received, placing it on the fastest regulatory track, including listing well within the 2-year regulatory period. Toward this end, EPA should provide the necessary technical guidance to affected institutions and States by publishing long-delayed final regulations.●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I support S. 757, a bill to reauthorize and amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA]. RCRA—the Nation's hazardous waste management law—was enacted in 1976 as an amendment to the Solid Waste Disposal Act of 1965. The statute directs the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to regulate the transportation, storage, treatment, and disposal of hazardous waste.

The EPA estimates that some 264 million metric tons of RCRA-defined hazardous waste are generated in this country each year—this is over 1 metric ton per person. Hazardous waste is defined as garbage, refuse or other discarded material that can cause mortality or serious illness, or pose a substantial hazard to human health and the environment when improperly managed. There are 8,000 hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities; 13,000 transporters; and 54,000 waste generators that fall under the RCRA regulatory scheme.

As such, hazardous waste management has proven to be a very large task. Unfortunately, the implementation of RCRA has lagged. RCRA regulations that were to be completed in 1978 were instead not issued until 1980 and 1981, and in one case not until 1982.

RCRA requires that an operating permit be issued for each hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facility. Yet only a handful of operating permits have been issued, and the remainder of the 8,000 treatment, storage, and disposal facilities are operating under interim status guidelines. These guidelines are not as stringent as the standards for fully permitted facilities. At the current rate, EPA estimates that it will take 10 years to complete the permit process for all interim status facilities.

The bill before us amends and strengthens RCRA in a number of significant ways. The bill includes new requirements for small quantity hazardous waste generators, requires tighter restrictions on the land disposal of hazardous waste, ends the unregulated burning of hazardous waste blended with fuel oil, accelerates the process for reviewing and listing substances as hazardous wastes, establishes minimum technology standards for hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities, stiffens criminal penalties for violators of RCRA regulations, and establishes deadlines for EPA to complete various regulatory tasks. Taken together these provisions should improve the implementation of RCRA and extend regulatory coverage in ways that will provide additional protection for human health and the environment.

I am pleased particularly that this bill includes a provision that I sponsored in the Environment and Public Works Committee to address the problem of uncontrolled burning of hazardous wastes blended with fuels. The EPA does not currently regulate hazardous wastes that are burned for the primary purpose of "recovering usable energy." Recent estimates are that some 4 million tons of hazardous waste are being burned in boilers and furnaces not subject to EPA regulation. In my State of New York, hazardous wastes have been blended surreptitiously with fuel oil and burned unwittingly in apartment boilers in

New York City. This unregulated burning of hazardous waste exposes the surrounding population to potentially hazardous air pollutants.

Section 9 of this bill directs the EPA to develop and implement a regulatory program that establishes requirements, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, for the burning and blending of hazardous waste for energy recovery. Under the new provision, facilities that blend hazardous waste with fuel, or those persons who distribute or market fuel blended with hazardous waste must notify EPA of those activities within 1 year. Within 2 years, EPA must set standards governing hazardous-waste-derived fuel production, distribution, marketing, and burning.

I am pleased also to have cosponsored two floor amendments to this bill that I believe will help close existing loopholes in the RCRA law. These amendments were developed to address two problems identified by the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] in an April 6, 1984, staff memorandum on ground water protection standards for hazardous waste land disposal facilities.

The first amendment requires the EPA to include financial responsibility assurances for corrective action in the performance standards that the Agency sets for the owners and operators of hazardous waste disposal facilities. Current EPA regulations require owners and operators to provide financial responsibility assurances for the costs of closure and post-closure maintenance of hazardous waste disposal facilities. However, financial responsibility assurances are not now required for corrective action that might have to be taken to clean up any contamination caused by such facilities. In instances where corrective action is necessary, cleanup costs could be substantial, especially if ground water has been contaminated. Some companies, faced with large corrective action costs, may choose, or be forced into, bankruptcy. In such cases, it is likely that cleanup would have to be accomplished using Superfund moneys. The financial responsibility amendment that I have cosponsored is designed to avoid this eventuality by making sure that those who own and operate disposal sites have adequate resources to clean up any contamination that might occur.

The second amendment provides the EPA with authority to issue an administrative order, or to commence a civil action in the U.S. district court to require corrective action at interim status hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facilities where there is or has been a release of hazardous waste. The EPA currently has authority to require such corrective action at permitted hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities. However, as of February 1984, only 115 facilities had full RCRA permits. The remaining facilities, close to 8,000, were operating under interim status. It will take an estimated 10 years to make permit determinations on the remaining interim status sites. The EPA estimates that between 50 percent and 60 percent of the interim status land disposal facilities are leaking and will require corrective action. Providing the EPA with the authority to use administrative orders to require corrective action at interim status facilities, is, therefore, most important. The Agency should have the same mechanism for protecting human health and the environment at interim status facilities as is now available for permitted facilities.

Mr. President, the provisions I have mentioned, along with others in the bill, provide for a strengthened hazardous waste management law. As such, I urge the adoption of S. 757.●

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the consideration of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act today marks the end of a long and laborious process that began several years ago in the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. I am pleased the bill that is before us today is not perfection. It does not represent all of the answers to the hazardous waste problems that plague some areas of the country. The bill does represent a significant step forward in the regulation of hazardous waste disposal methods and waste handling. During the course of debate on RCRA the bill has grown in length and has in some places we have written regulations into law and I am concerned about that trend. However, the EPW committee has also made changes in the bill that will make it more practical in "the real world." We must do all that is possible to minimize hazardous waste generation and we must continue to carefully protect the public health and the environment—and that is the key to RCRA—the standard of protecting the public health and environment—we find that phrase through out the bill and that is then what this action is all about.

I must say I often tire of hearing the press and some public interest groups harangue about the lack of concern of the environment by Republicans. All types and forms of Republicans care about the environment and work diligently to protect it. New England Republicans have their point of view, southern Republicans have their idea of protecting the environment and western Republicans hold protection of the environment as a very high objective. We may not always agree how this protection is to be accomplished—but one thing is most certain—we are all sensitive to the needs of the public and the bountiful natural resources that all of us enjoy. So I find it pleasing that we are considering this bill today and I am confident that we can pass this bill and that with a bipartisan effort we can see the law enacted this year. And assuredly that can only be a positive development for the American people.

Senator CHAFEE and Senator STAFFORD have worked long, tough and hard on this legislation and have tried to work with all members of the Environment and Public Works Committee in order to formulate a bill that does protect the environment—but in a practical and reasonable manner. This bill has undergone considerable refinement during subcommittee and full committee meetings and even beyond that. We have continued to seek ways to make RCRA a more workable piece of legislation.

The RCRA bill has been improved in many areas. The small quantity generator provisions have been altered to take into account conditions that exist in many States—like my own—that are rural or semirural. We have allowed additional time for on-site storage of wastes for those who would experience hardships by complying with regulations that were meant for urban environments.

We have directed the EPA Administrator to initiate a small quantity generator study to determine just how wide ranging the small generator problem is in different parts of the country.

The RCRA bill contains comprehensive land disposal provisions that should revolutionize practices of disposing of hazardous wastes in land fills. We have provided for alternate land disposal technologies only where it can be demonstrated that such alternate technologies will be at least as effective as double liners and yet continue to protect human health and the environment. In addition, the bill would direct the Administrator of EPA to promulgate regulations concerning the disposal of dioxin containing wastes.

I feel the Environment and Public Works Committee has made other positive changes in this legislation. The committee altered the provision for the award of attorney's fees in order that only "prevailing or substantially prevailing" parties may collect fees. This is a commonsense change that should be made in every environmental statute.

The committee also worked out compromise language on the citizen suit provision. So—there are many areas in this bill that have been amended to reflect reason and logic—and that is so important for Congress to recognize how things work out there in the real world—down in the trenches where local public officials have to deal with hazardous waste on a daily basis. The same cannot be said for the House RCRA bill.

The important thing to consider is that any changes to the bill that would make it conform more to real on-the-ground conditions were made based upon the central theme and standard set forth in the bill—the singular standard of protecting human health and the environment. This standard has always been instilled in sight and mind and it provides the backbone of this bill. EPA and Congress cannot retain the public trust and confidence unless the public is adequately protected—and we have set out to make certain that protection is provided.

One last item I would wish to discuss involves a committee amendment that Senator CHAFEE and others worked with me to formulate. This amendment is designed to allow the EPA Administrator to treat high volume, low toxicity mining waste in a different manner than low volume, high toxicity industrial wastes. This amendment represents another successful attempt to bring good sense to this bill while continuing to afford full protection of the enviroment. I would thank Senators CHAFEE and RANDOLPH and other Senators that have worked so hard on this issue. It has been quite an interesting process for me to grind this bill out and I think we have all learned a great deal by having participated in it. All of us have tried to bring a thoughtful approach to this arena and overall objectiveness has been maintained. I do look forward to seeing this bill enacted and know that the able and personable Bill Ruckelshaus and his fine crew will set out on a new and comprehensive path that will prevent the occurrence of future Superfund sites. That old trite expression—"an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" fits right here and as I assure you RCRA is much more than an ounce.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move third reading of S. 757 as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. ABDNOR]. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Environment and Public Works be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 2867.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 2867.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2867) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1984 through 1986, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the text of S. 757, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask for third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage of H.R. 2867, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], the Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] would each vote "yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 93, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 196 Leg.]

So the bill (H.R. 2867), as amended, was passed, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H.R. 2867) entitled "An Act to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1984 through 1986, and for other purposes", do pass with the following amendments: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 2. Section 2007(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "and" immediately following "1981," and by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof ", $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and $80,000,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

SEC. 3. Section 3011(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "and" immediately following "1981," and by inserting immediately following "1982" the following: ", $55,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, and $60,000,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989".

SMALL QUANTITY GENERATOR REGULATION AND STUDY

SEC. 4. Section 3002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) STANDARDS.—" after "SEC. 3002." and by adding the following new subsection:

"(b) HAZARDOUS WASTE FROM SMALL QUANTITY GENERATORS.—(1) Beginning two hundred and seventy days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, any hazardous waste listed or identified under section 3001 which is part of a total quantity generated by a generator generating greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms during one calendar month and which is shipped off the premises on which such waste is generated shall be accompanied by a copy of the Environmental Protection Agency uniform hazardous waste manifest form signed by the generator. This form shall contain the following information:

"(A) the name and address of the generator of the waste;

"(B) the United States Department of Transportation description of the waste, including the proper shipping name, hazard class, and identification number (UN/NA), if applicable;

"(C) the number and type of containers;

"(D) the quantity of waste being transported; and

"(E) the name and address of the facility designated to receive the waste.

If subparagraph (B) is not applicable, in lieu of the description referred to in such subparagraph (B), the form shall contain the Environmental Protection Agency identification number, or a generic description of the waste, or a description of the waste by hazardous waste characteristic. Additional requirements related to the manifest promulgated under this Act shall apply only if determined necessary by the Administrator to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator is authorized to apply the requirements of this paragraph to hazardous waste which is part of a total quantity generated by a generator generating less than one hundred kilograms during one calendar month.

"(2) Until the effective date of regulations promulgated under paragaph (6), or as specified in paragraph (6)(C), any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, which is not treated, stored, or disposed of at a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005, shall be disposed of only in a facility which is permitted, licensed, or registered by a State to manage municipal or industrial solid waste.

"(3) The provisions of paragraph (2) shall take effect on the date two hundred and seventy days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984.

"(4) Requirements under section 3004 for storage of hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms shall provide for onsite storage in tanks and containers of such hazardous waste for up to one hundred and eighty days without a permit, unless the generator must ship or haul such waste over two hundred miles in which case such requirements shall provide for onsite storage for up to two hundred and seventy days of up to six thousand kilograms of such hazardous waste.

"(5) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect, modify, or render invalid any requirements applicable to any acutely hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by any generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, in regulations promulgated prior to January 1, 1983. Any additional acutely hazardous waste listed under section 3001 after January 1, 1983, shall be subject to all regulations applicable to acutely hazardous wastes.

"(6)(A) The Administrator in cooperation with the States shall conduct a study of hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 of this Act which is generated by individual generators in total quantities for each generator during any calendar month of less than one thousand kilograms. The Administrator may require from such generators information as may be necessary to conduct the study. Such study shall include a characterization of the number and type of such generators, the quantity and characteristics of hazardous waste generated by such generators, State requirements applicable to such generators, the individuals and industry waste management practices of such generators, the potential costs of modifying those practices and the impact of such modifications on national treatment and disposal facility capacity, and the threat to the protection of human health and the environment and the employees of transporters or others involved in solid waste management posed by such hazardous wastes or such management practices. Such study shall be submitted to the Congress not later than March 31, 1985.

"(B) Based upon the study required by subparagraph (A) and other information available to the Administrator and after consultation with the Administrator shall promulgate not later than March 31, 1986, additional regulations establishing such requirements under this section and sections 3003, 3004, and 3005 of this Act for hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 which is generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such requirements may supplement the requirements of paragraphs (1) through (5) of this subsection and may distinguish among classes and categories of generators or waste, and may vary from the requirements applicable to hazardous waste generated in quantities greater than one thousand kilograms during any calendar month, to the extent the Administrator determines such variation is necessary by reason of the smaller size and the technical and managerial capability of such generators, and is adequate to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator shall consider State requirements applicable to generators of hazardous waste which generate such wastes in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms per month in promulgating such regulations and shall explain differences between State requirements and regulations promulgated under this subparagraph. Except as provided in paragraph (4), regulations promulgated under this paragraph shall provide that treatment, storage, or disposal of a hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity less than one thousand kilograms occur only at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005. The Administrator may establish in such regulations a total quantity of wastes generated by a generator during any calendar month, not to exceed one hundred kilograms, for which disposal may occur in compliance with paragraph (2) rather than the preceding sentence, if the Administrator determines that such compliance will be adequate to protect human health and the environment. Such quantity may vary for different wastes or classes of wastes.

"(C) In the case no regulations in accordance with subparagraph (B) of this paragraph have been promulgated prior to March 31, 1986, after such date—

"(i) all treatment, storage, or disposal of any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 generated by a generator during any calendar month in a total quantity greater than one hundred kilograms but less than one thousand kilograms shall occur only at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility with a permit under section 3005;

"(ii) generators of such waste shall file manifest exception reports as required of generators producing quantities greater than one thousand kilograms per month except that such reports shall be filed by January 31, for any waste shipment occurring in the last half of the preceding calendar year, and by July 31, for any waste shipment occurring in the first half of the calendar year; and

"(iii) generators of such waste shall retain for three years a copy of the manifest signed by the designated facility that has received the waste.

"(D) The Administrator shall undertake activities to inform and educate waste generators of their responsibilities under this section during the period after enactment to help assure compliance.".

LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) STANDARDS.—" after "SEC. 3004." and by adding the following new subsections:

"(b) LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS.—(1) The Congress finds that certain classes of land disposal facilities are not capable of assuring long-term containment of certain hazardous wastes, and that to avoid substantial risk to human health and the environment, reliance on land disposal should be minimized and land disposal, particularly landfill and surface impoundment, should be the least favored method for managing hazardous wastes. Therefore, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for hearings and after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, promulgate regulations prohibiting the land disposal of hazardous wastes, except for methods of land disposal of one or more such wastes which the Administrator determines will be protective of human health and the environment. If the Administrator determines that a method of land disposal of a hazardous waste will be protective of human health and the environment, he shall promptly publish in the Federal Register notice of such determination together with an explanation of the basis for such determination. The Administrator shall take into account the persistence, toxicity, mobility, and propensity to bioaccumulate of such hazardous waste, and the potential effect of such waste on the integrity of containment mechanisms.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection (other than paragraph (7)), if a specified waste contains significant concentrations of one or more hazardous constituents that is highly toxic, highly mobile, or has a strong propensity to bioaccumulate, a method of land disposal may not be determined to be protective of human health and the environment for such specified hazardous waste, unless upon application by an interested person it has been demonstrated to the Administrator, to a reasonable degree of certainty, that there will be no migration of such constituents from the disposal unit or injection zone for as long as the wastes remain hazardous.

"(3) A prohibition in regulations under this subsection shall be effective immediately upon promulgation, unless the Administrator establishes another effective date with respect to a specific hazardous waste on the basis of the earliest date on which adequate alternative treatment, recovery, or disposal capacity which protects human health and the environment will be available, which shall in no event be later than two years after the date of promulgation. The Administrator, after notice and opportunity for comment and after consultation with appropriate State agencies in all affected States, may grant an extension of such effective date on a case-by-case basis for up to one year, renewable for no more than one additional year, where the applicant demonstrates that there is a binding contractual commitment to construct or otherwise provide such alternative capacity but due to circumstances beyond the control of such applicant such alternative capacity cannot reasonably be made available by such effective date.

"(4) Not later than twenty-four months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for dioxin-containing hazardous wastes (Proposed EPA Hazardous Waste Nos. F020, F021, F022, and F023) and those hazardous wastes numbered F001, F002, F003, F004, and F005 in regulations promulgated by the Administrator under section 3001 (40 C.F.R. 261.31), as those regulations are in effect on July 1, 1983;

"(5) Not later than thirty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for the following hazardous wastes:

"(A) Liquid hazardous wastes, including free liquids associated with any solid or sludge, containing free cyanides at concentrations greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/l.

"(B) Liquid hazardous wastes, including free liquids associated with any solid or sludge, containing the following metals (or elements) or compounds of these metals (or elements) at concentrations greater than or equal to those specified below:

"(i) arsenic and/or compounds (as As) 500 mg/l;

"(ii) cadmium and/or compounds (as Cd) 100 mg/l;

"(iii) chromium (VI and/or compounds (as Cr VI)) 500 mg/l;

"(iv) lead and/or compounds (as Pb) 500 mg/l;

"(v) mercury and/or compounds (as Hg) 20 mg/l;

"(vi) nickel and/or compounds (as Ni) 134 mg/l;

"(vii) selenium and/or compounds (as Se) 100 mg/l; and

"(viii) thallium and/or compounds (as Th) 130 mg/l.

"(C) Liquid hazardous waste having a pH less than or equal to two (2.0).

"(D) Liquid hazardous wastes containing polychlorinated biphenyls at concentrations greater than or equal to 50 ppm.

"(E) Hazardous wastes containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/kg.

When necessary to protect human health and the environment, the Administrator shall substitute more stringent concentration levels than the levels specified in subparagraphs (A) through (E).

"(6)(A) Not later than twenty-four months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 the Administrator shall publish a schedule for deciding whether or not to prohibit in accordance with paragraph (1) the land disposal of each hazardous waste listed under section 3001. Such schedule shall require that the Administrator must make such decisions for at least one-third of all such listed wastes by the date forty-eight months after the date of such enactment, for at least two-thirds of all such listed wastes by the date sixty months after the date of such enactment, and for all such listed wastes by the date seventy-two months after the date of such enactment. The Administrator shall base the schedule on a ranking of such listed wastes considering their intrinsic hazard and their volume such that decisions whether or not to prohibit the land disposal of high volume hazardous wastes with high intrinsic hazard shall, to the maximum extent possible, be made by the date forty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and decisions regarding low volume hazardous wastes with lower intrinsic hazard shall be made by the date seventy-two months after the date of such enactment.

"(B) Not later than the date specified in subparagraph (A) for each waste on the schedule published under such subparagraph, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for each such waste.

"(C) Not later than fifty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for each hazardous waste identified on the basis of any toxicity characteristics.

"(D) Not later than thirty-two months after the listing of a hazardous waste listed after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations in accordance with paragraph (1) for such waste.

"(7) Simultaneously with the promulgation of regulations under paragraph (1) prohibiting one or more methods of land disposal of a particular hazardous waste, and as appropriate thereafter, the Administrator shall, after notice and an opportunity for hearings and after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, promulgate regulations specifying those levels or methods of treatment, if any, which substantially diminish the toxicity of the waste or substantially reduce the likelihood of migration of hazardous constituents from the waste so that short-term and long-term threats to human health and the environment are minimized. If such hazardous waste has been treated to the level or by a method specified in regulations promulgated under this paragraph, such waste or residue thereof shall not be subject to any prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection and may be disposed of in a land disposal facility which meets the requirements of this subtitle. Any regulation promulgated under this paragraph for a particular hazardous waste shall become effective on the same date as any applicable prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(8)(A) Any hazardous waste prohibited under this subsection from disposal in a surface impoundment may be treated or stored in a surface impoundment only if that impoundment is equipped with at least one liner.

"(B) For the purposes of this subsection, 'disposal' shall include the placement of hazardous waste in a surface impoundment or a waste pile for a period of more than six months, regardless of whether it is intended that the hazardous waste will be removed before closure of the facility.

"(9) Except as provided in paragraph (10), if the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under paragraph (1) with respect to a waste referred to in paragraph (4) or in paragraph (5) by the deadline specified in such paragraph, effective six months after such deadline, and until the Administrator promulgates regulations under paragraph (1), such waste may be disposed of in a landfill or a surface impoundment only if such facility is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) of this Act. This paragraph and paragraph (10) shall not apply to contaminated soil and debris from the cleanup or removal of any release of a hazardous substance.

"(10) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under paragraph (1) with respect to nonliquid hazardous wastes containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/kg by the date thirty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, effective twenty-four months after such date, and until the Administrator promulgates such regulations under paragraph (1), such wastes from the refurbishment of textiles and apparel containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration less than 28,000 mg/kg may be disposed of in a landfill or surface impoundment only if such facility is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) of this Act. All other such wastes shall be subject to the provisions of paragraph (9).

"(c) LIQUIDS IN LANDFILLS.—Not later than fifteen months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate final regulations which minimize the disposal of liquid containerized hazardous waste in landfills, and whcih prohibit the disposal of bulk or noncontainerized liquid hazardous wastes in land fills. Such regulations shall also prohibit the disposal in landfills of liquids that have been absorbed in materials that biodegrade or that release liquids when compressed as might occur during routine landfill operation. Prior to the promulgation of such final regulations, the requirements in regulations under this section respecting the disposal in landfills of liquid hazardous waste and free liquids contained in hazardous waste in effect as of October 1, 1982, shall remain in effect.

"(d) BAN ON DUST SUPPRESSION.—The use of waste or used oil or other material, which is contaminated or mixed with dioxin or any other hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 (other than a waste identified solely on the basis of ignitability), for dust suppression or road treatment is prohibited.

"(e) BAN ON CERTAIN WELLS.—Effective one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, no hazardous waste may be disposed of by underground injection into or above any formation which contains, within one-half mile of the well used for such underground injection, an underground source of drinking water. This subsection shall not apply to the injection of contaminated ground water into the aquifer from which it was withdrawn, if such injection is a response action taken under section 104 or 106 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or part of corrective action required under this title intended to clean up such contamination and such contaminated ground water is treated to substantially reduce hazardous constituents prior to such injection.".

(b) Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following: "The owner or operator of a waste pile qualifying for the authorization to operate under this subsection shall be subject to the same requirements for liners and leachate collection systems or equivalent protection provided in regulations promulgated by the Administrator under section 3004 before October 1, 1982, or revised under section 3004(f), for new facilities receiving individual permits under subsection (c) of this section, with respect to each new unit, replacement of an existing unit, or lateral expansion of an existing unit that is within the waste management area identified in the permit application submitted under this section, and with respect to waste received beginning six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984. The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment qualifying for the authorization to operate under this subsection shall be subject to the requirements of section 3004(f), with respect to each new unit, replacement of an existing unit, or lateral expansion of an existing unit that is within the waste management area identified in the permit application submitted under this section, and with respect to waste received beginning six months after such date of enactment. The owner or operator of each such unit shall notify the Administrator (or the State, if appropriate) at least sixty days prior to receiving waste. The Administrator (or the State) shall require the filing of a completed permit application within six months of receipt of such notice, for each facility submitting such notice. In the case of any unit in which the liner and leachate collection system has been installed pursuant to the requirements of this subsection and in good faith compliance with the Administrator's regulations and guidance documents governing liners and leachate collection systems, no liner or leachate collection system which is different from that which was so installed pursuant to this subsection shall be required for such unit by the Administrator when issuing the first permit under this section to such facility: Provided, That the Administrator shall not be precluded from requiring installation of a new liner when the Administrator has reason to believe that any liner installed pursuant to the requirements of this subsection is taking. The Administrator may, under section 3004, amend the requirements for liners and leachate collection systems required under this subsection as may be necessary to provide additional protection for human health and the environment.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(g) The standards concerning ground water monitoring, unsaturated zone monitoring, and corrective action, which are applicable under section 3004 to new landfills, surface impoundments, land treatment units, and waste-pile units required to be permitted under subsection (c) shall also apply to any landfill, surface impoundment, land treatment unit, or waste-pile unit qualifying for the authorization to operate under subsection (e) which receives hazardous waste after July 26, 1983.".

MINIMUM TECHNOLOGICAL REQUIREMENTS AND PERMIT LIFE

SEC. 6. (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following additional new subsection:

"(f) MINIMUM TECHNOLOGICAL REQUIREMENTS.—The regulations under subsection (a) of this section shall be revised from time to time to take into account improvements in the technology of control and measurement. At a minimum, such regulations shall require, and a permit issued after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 by the Administrator or a State shall require—

"(1) for each new landfill or surface impoundment, each new landfill or surface impoundment unit at an existing facility, each replacement of an existing landfill or surface impoundment unit, and each lateral expansion of an existing landfill or surface impoundment unit, for which a completed application for a permit under section 3005(c) is received after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Amendments of 1984, with respect to all waste received after the issuance of such permit, the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above (in the case of a landfill) and between such liners (unless the owner or operator demonstrates to the Administrator, and the Administrator finds for such landfill or surface impoundment, that alternative design and operating practices, together with location characteristics, will prevent the migration of any hazardous constituents into the ground water or surface water at least as effectively as such liners and leachate collection systems), together with ground water monitoring; and

"(2) for each incinerator which receives a permit under section 3005(c) after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the attainment of the minimum destruction and removal efficiency required by regulations in effect on June 24, 1982.

In addition, such regulations shall specify criteria for the acceptable location of new and existing treatment, storage, or disposal facilities as necessary to protect human health and the environment. The Administrator shall promulgate regulations or issue guidance documents implementing the requirements of paragraph (1) within two years after such date of enactment. Until the effective date of such regulations or guidance documents, the requirements for the installation of two or more liners may be satisfied by the installation of a top liner designed, operated, and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into such liner during the period such facility remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period), and a lower liner designed, operated and constructed to prevent the migration of any constituent through such liner during such period. For the purpose of the preceding sentence, a lower liner shall be deemed to satisfy such requirement if it is constructed of at least a three-foot thick layer of recompacted clay or other natural material with a permeability of no more than 1×10^{-7} centimeter per second. Any permit under this subsection which is issued for a landbill located within the State of Alabama shall require the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above and between such liners, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act.".

(b) Section 3005(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following: "Any permit under this section shall be for a fixed term, not to exceed ten years in the case of any land disposal facility, incinerator or other treatment facility. Each permit for a land disposal facility shall be reviewed five years after date of issuance or reissuance and shall be modified as necessary to assure that the facility continues to comply with the currently applicable requirements of this section and section 3004. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude the Administrator from reviewing and modifying a permit at any time during its term. Review of any application for a permit renewal shall consider improvements in the state of control and measurement technology as well as changes in applicable regulations. Each permit issued under this section shall contain such terms and conditions as the Administrator (or the State) determines necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

(c)(1) Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "INTERIM STATUS.—", by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), each surface impoundment in existence on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and qualifying for the authorization to operate under paragraph (1) of this subsection, which—

"(i) does not have at least one liner, for which there is no evidence that such liner is leaking, or shall not receive, store, or treat hazardous waste after the date four years after such date of enactment unless such surface impoundment is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundment if it were new. For the purposes of clause (i) of this subparagraph, the term liner means a liner meeting the requirements of regulations for new surface impoundments in effect as of such date of enactment, and that the surface impoundment is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section.

"(ii) is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology as defined in subparagraph (G) or as determined by criteria or guidance for the acceptable location of facilities issued in accordance with section 3004(f),

"(B) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program), after notice and opportunity for comment, may modify the requirements of subparagraph (A) for any surface impoundment if, not later than twenty-four months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the owner or operator demonstrates that such surface impoundment is located, designed and operated so as to assure that there will be no migration of any hazardous constituent into ground water or surface water at any time during the period hazardous waste remains in such surface impoundment. Within twelve months after the receipt of evidence submitted under this subparagraph and not later than thirty-six months after such date of enactment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator as to whether and, if so, how the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall be modified and applied to such surface impoundment.

"(C) Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply to any surface impoundment which (i) contains treated waste water during the secondary or tertiary phase of an aggressive biological treatment facility subject to a permit issued under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (or which holds such treated waste water after treatment and prior to discharge), (ii) is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section, and (iii) is part of a facility in compliance with section 301(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act, or, in the case of a facility for which no effluent guidelines required under section 304(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act are in effect and no permit under section 402(a)(1) of such Act implementing section 301(b)(2) of such Act has been issued, is part of a facility in compliance with a permit under section 402 of the Clean Water Act which is achieving significant degradation of toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents contained in the untreated waste stream and which has identified those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents in the untreated waste stream to the appropriate permitting authority. The Administrator shall study and report to the Congress on the number, range of size, construction, likelihood of hazardous constituents migrating into ground water, and potential threat to human health and the environment of existing surface impoundments excluded by this subparagraph from the requirements of subparagraph (A). Such report shall address the need, feasibility, and estimated costs of subjecting such existing surface impoundments to the requirements of subparagraph (A). In the case of any existing surface impoundment or class of surface impoundments from which the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) determines hazardous constituents are likely to migrate into ground water, the Administrator (or, if appropriate the State) is authorized to impose such requirements as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, including the requirements of section 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundments if they were new.

"(D) The owner or operator of any surface impoundment potentially subject to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph who has reason to believe that on the basis of subparagraph (A) (i) or (ii) or subparagraph (C) such surface impoundment is not required to comply with the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall apply to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) not later than twenty-four months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 for a determination of the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment. Such owner or operator shall provide evidence pertinent to such decision, including evidence as to compliance with ground water monitoring requirements and all reasonably ascertainable evidence on whether such surface impoundment is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (A) (i) or (ii) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrology that (i) such surface impoundment is not located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology, (ii) the liner of such surface impoundment is designed, constructed and operated in accordance with the requirements of regulations, and (iii) based on a review of ground water monitoring information and other available information, there is no evidence such liner is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (C) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrology that such surface impoundment satisfies the conditions set forth in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (C), based on analysis of those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents that are likely to be present in the untreated waste stream, and that hazardous constituents are not likely to migrate from the impoundment into ground water. Within twelve months after the receipt of such evidence and not later than 36 months after such date of enactment, and after notice and opportunity for comment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator on the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment.

"(E) In any case in which a surface impoundment is initially determined to be excluded from the requirements of subparagraph (A) but due to a change in condition subsequently becomes subject to subparagraph (A), the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be two years after the date of discovery of such change of condition. In any case in which a surface impoundment becomes subject to subparagraph (A) after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 due to the promulgation of additional listings or characteristics for the identification of hazardous wastes under section 3001, the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be four years after the date of such promulgation, the period for demonstrations under subparagraph (B) and for submission of evidence under subparagraph (D) shall be not later than twenty-four months after the date of such promulgation, and the period for the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) to advise such owners or operators under subparagraphs (B) and (D) shall be not later than 36 months after the date of promulgation.

"(F) In the case of any surface impoundment in which the liners and leak detection system have been installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph and in good faith compliance with section 3004(f) and the Administrator's regulations and guidance documents governing liners and leak detection systems, no liner or leak detection system which is different from that which was so installed pursuant to this paragraph shall be required for such unit by the Administrator when issuing the first permit under this section to such facility. Nothing in this subparagraph shall preclude the Administrator from requiring installation of a new liner when the Administrator has reason to believe that any liner installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph is leaking.

"(G) For the purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), a surface impoundment is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology if the impoundment is over or hydrologically connected to—

"(i) a sole source aquifer, or

"(ii) a formation which contains an underground source of drinking water if such formation or the unsaturated soils hydrologically connected to such formation are characterized by high hydraulic conductivity or permeability (including karst formations, medium-to-coarse-grained materials or fractured rock) or are geologically unstable, and there is no intervening natural barrier formation that would significantly restrict migration of waste constituents.".

CONTINUING RELEASES AT PERMITTED FACILITIES

SEC. 7. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following additional new subsection:

"(g) CONTINUING RELEASES AT PERMITTED FACILITIES.—Standards promulgated under this section shall require, and a permit issued after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 by the Administrator or a State shall require, corrective action for all releases of hazardous waste or constituents from any solid waste management unit at a treatment, storage, or disposal facility seeking a permit under this subtitle, regardless of the time at which waste was placed in such unit. Permits issued under section 3005 shall contain schedules of compliance for such corrective action (where such corrective action cannot be completed prior to issuance of the permit) and assurances of financial responsibility for completing such corrective action.".

LISTING DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

SEC. 8. Section 3001(b) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4)(A) The regulations promulgated under paragraph (1) shall provide that, when evaluating a petition to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste, the Administrator shall consider criteria, constituents, or other related factors, other than those for which the waste was listed, if the Administrator has information that provides a reasonable basis to believe that such additional criteria, constituents, or other related factors could cause such waste to be listed as a hazardous waste. The Administrator shall grant or deny such petitions only after notice and opportunity for public comment. To the maximum extent practicable the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a proposal to grant or deny such a petition within twelve months after receiving a complete application to exclude a waste generate at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste and shall grant or deny such a petition within twenty-four months after receiving a complete application. If the basis for denial of such petition is the presence of additional constituents which could cause such waste to be hazardous, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, amend the basis for the listing of such waste to indicate the additional constituents.

"(B) The temporary granting of such a petition prior to the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 without the opportunity for public comment and the full consideration of such comment shall not continue for more than twenty-four months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984. If a final decision to grant or deny such a petition has not been promulgated after notice and opportunity for public comment within the time limit prescribed by the preceding sentence, any such temporary granting of such petition shall cease to be in effect.

"(C) Any petition to exclude from regulation a waste generated at a particular facility shall be accompanied by adequate information to evaluate such petition, including information on samples of such waste determined to be representative on the basis of guidelines for the development and submission of such information published by the Administrator. Such information shall be certified by a responsible official of such facility (as determined under regulations promulgated under section 3005) to be accurate, complete, and representative, within the knowledge of employees or contractors of such facility.

"(5) For the purpose of assuring the timely completion of regulations identifying the characteristics of hazardous waste and the listing of additional particular hazardous wastes, as required by paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Administrator shall—

"(A) not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, identify those particular wastes for which the Agency intends to decide whether to list as hazardous waste within two years after such date of enactment, and those particular wastes for which the Agency intends to decide within five years after such date of enactment;

"(B) not later than six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, promulgate regulations listing chlorinated dioxin- and dibenzofuran-containing wastes as hazardous wastes in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(C) not later than two years after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, (i) promulgate regulations identifying additional characteristics of hazardous waste, including measures or indicators of toxicity; and (ii) reach decisions on all wastes identified in accordance with subparagraph (A) for decision within two years and for each such waste either promulgate regulations listing such particular hazardous waste or publish a statement as to why such waste should not be listed as hazardous waste; and

"(D) not later than twenty-eight months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, make such changes as are necessary in the extraction procedure toxicity characteristic to predict the leaching potential of wastes upon exposure to leaching media more aggressive than the media utilized in the regulation in effect as of such date of enactment.

"(6) The Administrator, in cooperation with the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and the National Toxicology Program, shall also identify or list those hazardous wastes which shall be subject to the provisions of this subtitle solely because of the presence in such wastes of certain constituents (such as identified carcinogens, mutagens, or teratogens) at levels in excess of levels which endanger human health.".

BURNING AND BLENDING OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

SEC. 9. (a) NOTICE.—(1) Section 3010 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following after the first sentence thereof: "Not later than fifteen months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984—

"(1) the owner or operator of any facility which produces a fuel (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, (B) from such hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material, (C) from used oil, or (D) from used oil and any other material;

"(2) the owner or operator of any facility (other than a single- or two-family residence) which burns for purposes of energy recovery any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and shall file with the Administrator (and with the State in the case of a State with an authorized hazardous waste program) a notification stating the location and general description of the facility, together with a description of the identified or listed hazardous waste involved and, in the case of a facility referred to in paragraph (1) or (2), a description of the production or energy recovery activity carried out at the facility and such other information as the Administrator deems necessary. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' also includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (i) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (ii) distributed for use as a fuel, or (iii) burned as a fuel. Notification shall not be required under the second sentence of this subsection in the case of facilities (such as residential boilers) where the Administrator determines that such notification is not necessary in order for the Administrator to obtain sufficient information respecting current practices of facilities using hazardous waste for energy recovery. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). Nothing in this subsection shall affect regulatory determinations under section 3014 (as amended by the Used Oil Recycling Act of 1980).".

"(3) any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains used oil or any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001

(2) Section 3010 of such Act is amended by striking out "the preceding sentence" each place it occurs and substituting "the preceding provisions".

(b) STANDARDS.—(1) Section 3004 of such Act is further amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(h) HAZARDOUS WASTE USED AS FUEL.—(1) Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, and after notice and opportunity for public hearing, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing such—

"(1) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which produce a fuel, (A) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or (B) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material;

"(2) standards applicable to the owners and operators of facilities which burn, for purposes of energy recovery, any fuel produced as provided in paragraph (1) of any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001; and

"(3) standards applicable to any person who distributes or markets any fuel which is produced as provided in paragraph (1) or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001

as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such standards may include any of the requirements set forth in paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (a) as may be appropriate. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect or impair the provisions of section 3001(b)(3). For purposes of this subsection, the term 'hazardous waste listed under section 3001' includes any commercial chemical product which is listed under section 3001 and which, in lieu of its original intended use, is (A) produced for use as (or as a component of) a fuel, (B) distributed for use as a fuel, or (C) burned as a fuel.

"(2)(A) This subsection, subsection (i), and subsection (j) shall not apply to petroleum refinery wastes containing oil which are converted into petroleum coke at the same facility at which such wastes were generated, unless the resulting coke product would exceed one or more characteristics by which a substance would be identified as a hazardous waste under section 3001.

"(B) The Administrator may exempt from the requirements of this subsection, subsection (i), or subsection (j) facilities which burn de minimis quantities of hazardous waste as fuel, as defined by the Administrator, if the wastes are burned at the same facility at which such wastes are generated; the waste is burned to recover useful energy, as determined by the Administrator on the basis of the design and operating characteristics of the facility and the heating value and other characteristics of the waste; and the waste is burned in a type of device determined by the Administrator to be designed and operated at a destruction and removal efficiency sufficient such that protection of human health and environment is assured.".

(i) LABELING.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, until such time as the Administrator promulgates standards under subsection (h) specifically superceding this requirement, it shall be unlawful for any person who is required to file a notification in accordance with paragraph (1) or (3) of section 3010 to distribute or market any fuel which is produced from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or any fuel which otherwise contains any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 if the invoice or the bill of sale fails—

"(A) to bear the following statement: 'WARNING: THIS FUEL CONTAINS HAZARDOUS WASTES', and

"(B) to list the hazardous wastes contained therein.

Beginning ninety days after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, such statement shall be located in a conspicuous place on every such invoice or bill of sale and shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layouts, or color with other printed matter on the invoice or bill of sale.

"(2) Unless the Administrator determines otherwise as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, this subsection shall not apply to fuels produced from petroleum refining waste containing oil if (A) such materials are generated and reinserted onsite into the refining process; (B) contaminants are removed; and (C) such refining waste containing oil is converted along with normal process streams into petroleum-derived fuel products at a facility at which crude oil is refined into petroleum products and which is classified as a number SIC 2911 facility under the Office of Management and Budget Standard Industrial Classification Manual.

"(3) Unless the Administrator determines otherwise as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, this subsection shall not apply to fuels produced from oily material, resulting from normal petroleum refining, production and transportation practices, if (A) contaminants are removed; and (B) such oily materials is converted along with normal process streams into petroleum-derived fuel products at a facility at which crude oil is refined into petroleum products and which is classified as a number SIC 2911 facility under the Office of Management and Budget Standard Classification manual.

"(j) RECORDKEEPING.—Not later than fifteen months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations requiring that any person who is required to file a notification in accordance with subparagraph (1), (2), or (3), of paragraph 301(a) must maintain such records regarding fuel blending, distribution, or use as many be necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

(2) Section 3003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) FUEL FROM HAZARDOUS WASTE.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, and after opportunity for public hearing, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations establishing standards, applicable to transporters of fuel produced (1) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001, or (2) from any hazardous waste identified or listed under section 3001 and any other material, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment. Such standard may include any of the requirements set forth in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (a) as may be appropriate.".

MANDATORY INSPECTIONS

SEC. 10. Section 3007 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting the following new subsection after subsection (a) and by redesignating succeeding subsections accordingly:

"(b) MANDATORY INSPECTIONS.—(1) Beginning twelve months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, every facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste for which a permit is required under section 3005 of this title shall be thoroughly and regularly inspected no less often than every two years as to its compliance with this subtitle and the regulations promulgated thereunder. The Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, promulgate regulations governing the minimum frequency and manner of such inspections, including the manner in which records of such inspections shall be maintained. The Administrator may distinguish between classes and categories of facilities commensurate with the risks posed by each class or category.

"(2) Not later than six months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall submit to the Congress a report on the potential for inspections of hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facilities by nongovernmental inspectors as a supplement to inspections conducted by officers, employees, or representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency or States having authorized hazardous waste programs or operating under a cooperative agreement with the Administrator. Such report shall be prepared in cooperation with the States, insurance companies offering environmental impairment insurance, and independent companies providing inspection services, and other such groups as appropriate. Such report shall contain recommendations on provisions and requirements for a program of private inspections to supplement governmental inspections.".

FEDERAL FACILITIES

SEC. 11. (a) Section 3007 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended by section 10 of this Act, is further amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(d) FACILITIES OPERATED BY A FEDERAL AGENCY.—Beginning twelve months after enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall, and the State, in the case of a State with an authorized hazardous waste program, may undertake no less often than every two years a thorough inspection of each facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste which is operated by a Federal agency as to its compliance with this subtitle and the regulations promulgated thereunder. The records of such inspections shall be available to the public as provided in subsection (c).

"(e) STATE-OPERATED FACILITIES.—The Administrator shall undertake a thorough inspection of every facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste which is operated by a State or local government for which a permit is required under section 3005 of this title. The records of such inspection shall be available to the public as provided in subsection (c).".

(b) Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"INVENTORY OF FEDERAL AGENCY HAZARDOUS WASTE FACILITIES

"SEC. 3015. (a) FEDERAL AGENCY INVENTORY.—Each Federal agency shall, within one year after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, undertake a continuing program to compile, publish, and submit to the Administrator and the State (in the case of States having an authorized hazardous waste program) an inventory describing the location of each site which the Federal agency owns or operates where hazardous waste has at any time been treated, stored or disposed of. Such inventory shall contain—

"(1) a description of the location of the sites at which any such treatment, storage, or disposal has taken place before the date on which permits are required under section 3005 for such storage or disposal;

"(2) such information relating to the amount, nature, and toxicity of the hazardous waste at each such site as may be practicable to obtain and as may be necessary to determine the extent of any health hazard which may be associated with such site;

"(3) the name and address and responsible agency for each such site, determined as of the date of preparation of the inventory;

"(4) an identification of the types or techniques of waste treatment, storage, or disposal which have been used at each site; and

"(5) information concerning the current status of the site, including information respecting whether or not hazardous waste is currently being treated, stored, or disposed of at such site (and if not, the date on which such activity ceased) and information respecting the nature of any other activity carried out at such site.

"(b) ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY PROGRAM.—If the Administrator determines that any Federal agency under subsection (a) is not adequately providing information respecting the sites referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall notify the chief official of such Agency. If within ninety days following such notification, the Federal agency has not undertaken a program to adequately provide such information, the Administrator shall carry out the inventory program for such agency.".

FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 12. (a) Section 3008(d) of the solid Waste Disposal Act is amended as follows:

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) insert after "knowingly transports" the following: "or causes to be transported", and

(B) strike out "section 3005 (or 3006 in the case of a State program)" and substitute "this subtitle";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) strike out "either";

(B) strike out "section 3005 (or 3006 in the case of a State program)" and substitute "this subtitle"; and

(C) strike out subparagraph (B) and substitute:

"(B) in knowing violation of any material condition or requirement of such permit; or

"(C) in knowing violation of any material condition or requirement of any applicable interim status regulations or standards;"; and

(3) strike out all after paragraph (2) and substitute:

"(3) knowingly omits material information or makes any false material statement or representation in any application, label, manifest, record, report, permit, or other document filed, maintained, or used for purposes of compliance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator (or by a State in the case of an authorized State program) under this subtitle;

"(4) knowingly generates, stores, treats, transports, disposes of, exports, or otherwise handles any hazardous waste (whether such activity took place before or takes place after the date of the enactment of this paragraph) and who knowingly destroys, alters, conceals, or fails to file any record, application, manifest, report, or other document required to be maintained or filed for purposes of compliance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator (or by a State in the case of an authorized State program) under this subtitle;

"(5) knowingly transports without a manifest, or causes to be transported without a manifest, any hazardous waste required by regulations promulgated under this subtitle (or by a State in the case of a State program authorized under this subtitle) to be accompanied by a manifest shall upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $50,000 for each day of violation, or imprisonment not to exceed two years (five years in the case of a violation of paragraph (1) or (2)), or both. If the conviction is for a violation committed after a first conviction of such person under this paragraph, the maximum punishment under the respective paragraph shall be doubled with respect to both fine and imprisonment.".

(b) Section 3008(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended to read as follows:

"(e) KNOWING ENDANGERMENT.—Any person who knowingly transports, treats, stores, disposes of, or exports any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle in violation of paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (d) of this section who knows at that time that he thereby places another person in imminent danger of death or serious bodily injury, shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $250,000 or imprisonment for not more than fifteen years, or both. A defendant that is an organization shall, upon conviction of violating this subsection, be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000,000.".

EXPORT OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

SEC. 13. (a) Subtitle C of the solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"EXPORT OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

"SEC. 3016. (a) GENERAL.—Beginning twenty-four months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, no person shall export any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle unless (1) such person has provided the notification required in subsection (c) of this section, (2) the government of the receiving country has consented to accept such hazardous waste, (3) a copy of the receiving country's written consent is attached to the manifest accompanying each waste shipment, and (4) the shipment conforms with the terms of the consent of the government of the receiving country required pursuant to subsection (e), or (5) the United States and the government of the receiving country have entered into an agreement as provided for in subsection (f) and the shipment conforms with the terms of such agreement.

"(b) REGULATIONS.—Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the administrator shall promulgate the regulations necessary to implement this section. Such regulations shall become effective one hundred and eighty days after promulgation.

"(c) NOTIFICATION.—Any person who intends to export a hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle beginning twelve months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, shall, before such hazardous waste is scheduled to leave the United States, provide notification to the administrator. Such notification shall contain the following information:

"(1) the name and address of the exporter;

"(2) the types of estimated quantities of hazardous waste to be exported;

"(3) the estimated frequency or rate at which such waste is to be exported; and the period of time over which such waste is to be exported;

"(4) the ports of entry;

"(5) a description of the manner in which such hazardous waste will be transported to and treated, stored, or disposed in the receiving country; and

"(6) the name and address of the ultimate treatment, storage or disposal facility.

"(d) PROCEDURES FOR REQUESTING CONSENT OF THE RECEIVING COUNTRY.—Within thirty days of the Administrator's receipt of a complete notification under this section, the Department of State, acting on behalf of the Administrator, shall—

"(1) forward a copy of the notification to the government of the receiving country;

"(2) advise the government that United States law prohibits the export of hazardous waste unless the receiving country consents to accept the hazardous waste;

"(3) request the government to provide the Secretary with a written consent or objection to the terms of the notification; and

"(4) forward to the government of the receiving country a description of the Federal regulations which would apply to the treatment, storage, and disposal of the hazardous waste in the United States.

"(e) CONVEYANCE OF WRITTEN CONSENT TO EXPORTER.—Within thirty days of receipt by the Department of State of the receiving country's written consent or objection (or any subsequent communication withdrawing a prior consent or objection), the Administrator shall forward such a consent, objection, or other communication to the exporter.

"(f) INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS.—Where there exists an international agreement between the United States and the government of the receiving country establishing notice, export, and enforcement procedures for the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of hazardous wastes, only the requirements of subsection (a)(5) and (g) shall apply.

"(g) REPORTS.—After the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, any person who exports any hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle shall file with the Administrator no later than March 1 of each year, a report summarizing the types, quantities, frequency, and ultimate destination of all such hazardous waste exported during the previous calendar year.

"(h) OTHER STANDARDS.—Nothing in this section shall preclude the Administrator from establishing other standards for the export of hazardous wastes under section 3002 or section 3003 of this subtitle.".

(b) PENALTIES.—Section 3008(d) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended by section 12(a) of this Act, is amended by adding after paragraph (5) "; or" and the following new paragraph:

"(6) knowingly exports a hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle (A) without the consent of the receiving country or, (B) where there exists an international agreement between the United States and the government of the receiving country establishing notice, export, and enforcement procedures for the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of hazardous wastes, in a manner which is not in conformance with such agreement".

SUBTITLE D IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 14. (a) Section 4004(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "LANDFILLS.—" and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2) Not later than March 31, 1988, the Administrator shall promulgate revisions of the criteria promulgated under paragraph (1) and section 1008(a)(3) for facilities that may receive hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators under section 3002(b). The criteria shall be those necessary to protect human health and the environment and may take into account the practicable capacity of such facilities. At a minimum such revisions for facilities potentially receiving such wastes should require groundwater monitoring as necessary to detect contamination, establish criteria for the acceptable location of new or existing facilities, and provide for corrective action as appropriate.".

(b) Section 4004(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking all after "subsection (a)" through "later".

(c) Section 4005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) CONTROL OF HAZARDOUS DISPOSAL.—(1)(A) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system of prior approval and conditions to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provisions of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005) will comply with the applicable criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3).

"(B) Not later than eighteen months after the promulgation of revised criteria under subsection 4004(a)(2), each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system or prior approval and conditions, to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provision of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005) will comply with the criteria revised under section 4004(a)(2).

"(C) The Administrator shall determine whether each State has developed an adequate program under this paragraph. The Administrator may make such a determination in conjunction with approval, disapproval or partial approval of a State plan under section 4007.

"(2) In any State that the Administrator determines has not adopted an adequate program for such facilities under paragraph (1)(B) by the date provided in such paragraph, the Administrator may use the authorities available under sections 3007 and 3008 of this title to enforce the prohibition in subsection (a) of this section with respect to such facilities. In no event shall the Administrator or any other person be authorized to bring a civil action under paragraph (a) of this section against any person subject to a compliance schedule issued by the State under a program that the Administrator has determined to be adequate under this paragraph. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'requirement of this subtitle' in section 3008 shall be deemed to include criteria promulgated by the Administrator under sections 1008(a)(3) and 4004(a) of this title, and the term 'hazardous wastes' in section 3007 shall be deemed to include solid waste at facilities that may handle hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators.".

(d) Section 4008(a)(2) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subparagraph:

"(D) There are authorized (i) to be made available $15,000,000 out of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and (ii) to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, for grants to States and, where appropriate, to regional, local, and interstate agencies to implement programs requiring compliance by solid waste management facilities with the criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3) and with the provisions of section 4005. To the extent practicable, such programs shall require such compliance no later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984.".

BIENNIAL REPORT

SEC. 15. Section 2006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(a) ACTIVITIES OF THE OFFICE.—" after "SEC. 2006." and by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) HAZARDOUS WASTE.—(1) The Administrator shall transmit to the Congress and the President, periodically but no less often than every two years a report describing quantities and types of hazardous waste generated, stored, treated, and disposed of. The Administrator shall compile and update such information comparable to that required under section 3002(a)(6) and section 3004(a) (1) and (2).

"(2) States with authorized programs under section 3006 shall make available those reports they have received or compiled to assist the Administrator in preparing such report for Congress. The first such report shall cover calendar year 1983 and shall be transmitted to the Congress no later than March 31, 1985.

"(3) The authority of section 3007 of this Act shall be available in the implementation of this subsection.".

AWARD OF FEES

SEC. 16. Section 7002(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "prevailing or substantially prevailing" before "party" in the first sentence thereof.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 17. Section 7006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7006. (a) REVIEW OF FINAL REGULATIONS AND CERTAIN PETITIONS.—A petition for review of the promulgation of final regulations under this Act and the Administrator's denial of any petition for the promulgation, amendment, or repeal of any regulation under this Act may be filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia or in any United States Court of Appeals for a circuit in which the petitioner resides or transacts business which is directly affected by such promulgation or denial, and such petition shall be filed within one hundred and twenty days from the date of such promulgation or denial, unless such petition is based solely on grounds arising after such one hundred and twentieth day. Any action of the Administrator with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in civil or criminal proceedings for enforcement.

"(b) REVIEW OF CERTAIN ACTIONS UNDER SECTIONS 3005 AND 3006.—A petition for review of the Administrator's action (1) in issuing, denying, modifying, or revoking any permit under section 3005, or (2) in granting, denying, or withdrawing authorization or interim authorization under section 3006, may be filed by any interested person in the United States Court of Appeals for a circuit in which the petitioner resides or transacts business which is directly affected by such action, and such petition shall be filed within one hundred and twenty days from the date of such issuance, denial, modification, revocation, grant, or withdrawal, or after such date only if such petition is based solely on grounds which arose after such one hundred and twentieth day. Any action of the Administrator with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in civil or criminal proceedings for enforcement.

"(c) In any judicial proceeding brought under this section in which review is sought of a determination under this Act required to be made on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing, if a party seeking review under this Act applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shows to the satisfaction of the court that the information is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Administrator, the court may order such additional evidence (and evidence in rebuttal thereof) to be taken before the Administrator, and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper; the Administrator may modify his findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file with the court such modified or new findings and his recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order, with the return of such additional evidence.

"(d)(1) If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of the first such petition more than thirty days before receiving written notice of the filing of the second petition, then the record shall be filed in that court in which the first petition was filed. If petitions for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of one or more petitions within thirty days or less after receiving written notice of the filing of the first petition, then the Administrator shall promptly advise in writing the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that petitions have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals, and shall identify each court for which he has written notice that such petitions have been filed within thirty days or less of receiving written notice of the filing of the first such petition. Pursuant to a system of random selection devised for this purpose, and within three business days after receiving such notice from the Administrator, the Administrative Office thereupon shall select the court in which the record shall be filed from among those identified by the Administrator. Upon notification of such selection, the Administrator shall promptly file the record in such court. For the purpose of review of agency action which has previously been remanded to the Administrator, the record shall be filed in the United States Courts of Appeals which remanded such action.

"(2) Where petitions have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals with respect to the same agency action and the record has been filed in one of such courts pursuant to paragraph (1), the other courts in which such petitions have been filed shall promptly transfer such petitions to the United States Courts of Appeals in which the record has been filed. Pending selection of a court pursuant to subsection (1), any court in which a petition has been filed may postpone the effective date of the agency action until fifteen days after the Administrative Office has selected the court in which the record shall be filed.

"(3) Any court in which a petition with respect to any agency action has been filed, including any court selected pursuant to subsection (d)(1), may transfer such petition to any other United States Courts of Appeals for the convenience of the parties or otherwise in the interest of justice.

"(e) In any judicial proceeding under this section, the court may award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to any prevailing or substantially prevailing party whenever it determines that such award is appropriate.".

CITIZEN SUITS

SEC. 18. (a) Section 7002(a)(1) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "prohibition," immediately after "requirement,";

(2) inserting "(A)" immediately after "(1)"; and

(3) inserting the following at the end thereof:

"(B) against any person, including the United States and any other governmental instrumentality or agency, to the extent permitted by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, and including any past or present generator, past or present transporter, or past or present owner or operator of a treatment, storage, or disposal facility, who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment; or".

(b) Section 7002(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "or the alleged endangerment may occur" immediately after "the alleged violation occurred" in the first sentence following paragraph (2); and

(2) striking "to enforce such regulation or order, or to order the Administrator to perform such act or duty as the case may be" in the portion following paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "to enforce the permit, standard, regulation, condition requirement, prohibition, or order, referred to in paragraph (1)(A), to restrain any person who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste referred to in paragraph (1)(B), to order such person to take such other action as may be necessary, or both, or to order the Administrator to perform the act or duty referred to in paragraph (2), as the case may be, and to apply any appropriate civil penalties under section 3008 (a) and (g). A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal, taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractural arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

(c) Section 7002(b) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act if amended to read as follows:

"(b) ACTIONS PROHIBITED.—No action may be commenced under subsection (a)(1) of this section—

"(1) prior to sixty days after the plaintiff has given notice of the violation or prior to one hundred and twenty days after the plaintiff has given notice of the endangerment (A) to the Administrator; (B) to the State in which the alleged violation occurs or in which the alleged endangerment may occur; and (C) to any alleged violator of such permit, standard, regulation, condition, requirement, prohibition, or order, or any person alleged to have contributed or to be contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, except that such action may be brought immediately after such notification in the case of an action under this section respecting a violation of subtitle C of this Act; or

"(2) with respect to an action under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, if the Administrator or State has commenced and is diligently prosecuting a civil or criminal action in a court of the United States or a State to require compliance with such permit, standard, regulation, condition, requirement, prohibition, or order: Provided, however, That in any such action in a court of the United States, any person may intervene as a matter of right; or

"(3) with respect to an action under subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, if the Administrator has commenced and is diligently prosecuting an action under section 7003 of this Act or has settled such action to restrain or abate acts or conditions which may have contributed or are contributing to the activities which may present the alleged endangerment, or if the State has commenced and is diligently prosecuting an action under subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section: Provided, however, That in any such action in a court of the United States, any person may intervene as a matter of right when the applicant claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and he is so situated that the disposition of the action may, as a practical matter, impair or impede his ability to protect that interest, unless the Administrator or the State shows that the applicant's interest is adequately respresented by existing parties. No action may be commenced under subsection (a)(1)(B) by any person (other than a State or local government) with respect to the siting of a hazardous waste treatment, storage, or a disposal facility, nor to restrain or enjoin the issuance of a permit for such facility".

IMMINENT HAZARD

SEC. 19. Section 7003(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "past or present" after "evidence that the";

(2) striking "to immediately restrain any person" and inserting in lieu thereof "against any person (including any past or present generator, past or present transporter, or past or present owner or operator of a treatment, storage, or disposal facility) who has contributed or who is";

(3) striking "to stop" and inserting in lieu thereof "to restrain such person from";

(4) striking "or to take such other action as may be necessary" and substituting ", to order such person to take such other action as may be necessary, or both"; and

(5) inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractual arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION IN SETTLEMENTS

SEC. 20. Section 7003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) Whenever the United States or the Administrator proposes to covenant not to sue or to forbear from suit or to settle any claim arising under this section, notice, and opportunity for a public meeting in the affected area, and a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposed settlement prior to its final entry shall be afforded to the public. The decision of the United States or the Administrator to enter into or not to enter into such Consent Decree, covenant or agreement shall not constitute a final agency action subject to judicial review under this Act or the Administrative Procedure Act.".

COMPATIBILITY OF RECYCLING AND ENERGY RECOVERY

SEC. 21. (a) Section 4001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "In developing such comprehensive plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

(b) Section 4003 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(d) SIZE OF WASTE-TO-ENERGY FACILITIES.—Notwithstanding any of the above requirements, it is the intention of this Act and the planning process developed pursuant to this Act that in determining the size of the waste-to-energy facility, adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs of the recycling and resource recovery interest within the area encompassed by the planning process.".

USE OF RECOVERED MATERIALS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 22. (a) Section 6002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(h) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, in the case of paper products, the term 'recovered materials' includes—

"(1) post consumer materials such as—

"(A) paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes from retail stores, office buildings, homes, and similar establishments, after they have passed through their end-usage as a consumer item, including (but not limited to) used corrugated boxes, newspapers, magazines, mixed wastepaper, tabulating cards, and used cordage; and

"(B) all paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes which enter and are collected from municipal solid waste; and

"(2) manufacturing wastes, forest residues, and other wastes such as—

"(A) dry paper and paperboard waste generated after completion of the papermaking process (that is, those manufacturing operations up to and including the cutting and trimming of the paper machine reel into smaller rolls or rough sheets) including—

"(i) envelope cuttings, bindery trimmings, and other paper and paperboard waste, resulting from printing, cutting, forming, and other converting operations;

"(ii) bag, box, and carton manufacturing wastes; and

"(iii) butt rolls, mill wrappers, and rejected unused stock;

"(B) finished paper and paperboard from obsolete inventories of paper and paperboard manufacturers, merchants, wholesalers, dealers, printers, converters, or others;

"(C) fibrous byproducts of harvesting, manufacturing, extractive, or wood-cutting processes, flax, straw, linters, bagasse, slash, and other forest residues;

"(D) wastes generated by the conversion of goods made from fibrous material (that is, waste rope from cordage manufacture, textile mill waste, and cuttings); and

"(E) fibers recovered from waste water which otherwise would enter the waste stream.

"(i) PROCUREMENT PROGRAM.—(1) Within one year after the date of publication of applicable guidelines under subsection (e), each procuring agency shall develop an affirmative procurement program which will assure that items composed of recovered materials will be purchased to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with applicable provisions of Federal procurement law.

"(2) Each affirmative procurement program required under this subsection shall, at a minimum, contain—

"(A) a recovered materials preference program;

"(B) an agency promotion program to promote the preference program adopted under subparagraph (A);

"(C) a program for requiring (i) estimates of the total percentage of recovered material utilized in the performance of a contract, (ii) certification of minimum recovered material content actually utilized, where appropriate, and (iii) reasonable verification procedures for estimates and certifications; and

"(D) annual review and monitoring of the effectiveness of an agency's affirmative procurement program.

In the case of paper, the recovered materials preference program required under subparagraph (A) shall provide for the maximum use of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1).

"(3) In developing the preference program, the following options shall be considered for adoption:

"(A) CASE-BY-CASE POLICY DEVELOPMENT.—Subject to the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1), a policy may be established for awarding contracts to the vendor offering an item composed of the highest percentage of recovered materials practicable (and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)). Subject to such limitations, agencies may make an award to a vendor offering items with less than the maximum recovered materials content.

"(B) MINIMUM CONTENT STANDARDS.—Minimum recovered materials content specifications may be set in such a way as to assure that the recovered materials content (and in the case of paper, the content of post consumer materials referred to in subsection (h)(1) required is the maximum available without jeopardizing the intended end use of the item, or violating the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1).

Procuring agencies shall adopt one of the options set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B), or a substantially equivalent alternative, for inclusion in the affirmative procurement program.".

(b) Section 6002(c)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting after "highest percentage of recovered materials practicable" the following: "(and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1) practicable)".

(c) Section 6002(d)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "five years after the date of enactment of this Act" and in-serting in lieu thereof "18 months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

(d) Section 6002(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting after "section" the following: ", and in the case of paper, provide for maximizing the use of post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)"; and

(2) in the matter following paragraph (2), by striking out "for at least three product categories" and all that follows through "1982", and inserting in lieu thereof "for paper within 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, and for three additional product categories (including tires) by October 1, 1985".

(e) Section 6002(g) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "the policy expressed in" and inserting in lieu thereof "the requirements of"; and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and to report to the Congress every two years, beginning in 1984, on actions taken by Federal agencies and the progress made in the implementation of this section, including agency compliance with subsection (d)".

(f)(1) Section 4003(d) of such Act (as added by section 21(b) of this Act) is amended by inserting ", including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002(h)," after "adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs".

(2) Section 1006(b) of such Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b) INTEGRATION WITH OTHER ACTS.—" and by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in developing solid waste plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of a waste-to-energy facility, adequate provisions shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs, including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002(h), of the recycling and resource recovery interests within the area encompassed by the solid waste plan.".

CLARIFICATION OF HOUSEHOLD WASTE EXCLUSION

SEC. 23. (a) Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(d) CLARIFICATION OF HOUSEHOLD WASTE EXCLUSION.—A resource recovery facility recovering energy from the mass burning of municipal solid waste shall not be deemed to be treating, storing, disposing of, or otherwise managing hazardous wastes for the purposes of regulation under this subtitle, if such facility—

"(1) receives and burns only (A) household waste (from single and multiple dwellings, hotels, motels, and other residential sources) and (B) solid waste from commercial or industrial sources that does not contain hazardous waste identified or listed under this section, and

"(2) such facility does not accept hazardous wastes identified or listed under this section and the owner or operator of such facility has established contractual requirements or other appropriate notification or inspection procedures to assure that hazardous wastes are not received at or burned in such facility.".

REQUIREMENTS IN AUTHORIZED STATES

SEC. 24. Section 3006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(f) IMMEDIATE IMPLEMENTATION.—The requirements of sections 3002(b)(1), 3002(b)(7)(C), 3004 (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (i), 3005 (c) and (e), and 3007(b)(1) shall apply directly in all States, including each State with a program authorized under this section, until the program of such State is authorized to operate in lieu of the Federal program with respect to such requirement. Pending authorization under this section of a State program which reflects the amendments made by the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator may enter into an agreement with the State under which the State may assist in the administration of the requirements and prohibitions which take effect pursuant to such amendments.".

AIR EMISSIONS FROM LAND DISPOSAL FACILITIES

SEC. 25. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(k) AIR EMISSIONS.—Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the Administrator shall promulgate such regulations for the monitoring and control of air emissions at hazardous waste treatment, storage, and disposal facilities, including but not limited to open tanks, surface impoundments, and landfills, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.".

GROUND WATER MONITORING

SEC. 21. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(l) GROUND WATER MONITORING.—The standards under this section concerning ground water monitoring which are applicable to surface impoundments, waste piles, land treatment units, and landfills shall apply to such a facility whether or not—

"(1) the facility is located above the seasonal high water table;

"(2) two liners and a leachate collection system have been installed at the facility; or

"(3) the owner or operator inspects the liner (or liners) which has been installed at the facility. This subsection shall not be construed to affect other exemptions or waivers from such standards provided in regulations in effect on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act amendments of 1984 or as may be provided in revisions to those regulations, to the extent consistent with this subsection. The Administrator is authorized on a case-by-case basis to exempt from ground water monitoring requirements under this section (including subsection (f)) any engineered structure which the Administrator finds does not receive or contain liquid waste (nor waste containing free liquids), is designed and operated to exclude liquid from precipitation or other runoff, utilizes multiple leak detection systems within the outer layer of containment, and provides for continuing operation and maintenance of these leak detection systems during the operating period, closure, and the period required for post-closure monitoring and for which the Administrator concludes on the basis of such findings that there is a reasonable certainty hazardous constituents will not migrate beyond the outer layer of containment prior to the end of the period required for post-closure monitoring.".

WASTE MINIMIZATION

SEC. 27. (a) Section 1003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding "AND NATIONAL POLICY" to the title, by inserting "(a) OBJECTIVES.—" after "SEC. 1003.", and by adding the following new subsection:

"(b) NATIONAL POLICY.—The Congress hereby declares it to be the national policy of the United States that, wherever feasible, the generation of hazardous waste is to be reduced or eliminated as expeditiously as possible. Waste that is nevertheless generated should be treated, stored, or disposed of so as to minimize the present and future threat to human health and the environment.".

(b) Section 3002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended as follows: (1) by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) WASTE MINIMIZATION.—Effective September 1, 1984, the manifest required by subsection (a)(5) shall contain a certification by the generator that—

"(1) the generator of the hazardous waste has a program in place to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of such waste to the degree determined by the generator economically practicable; and

"(2) the proposed method of treatment, storage, or disposal is that practicable method currently available to the generator which minimizes the present and future threat to human health and the environment."; and

(2) by amending subsection (a)(6) to read as follows:

"(6) submission of reports to the Administrator (or the State agency in any case in which such agency carries out a permit program pursuant to this subtitle) at least once every two years, setting out—

"(A) the quantities and nature of hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle that he has generated during the year;

"(B) the disposition of all hazardous waste reported under subparagraph (A);

"(C) the efforts undertaken during the year to reduce the volume and toxicity of waste generated; and

"(D) the changes in volume and toxicity of waste actually achieved during the year in question in comparison with previous years, to the extent such information is available for years prior to enactment of this subparagraph.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(h) WASTE MINIMIZATION.—Effective September 1, 1984, it shall be a condition of any permit issued under this section for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste on the premises where such waste was generated that the permittee certify, no less often than annually, that—

"(1) the generator of the hazardous waste has a program in place to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of such waste to the degree determined by the generator to be economically practicable; and

"(2) the proposed method of treatment, storage, or disposal is that practicable method currently available to the generator which minimizes the present and future threat to human health and the environment.".

(d)(1) Section 8002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(r) MINIMIZATION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE.—The Administrator shall compile, and not later than October 1, 1986, submit to the Congress, a report on the feasibility and desirability of establishing standards of performance or of taking other additional actions under this Act to require the generators of hazardous waste to reduce the volume or quantity and toxicity of the hazardous waste they generate, and of establishing with respect to hazardous wastes required management practices or other requirements to assure such wastes are managed in ways that minimize present and future risks to human health and the environment. Such report shall include any recommendations for legislative changes which the Administrator determines are feasible and desirable to implement the national policy established by section 1003.".

(2) Section 301(a)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking out "four years" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty-two months".

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

SEC. 28. (a) Section 3012 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, entitled "Restrictions on Recycled Oil," shall be redesignated as section 3014 of such Act, together with all references thereto, and relocated after section 3013 of such Act.

(b) Subsection (b) of section 4003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, entitled "Discretionary Plan Provisions Relating to Recycled Oil," shall be redesignated as subsection (c) of such section, together with all references thereto.

(c) Section 303 of Public Law 96-510, 94 Stat. 2808, is amended by inserting after "conferred by this Act" the phrase "(other than under section 4681 of the Internal Revenue Code"). Section 232(c) of such public law is amended by inserting after "223" the phrase "(other than section 223(c)(2)(D))".

REPORT TO CONGRESS

SEC. 29. Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"UNDERGROUND INJECTION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE

"SEC. 1426. (a) The Administrator, in cooperation with the States, shall compile and, not later than June 15, 1984, submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, an inventory of all wells in the United States which inject hazardous wastes. The inventory shall include the following information:

"(1) the location and depth of each well;

"(2) engineering and construction details of each, including the thickness and composition of its casing, the width and content of the annulus, and pump pressure and capacity;

"(3) the hydrogeological characteristics of the overlying and underlying strata, as well as that into which the waste is injected;

"(4) the location and size of all drinking water aquifiers penetrated by the well, or within a one-mile radius of the well or within two hundred feet below the well injection point;

"(5) the location, capacity, and population served by each well providing drinking or irrigation water which is within a five-mile radius of the injection well;

"(6) the nature and volume of the waste injected during the one-year period immediately preceding the date of the report;

"(7) the dates and nature of the inspections of the injection well conducted by independent third parties or agents of State, Federal, or local government;

"(8) the name and address of all owners and operators of the well and any disposal facility associated with it; and

"(9) such other information as the Administrator may, in his discretion, deem necessary to define the scope and nature of hazardous waste disposal in the United States through underground injection.

"(b) In fulfilling the requirements of subsections (a)(3)-(5), the Administrator need only submit such information as can be obtained from currently existing State records and from site visits to at least twenty facilities containing wells which inject hazardous waste.

"(c) The States shall make available to the Administrator such information as he deems necessary to accomplish the objectives of this section.".

COMMUNITY RELOCATION

SEC. 30. (a) The second sentence of paragraph (23) of section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-510) is amended by inserting after "not otherwise provided for," the phrase "costs of permanent relocation of residents where it is determined that such permanent relocation is cost effective or may be necessary to protect health or welfare," and by striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "In the case of a business located in an area of evacuation or relocation, the term may also include the payment of those installments of principal and interest on business debt which accrue between the date of evacuation of temporary relocation and thirty days following the date that permanent relocation is actually accomplished or, if permanent relocation is formally rejected as the appropriate response, the date on which evacuation or temporary relocation ceases. In the case of an individual unemployed as a result of such evacuation or relocation, it may also include the provisions of the assistance authorized by sections 407, 408, and 409 of the Diseast Relief Act of 1974;".

(b) Section 104(c)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-510) is amended by inserting before "authorized by subsection (b) of this section," the phrase "for permanent relocation or".

EXTENDING THE USEFUL LIFE OF SANITARY LANDFILLS

SEC. 31. Section 8002 of the Soild Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting after subsection (p) the following new subsection, and redesignating succeeding subsections accordingly:

"(q) EXTENDING LANDFILL LIFE AND REUSING LANDFILLED AREAS.—The Administrator shall conduct detailed, comprehensive studies of methods to extend the useful life of sanitary landfills and to better use sites in which filled or closed landfills are located. Such studies shall address—

"(1) methods to reduce the volume of materials before placement on landfills;

"(2) more efficient systems for depositing waste in landfills;

"(3) methods to enhance the rate of decomposition of solid waste in landfills, in a safe and environmentally acceptable manner;

"(4) methane production from closed landfill units;

"(5) innovative uses of closed landfill sites, including use for energy production such as solar or wind energy and use for metals recovery;

"(6) potential for use of sewage treatment sludge in reclaiming landfilled areas; and

"(7) methods to coordinate use of a landfill owned by one municipality by nearby municipalities, and to establish equitable rates for such use, taking into account the need to provide future landfill capacity to replace that so used.

The Administrator is authorized to conduct demonstrations in the areas of study provided in this subsection. The Administrator shall periodically report on the results of such studies, with the first such report submitted not later than October 1, 1986.".

CLARIFICATION OF CRIMINAL LIABILITY

SEC. 32. Section 3008(d)(2)(A) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "having obtained".

STATE-FEDERAL RELATIONS UNDER THE SUPERFUND ACT

SEC. 33. (a)(1) Section 104(d)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new sentence: "For the purpose of the last sentence of subsection (c)(3) of this section, the President may enter into a contract or cooperative agreement with a State under this paragraph under which such state will take response actions in connection with releases listed pursuant to section 105(8)(B), using non-Federal funds for such response actions, in advance of and without any obligation by the President of amounts from the Fund for such response actions."

(2) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following sentence: "The President shall grant the State a credit against the share of costs for which it is responsible under this paragraph for any reasonable, documented, direct out-of-pocket non-Federal funds expended or obligated by the State under a contract agreement under the last sentence of subsection (d)(1).".

(b) Section 112(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No claim may be presented, nor may an action be commenced, under this title—

"(1) for the costs of response, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of completion of the response action;

"(2) for damages under subparagraph (C) of section 107(a), unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date on which final regulations are promulgated under section 301(c); or

"(3) for any other damages, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of discovery of the loss or within three years after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later: Provided, however, That the time limitations contained in this paragraph shall not begin to run against a minor until he reaches eighteen years of age or a legal representative is duly appointed for him, nor against an incompetent person until his incompetency ends or a legal representative is duly appointed for him.".

INTERIM STATUS

SEC. 34. Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by amending paragraph (1) of subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(1) owns or operates a facility required to have a permit under this section—

"(A) which facility was in existence on November 19, 1980, or

"(B) which facility is in existence on the effective date of statutory or regulatory changes under this Act that render the facility subject to the requirement to have a permit under this section: Provided, That the facility has not been previously denied a permit under this section and authority to operate the facility under this section has not been previously terminated,".

INTERIM AUTHORIZATION OF STATE HAZARDOUS WASTE PROGRAMS

SEC. 35. Section 3006(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking "twenty-four month period beginning on the date six months after the date of promulgation of regulations under sections 3002 through 3005" and inserting in lieu thereof "period ending no later than January 31, 1986".

USE OF FUND FOR HEALTH ASSESSMENTS, REGISTRY OF EXPOSED INDIVIDUALS, AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

SEC. 36. (a) Section 111(c)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by inserting "in accordance with subsection (m)," after "(4)"; and

(2) by striking "epidemiologic studies" and inserting in lieu thereof "epidemiologic and laboratory studies and health assessments".

(b) Section 111 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m)(1) For fiscal year 1985, not less than $18,000,000 shall be used for the purpose of carrying out activities described in subsection (c)(4) including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated, or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(2) The activities described in subsection (c)(4), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, shall be carried out by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i), either directly, or through grants to the State (or political subdivisions thereof) in the case of States (or political subdivisions) which the Administrator of such Agency determines are capable of carrying out such activities. Such activities shall include conducting health assessments, including those required under section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(3) In determining sites at which to conduct health assessments under this subsection, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall give priority to those facilities or sites at which there is documented evidence of release of hazardous constituents, at which the potential risk to human health appears highest, and for which in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency existing health assessment date is inadequate to assess the potential risk to human health as provided in paragraph (5).

"(4) Any State or political subdivision carrying out an assessment shall report the results of the assessment to the Administrator of such Agency, and shall include recommendations with respect to further activities which need to be carried out under this subsection or section 104. The Administrator of such Agency shall include the same recommendations in a report on the results of any assessment carried out directly by the Agency, and shall issue periodic reports which include the results of all the assessments carried out under this paragraph. Such assessments or other activities shall be reported after appropriate peer review.

"(5) For the purposes of this subsection and subsection (c)(4), the term 'health assessments' shall include preliminary assessments of the potential risk to human health posed by individual sites and facilities subject to this subsection, based on such factors as the nature and extent of contamination, the existence of potential for pathways of human exposure (including ground or surface water contamination, air emissions, and food chain contamination), the size and potential susceptibility of the community within the likely pathways of exposure, the comparison of expected human exposure levels to the short-term and long-term health effects associated with identified contaminants and any available recommended exposure or tolerance limits for such contaminants, and the comparison of existing morbidity and mortality data on diseases that may be associted with the observed levels of exposure. The assessment shall include an evaluation of the risks to the potentially affected population from all sources of such contaminants, including known point or nonpoint sources other than the site or facility in question. A purpose of such preliminary assessments shall be to help determine whether full-scale health or epidemiological studies and medical evaluations of exposed populations shall be undertaken.

"(6) In any case in which a health assessment performed under this subsection (including one required by section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) discloses the exposure of a population to the release of a hazardous substance, the costs of such health assessment may be recovered as a cost of response under section 107 of this Act from persons causing or contributing to such release of such hazardous substance or, in the case of multiple releases contributing to such exposure, to all such releases.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(j) EXPOSURE INFORMATION AND HEALTH ASSESSMENTS.—(1) Beginning on the date nine months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each completed application for a permit under subsection (c) for a landfill or surface impoundment shall be accompanied by information reasonably ascertainable by the owner or operator on the potential for the public to be exposed to hazardous wastes or hazardous constituents through releases related to the unit. At a minimum, such information must address:

"(A) reasonably foreseeable potential releases from both normal operations and accidents at the unit, including releases associated with transportation to or from the unit;

"(B) the potential pathways of human exposure to hazardous wastes or constituents resulting from the releases described under subparagraph (A); and

"(C) the potential magnitude and nature of the human exposure resulting from such releases.

The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment for which a completed application for a permit under subsection (c) has been submitted prior to such date shall submit the information required by this paragraph to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) no later than the date nine months after such date of enactment.

"(2) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) shall make the information required by paragraph (1), together with other relevant information, available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program), a landfill or a surface impoundment poses a substantial potential risk to human health, due to the existence of releases of hazardous constituents, the magnitude of contamination with hazardous constituents which may be the result of a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed to such release or contamination, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall conduct a health assessment in connection with such facility in accordance with section 111(m) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 and take other appropriate action with respect to such risks as authorized by section 104 (b) and (i) of such Act.

"(3) Any member of the public may submit evidence of releases of or exposure to hazardous constituents from such a facility, or as to the risks or health effects associated with such releases or exposure, to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Diseases Registry, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program).".

STUDY OF THE PROBLEMS ASSOCIATED WITH DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES GENERATED BY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

SEC. 37. (a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, the States, and appropriate educational associations, conduct a comprehensive study of problems associated with the accumulation, storage and disposal of hazardous wastes from educational institutions. The study shall include an investigation of the feasibility and availability of environmentally sound methods for the treatment, storage or disposal of hazardous waste from such institutions, taking into account the types and quantities of such waste which are generated by these institutions, and the nonprofit nature of these institutions.

(b) Not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Congress containing the findings of the study carried out under subsection (a).

(c) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "hazardous waste" means hazardous waste which is listed or identified under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act;

(2) the term "educational institution" includes, but shall not be limited to,

(A) secondary schools as defined in section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(B) institutions of higher education as defined in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

AUTHORITY FOR PERMIT TO CONSTRUCT HAZARDOUS WASTE TREATMENT, STORAGE, OR DISPOSAL FACILITY

SEC. 38. Section 3005(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) striking "a" immediately after "owning or operating" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "an existing facility or planning to construct a new";

(2) inserting in the second sentence "and the construction of any new facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of any such hazardous waste" immediately after "any such hazardous waste"; and

(3) striking the period after "permit" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That no permit shall be required under this section in order to construct a facility if such facility is constructed pursuant to an approval issued by the Administrator under section 6(e) of the Toxic Substance Control Act for the incineration of polychlorinated biphenyls and any person owning or operating such a facility may, at any time after operation or construction of such facility has begun, file an application for a permit pursuant to this section authorizing such facility to incinerate hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle.".

INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS

SEC. 39. (a) Section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(h) INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS.—(1) Whenever on the basis of any information the Administrator determines that there is or has been a release of hazardous waste into the environment from a facility qualifying for authorization to operate under section 3005(e) of this subtitle, the Administrator may issue an order requiring corrective action or such other response measure as he deems necessary to protect human health or the environment or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in the district in which the facility is located for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"(2) Any order issued under this subsection may include a suspension or revocation of authorization to operate under section 3005(e) of this subtitle, shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the required corrective action or other response measure, and shall specify a time for compliance. If the person or persons named in an order fails to comply with the order, the Administrator may assess and such person or persons shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each day of noncompliance with the order.".

(b) Subsection (b) of section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "issued under this section" immediately after "Any order".

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORRECTIVE ACTION

SEC. 40. Section 3004(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (as redesignated by this Act) is amended by inserting "(including financial responsibility for corrective action)" immediately after "and financial responsibility" in paragraph (6).

DIRECT ACTION AMENDMENTS

SEC. 41. (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(m) FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY PROVISIONS.—(1) Financial responsibility required by subsection (a) of this section may be established in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the Administrator is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"(2) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in any State court of the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim arising from conduct for which evidence of financial responsibility must be provided under this section may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing such evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(3) The total liability of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim; Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish the liability of any person under section 107 or 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or other applicable law.

"(4) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'guarantor' means any person, other than the owner or operator, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator under this section.".

(b)(1) Section 108 (c) and (d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim authorized by section 107 or 111 may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(d) The total liability under this Act of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal Statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim: Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish the liability of any person under sections 107 or 111 of this Act or other applicable law.".

(2) Section 108(b)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following: "Financial responsibility may be established by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the President is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.".

URANIUM MILL TAILINGS

SEC. 42. Nothing in the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 shall be construed to affect, modify, or amend the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended.

MINING WASTE

SEC. 43. Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"( ) If solid waste from the extraction, beneficiation or processing of ores and minerals, including phosphate rock and overburden from the mining of uranium ore, is subject to regulation under this subtitle, the Administrator is authorized to modify the requirements of subsections (b), (f)(1) (other than the requirement for ground water monitoring), and (g), in the case of landfills or surface impoundments receiving such solid waste, to take into account the special characteristics of such wastes, the practical difficulties associated with implementation of such requirements, and site-specific characteristics, including but not limited to the climate, geology, hydrology and soil chemistry at the site, so long as such modified requirements assure protection of human health and the environment.".

FUNDING OF REMEDIAL ACTION AT FACILITY OWNED BY A STATE OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISION BUT OPERATED PRIVATELY

SEC. 44. Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by amending section 104(c)(3)(C)(ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) 50 per centum (or such greater amount as the President may determine appropriate, taking into account the degree of responsibility of the State or political subdivision for the release) of the capital, future operation, and future maintenance costs of the response action relating to a release at a facility, primarily used for treatment, storage, or disposal, that was owned and operated by the State or a political subdivision thereof at the time of any disposal of hazardous substances in such facility. For the purpose of subparagraph (c)(ii) of this paragraph, the term 'facility' does not include navigable waters or the beds underlying those waters."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of any State which has paid, at any time after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, in excess of 10 percent of the costs of remedial action at a facility owned but not operated by such State or by a political subdivision thereof, the President shall use money in the Fund to provide reimbursement to such State for the amount of such excess.".

UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS CONTAINING OTHER THAN HAZARDOUS WASTE

SEC. 45. (a) The Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) is amended by adding a new part F as follows:

"PART F—REGULATION OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS CONTAINING SUBSTANCES OTHER THAN HAZARDOUS WASTE

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1451. For the purposes of this part, the term—

"(1) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(2) 'regulated substance' means (A) any substance defined in section 101(14) of Public Law 96-510, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (but not including substances regulated as hazardous wastes under the Solid Waste Disposal Act), and (B) petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure (60 degrees Fahrenheit and 14.7 pounds per square inch absolute);

"(3) 'owner' means (A) in the case of an underground storage tank in use on the date of enactment of this part or brought into use after that date, any person who owns an underground storage tank used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances, and (B) in the case of any underground storage tank previously in use but no longer in use on the date of enactment of this part, any person who owned such tank immediately prior to discontinuation of use;

"(4) 'operator' means any person in control of or having responsibility for the daily operation of the underground storage tank for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances;

"(5) 'person' means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, trust, consortium, joint venture, commercial entity, United States Government, State, municipality, commission, political subdivision of a State, or any interstate body;

"(6) 'release' means any actual spilling, leaking, emitting, discharging, escaping, leaching, or disposing from an underground storage tank into ground water, surface water or subsurface soils;

"(7) 'underground storage tank' means any tank, including underground pipes connected thereto, which is used to contain an accumulation of regulated substances and which is substantially or totally beneath the surface of the ground. This term does not include (i) aboveground storage tanks which are in compliance with national consensus codes and for which ninety per centum or more of the tank volume is above the ground surface, (ii) farm or residential underground storage tanks of one thousand one hundred gallons or less capacity used for storing motor fuel for noncommercial purposes, (iii) underground storage tanks used for storing heating oil for consumptive use on the premises where stored, (iv) septic tanks, (v) pipeline facilities regulated under the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1671, et seq.) or the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Act of 1978, as amended (40 U.S.C. 2001, et seq.), (vi) surface impoundments, pits, ponds or lagoons (vii) storm water and waste water collection systems, or (viii) flow-through process tanks;

"(8) 'nonoperational underground storage tank' means any tank which has been used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances which will not have regulated substances deposited or dispensed from the storage tank after the date of enactment of this part;

"(9) 'national consensus code' means any safety or fire standard or modification thereof which has been adopted and promulgated by a nationally recognized standards-producing organization, including National Fire Protection Association Standard Number 30, 'Flammable and Combustible Liquids Code,' and Western Fire Chiefs Association Uniform Fire Code Article Number 79, 'Flammable and Combustible Liquids'.

"NOTIFICATION AND CERTIFICATION

"SEC. 1452. (a)(1) UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—Within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, any owner of an underground storage tank shall notify the State or local agency or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location, and uses of such tank.

"(2) NONOPERATION UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—For any underground storage tank taken out of operation after January 1, 1974, the owner of such tank shall, within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, notify the State or local agency, or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tanks (unless the owner knows the tank subsequently was removed from the ground). Notice under this subsection shall specify to the extent known the date the tank was taken out of operation, the age on the date taken out of operation, the size, type and location of the tank, and the type and quantity of substances left stored in such tank on the date taken out of operation. This subsection shall not apply to tanks for which notice was given pursuant to section 103(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

"(3) Any owner which brings into use an underground storage tank after the initial notification under subsection (a)(1), shall notify the designated State or local agency or department within thirty days of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location and uses of such tank.

"(4) Beginning thirty days after the Administrator prescribes the form of notice pursuant to subsection (b)(2) and for eighteen months thereafter, any person who deposits regulated substances in an underground storage tank shall reasonably notify the owner or operator of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(5) Beginning thirty days after the Administrator issues new tank performance standards pursuant to subsection 1453(d) of this part, any person who sells a tank intended to be used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances shall notify the purchaser of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(b)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of enactment of this part, the Governors of each State shall designate the appropriate State agency or department or local agencies or departments to receive the notifications under subsection (a)(1),(2), or (3).

"(2) Within twelve months of enactment of this part, the Administrator in consultation with State and local officials designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1), and after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall prescribe the form of the notice and the information to be included in the notifications under subsection (a)(1), (2), or (3). In issuing the form of such notice, the Administrator shall take into account the effect on small businesses and other owners and operators.

"RELEASE DETECTION, PREVENTION, AND CORRECTION REGULATIONS

"SEC. 1453. (a) The Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall promulgate release detection, prevention and correction regulations applicable to all owners and operators of underground storage tanks used for storing regulated substances, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.

"(b) In issuing regulations under this section, the Administrator may distinguish between types, classes, and ages of underground storage tanks. In making such distinctions, the Administrator may take into consideration the following factors, including, but not limited to: location of the tanks, soil and climate conditions, uses of the tanks, history of maintenance, age of the tanks, current industry recommended practices, national consensus codes, hydrogeology, water table, size of the tanks, quantity of regulated substances periodically deposited in or dispensed from the tank, the technical and managerial capability of the owners and operators, and the compatibility of the regulated substance and the materials of which the underground storage tank is fabricated.

"(c) The regulations promulgated pursuant to this section shall include, but need not be limited to, the following requirements respecting all underground storage tanks—

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or maintaining a comparable system or methods or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing or comparable system;

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(5) taking underground storage tanks out of operation.

"(d) The Administrator shall promulgate regulations for maintaining evidence of financial responsibility as he deems necessary and desirable for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(e) The Administrator shall issue performance standards for underground storage tanks brought into use on or after the effective date of such standards. The performance standards for new underground storage tanks shall include, but need not be limited to, design, construction, installation, notification, compatibility and release detection standards.

"(f) Regulations issued pursuant to subsection (c) of this section and standards issued pursuant to subsection (d) of this section for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) shall be effective not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this part.

"(g) Until the effective date of the standards promulgated by the Administrator under subsection (d) of this section, and after ninety days of enactment of this part, no person shall install an underground storage tank for the purpose of storing regulated substances unless such tank is installed and brought into use in accordance with an enforced national consensus code(s). Not later than six months after this date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States his views on the national consensus code(s).

"APPROVAL OF STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1454. (a) Any State may thirty months after the date of enactment submit an underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction program for review and approval by the Administrator. The State must demonstrate that the State program includes the following elements and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements—

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing system;

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) standards of performance for new underground storage tanks;

"(5) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(6) taking underground storage tank out of operation; and

"(7) maintaining evidence of financial responsibility for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(b) A State's new tank standards submitted for approval under subsection (a)(4) shall be no less stringent than the performance standards promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to subsection 1453(c).

"(c) Corrective action and compensation programs financed by fees on tank owners and operators and administered by State or local agencies or departments may be submitted for approval under subsection (a)(7) as evidence of financial responsibility.

"(d)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of the date of receipt of a proposed State program, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, make a determination whether the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements.

"(2) If the Administrator determines that a State program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements, he shall approve the State program in lieu of the Federal program and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with respect to requirements related to control of underground storage tanks used to store regulated substances.

"(3) Any State may submit and the Administrator shall approve an underground storage tank release, detection, prevention, and correction program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) but does not include tanks containing other regulated substances, if the Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, makes a determination that the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements. If a State program shall be approved under this subsection, the State program shall be in lieu of a Federal program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(b) and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with regard to such tanks.

"(e) Whenever the Administrator determines after a public hearing that a State is not administering and enforcing a program authorized under this part in accordance with the requirements of this section, he shall so notify the State, and, if appropriate action is not taken within a reasonable time, not to exceed ninety days, the Administrator shall withdraw authorization of such program and reestablish enforcement of Federal regulations pursuant to this part.

"INSPECTIONS, MONITORING, AND TESTING

"SEC. 1455. (a) For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, any owner or operator of an underground storage tank or any tank subject to study under section 1459 that is used for storing regulated substances shall, upon request of any officer, employee or representative of the Environmental Protection Agency, duly designated by the Administrator, or upon request of any duly designated officer, employee, or representative of a State with an approved program, furnish information relating to such tanks, their associated equipment, their contents, conduct monitoring or testing, and permit such officer at all reasonable times to have access to, and to copy all records relating to such tanks. For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, such officers, employees, or representatives are authorized—

"(1) to enter at reasonable times any establishment or other place where an underground storage tank is located;

"(2) to inspect and obtain samples from any person of any such regulated substances and conduct monitoring or testing of the tanks, associated equipment, contents, or surrounding soils, air, surface water or ground water. Each such inspection shall be commenced and completed with reasonable promptness.

"(b)(1) Any records, reports, or information obtained from any persons under this section shall be available to the public, except that upon a showing satisfactory to the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) by any person that records, reports, or information, or a particular part thereof, to which the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) or any officer, employee, or representative thereof has access under this section if made public, would divulge information entitled to protection under section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code, such information or particular portion thereof shall be considered confidential in accordance with the purposes of that section, except that such record, report, document, or information may be disclosed to other officers, employees, or authorized representatives of the United States concerned with carrying out this Act, or when relevant in any proceeding under this Act.

"(2) Any person not subject to the provisions of section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code who knowingly and willfully divulges or discloses any information entitled to protection under this subsection shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.

"(3) In submitting data under this Act, a person required to provide such data may—

"(A) designate the date which such person believes is entitled to protection under this subsection, and

"(B) submit such designated date separately from other data submitted under this Act.

A designation under this paragraph shall be made in writing and in such manner as the Administrator may prescribe.

"(4) Nothwithstanding any limitation contained in this section or any other provision of law, all information reported to, or otherwise obtained, by the Administrator (or any representative of the Administrator) under this Act shall be made available, upon written request of any duly authorized committee of the Congress, to such committee (including records, reports, or information obtained by representatives of the Evironmental Protection Agency).

"FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 1456. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever on the basis of any information, the Administrator determines that any person is in violation of any requirement of this part, the Administrator may issue an order requiring compliance within a reasonable specified time period or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in which the violation occurred for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"(2) In the case of a violation of any requirement of this part where such violation occurs in a State with a program approved under section 1454, the Administrator shall give notice to the State in which such violation has occurred prior to issuing an order or commencing a civil action under this section.

"(3) If such violator fails to comply with the order within the time specified in the order, he shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day of continued noncompliance.

"(b) Any order shall become final unless, no later than thirty days after the order is served, the person or persons named therein request a public hearing. Upon such request the Administrator shall promptly conduct a public hearing. In connection with any proceeding under this section the Administrator may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of relevant papers, books, and documents, and may promulgate rules for discovery procedures.

"(c) Any order issued under this section shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation, specify a reasonable time for compliance, and assess a penalty, if any, which the Administrator determines is reasonable taking into account the seriousness of the violation and any good faith efforts to comply with the applicable requirements.

"(d) Any owner who knowingly fails to notify or submits false information pursuant to section 1452(a) to a State or local agency or department designated pursuant to section 1452(b)(1) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for which notification is not given or false information is submitted.

"(e) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing a regulated substance who fails to comply with the release detection, prevention, and correction regulations as promulgated by the Administrator or a State program approved pursuant to section 1454, shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for each day of violation.

"(f) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing regulated substances who fails to comply with the provisions of section 1453(g) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank and for each day of violation.

"FEDERAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 1457. Each department, agency, and instrumentality of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Federal Government having jurisdiction over any underground storage tank as defined in section 1451(7) and used for the purpose of storing regulated substances as defined in subsection 1451(2), shall be subject to and comply with all Federal, State, interstate, and local requirements, both substantive and procedural in the same manner, and to the same extent, as any person is subject to such requirements, including payment of reasonable service charges. Neither the United States, nor any agent, employee, or officer thereof, shall be immune or exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt any underground storage tanks of any department, agency, or instrumentality in the executive branch from compliance with such a requirement if he determines it to be in the paramount interest of the United States to do so. No such exemption shall be granted due to lack of appropriation unless the President shall have specifically requested such appropriation as a part of the budgetary process and the Congress shall have failed to make available such requested appropriations. Any exemption shall be for a period not in excess of one year, but additional exemptions may be granted for periods not to exceed one year upon the President's making a new determination. The President shall report each January to the Congress all exemptions from the requirements of this section granted during the preceding calendar year, together with his reason for granting each such exemption.

"STATE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 1458. Nothing in this part shall preclude or deny any right of any State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any regulation, requirement or standard of performance respecting underground storage tanks that is more stringent than a regulation, requirement, or standard of performance in effect under this part.

"STUDY OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS

"SEC. 1459. (a) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this part, the administrator shall complete a study of underground storage tanks used for the storage of regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B). Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment, the Administrator shall complete a study of all other underground storage tanks. Such study shall include an assessment of the ages, types (including methods of manufacture, coatings, protection systems, the compatibility of the construction materials and the installation methods) and locations (including the climate of the locations) of such tanks; soil conditions, water tables, and the hydrogeology of tank locations; the relationship between the foregoing factors and the likelihood of releases from underground storage tanks; the effectiveness and costs of inventory systems, tank testing, and leak detection systems; and such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate.

"(b) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall conduct a study regarding the underground storage tanks exempted in subsection 1451(7) (ii) and (iii). Such study shall include estimates of the number and location of such tanks and an analysis of the extent to which there may be releases or threatened releases from such tanks into the environment.

"(c) Upon completion of the studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall submit reports to the President and to the Congress containing the results of the studies and recommendations respecting whether or not such tanks should be subject to the preceding provisions of this part.

"(d)(1) If any owner or operator (excepting an agency, department, or instrumentality of the United States Government, a State or a political subdivision thereof) shall incur costs, including the loss of business opportunity, due to the closure or interruption of operation of an underground storage tank solely for the purpose of conducting studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall provide such person fair and equitable reimbursement for such costs.

"(2) All claims for reimbursement shall be filed with the Administrator not later than ninety days after the closure or interruption which gives rise to the claim.

"(3) Reimbursements made under this section shall be from funds appropriated by the Congress pursuant to the authorization contained in subsection 1460(a) of this part.

"(4) For purposes of judicial review, a determination by the Administrator under this subsection shall be considered final agency action.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1460. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988 to be used to make grants to the States for purposes of assisting the States in the implementation of approved State underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction programs.".

(b) Section 1448(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting after the words "any regulation for State underground injection control programs under section 1421," the following: "any regulation for underground storage tanks under section 1453"

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. This involves amending the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: To amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize funds for fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to amend the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the phrase "Solid Waste Disposal Act of 1984" be substituted for the phrase "Solid Waste Disposal Act of 1983" wherever it appears.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer [Mr. ABDNOR] appointed Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. LAUTENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, as chairman of the full committee, I congratulate the managers of the bill on both sides, Senator CHAFEE and Senator MITCHELL, and the staff for the tremendous work it has done, all of which has contributed to our being able to pass this bill in one afternoon. I think it is an outstanding performance by staff and by the managers. I feel very happy for them and for the entire committee of the Senate because they were able to do it this expeditiously.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the chairman of the committee yield to me?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am delighted to yield to my friend.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The comments made by the able chairman of our committee [Mr. STAFFORD] I think are not just pleasant to hear but there has been in a sense today, with a 93 to nothing vote, an indication within this body that we desire very much to place our imprint upon strong environmental measures for the welfare of the people of this country.

Perhaps it is not interesting, but I remember the first vote that I cast here on March 9, 1933. We had before us the Emergency Banking Act. As some will recall from reading, the President of the United States had closed all of the banks of the country only 3 days previous. But I do remember that the President, I have always felt, used sometimes unorthodox methods but he always preserved orthodox institutions.

As I look back, it was without a dissenting vote that we passed the Emergency Banking Act on that day.

This is not the same type of measure, to be sure, but once again the Senate has acted with a vote of 93 to nothing. I join the able chairman of the committee again in saying to Senators CHAFEE and MITCHELL, and to all members of the committee and the staff, but particularly to the Senate as a body, the approval given is a further definite demonstration to the people of America that the Congress of the United States has taken some steps that perhaps some thought were a little too quickly taken to plant our feet firmly on a strong environmental program not just for the Nation but for the benefit of the men and women and children of this good land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank my dear friend for his comments.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 500, S. 757, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to thank the distinguished chairman of the committee and the ranking member, Senators STAFFORD and RANDOLPH, and, of course, my colleague on the subcommittee, Senator MITCHELL, for their splendid help on this bill. This is the most significant piece of environmental legislation passed in the last 2 years. People say, "Well, isn't it wonderful; it passed in 2½ hours."

Mr. President, that is not happenstance. It happens because, first of all, there was a lot of work done in the subcommittee and the full committee by, most of all, the staff, Steve Shimberg and Charlene Sturbitts, who worked so hard in meeting with those who had problems and trying to iron them out. Thus, we did not have amendments on which we had to vote in connection with this difficult piece of legislation.

Also, I want to thank Phil Cummings and Kathy Cudlipp for their help. We really are grateful. I think we have achieved a significant step forward today in the passage of this legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I merely want to add that none of this would have been possible without the leadership, the dedication and the hard work of Senator CHAFEE who once again demonstrated that he is, in fact, one of the outstanding leaders of our Nation in protecting the very basics of human life in our Nation: clean air, clean water, and unpoisoned land.

For his efforts, I thank him in behalf of all those concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, for just a moment, this is my committee perhaps more than any other committee on which I serve. I would feel remiss if I did not express my congratulations as well to the Senators and the staffs, to Senator RANDOLPH, and all concerned. This is a big piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I can remember when we first put it on the list. I had a string of "notifies" and "holds" and other carryings on like that that stretched half way down the page. But in the tradition of this committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee, on both sides of the aisle, both Republicans and Democrats, and the administration, issues were resolved and good legislation resulted. I congratulate all.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MELCHER:

S. 2860. A bill to amend the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Poultry Products Inspection Act to increase the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to refuse to provide, or withdraw, inspection service; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

MEAT AND POULTRY INSPECTION IMPROVEMENT ACT

● Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, today I am introducing the "Meat and Poultry Inspection Improvement Act," a bill to protect consumers, the packing industry and poultry and livestock producers by enhancing the Secretary of Agriculture's authority to refuse to provide, or withdraw, meat and poultry inspection services from slaughter and processing plants that operate with disregard for Federal inspection laws. A very few plants have butchered dead or diseased animals with poor sanitation that could endanger consumers. A very few have threatened, harassed or bribed Government inspectors. I am not a lawyer but I am a veterinarian. These few bad apples cannot cause me to be in doubt that the meat on the table is good and wholesome.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture requires greater authority to efficiently and effectively deal with those who violate inspection laws and, even after convictions, exploit current administrative and judicial processes to circumvent sanctions imposed for their offenses. This bill would enable the Secretary of Agriculture to take expeditious action and employ appropriate measures to safeguard the public health, as well as the integrity of the Federal inspection program.

Several recent occurrences involving serious violations of the Federal Meat Inspection Act graphically illustrate the necessity for this legislation to ensure that the Federal inspection program continues to effectively protect consumers and to ensure a strong market for the livestock producer.

Late last year, a report on an NBC investigative news show alleged that the Cattle King Co., a meat packing plant in Denver operated by Rudolph G. "Butch" Stanko, Jr. and Henry Stanko, had consistently ignored Federal law by slaughtering dead cattle without inspection. Because this company produced one-fourth of the ground beef used in the national school lunch program, the Secretary of Agriculture called for an immediate halt to its distribution. USDA has since determined that the meat could not be used for human food.

A complaint has now been brought by USDA to withdraw inspection services from all Stanko-affiliated plants. This complaint is based on a consent order stemming from previous convictions related to handling food that required these companies to adhere to all provisions of the meat inspection act. Although the Cattle King plant has since voluntarily closed and several individuals involved in the case have pleaded guilty to various violations of the Federal meat inspection law, under current law it could have remained in operation until the resolution of the administrative hearing and the appeals process, actions that could have taken several years.

In another case deserving of its notoriety, Weyandt & Sons in Pennsylvania operated a clandestine slaughter operation over an extended period of time that provided meat from diseased cattle for retail sale in the Philadelphia area. For a period of almost 1 year, from the time of the raid on the plant by Federal agents that stopped the illegal operation, to the indictments and subsequent convictions, to the eventual removal from the company of the owner, the plant was able to continue to operate under Federal inspection.

USDA must contend not only with those who secretively carry out their illicit activities, but also with those who flaunt their disregard for the law with impunity. Leopold Koppel, the owner of the Fort Plain Packing Co. of New York, pleaded guilty last October in a U.S. District Court to felony charges of conspiracy to defraud the Government and to violate meat inspection laws. Koppel admitted that over several years he violated numerous inspection regulations by consistently and methodically harassing and intimidating meat inspectors in order to prevent them from carrying out official duties.

Despite Koppel's blatant attempts to ignore Federal inspection laws, USDA lacked authority under current law to effectively and quickly respond to his calculated strategy to interfere with the inspection program. Not until evidence of wrongdoing had been gathered, presented in court and a conviction handed down could the Department take the necessary steps to remove inspection from the Koppel plant. Following that conviction, USDA requested that inspection be withdrawn, and an administrative hearing began in June. Pending the outcome of that hearing and appeal options, Fort Plain Packing is continuing its operations—under Mr. Koppel's direction.

The delays inherent in the system as a result of administrative hearings and judicial appeals often work to the advantage of those who violate the law. In one case involving a Michigan meat packer, the hearing and appeals processes have continued for 7 years. USDA brought a complaint to withdraw inspection from David Fenster of Utica Packing Co. based on his conviction for attempted bribery of a Federal inspector. The case has gone through four reviews by administrative law judges and is presently in its third appeal in the courts.

Incidents like these—perpetrated by only a small segment of the packing industry—bring significant harm to credible packers who conscientiously adhere to Federal inspection law and seriously impair consumer confidence in our country's meat and poultry supply. Moreover, they result in damaging economic pressures on ranchers and farmers—including those in my own State of Montana—who depend on a sound inspection system and suffer when adverse publicity concerning the meat and poultry industries surfaces.

Mr. President, the Meat and Poultry Inspection Improvement Act represents one element of a five-point program USDA designed to further strengthen the Federal inspection program and maintain consumer confidence in meat and poultry products. That five-point program also includes a National Academy of Sciences review of the effectiveness of inspection approaches, more intensive regulation of plants with a poor history of compliance with inspection regulations, tighter eligibility requirements for plants selling meat and poultry to the Federal Government and active pursuit, in cooperation with the Department of Justice, to vigorously pursue criminal prosecutions and sanctions for food safety offenses.

The legislative proposal I am introducing today complements the other four components of that program by incorporating an integral factor necessary to ensure its success. It provides the statutory basis necessary to counter those who by violating the inspection laws potentially negate all other efforts to make certain only safe and wholesome products receive USDA approval.

Current enforcement authorities provided under the meat and poultry inspection laws all too frequently inhibit USDA's timely response to serious meat act violations. For example, the Secretary of Agriculture can withdraw inspection only for felony, or multiple misdemeanor convictions, related to the handling of food, and then only after an administrative hearing and judicial appeals process that can take many months, and sometimes years, to exhaust. He has no specific authority to withdraw inspection in cases where his inspectors are threatened or assaulted while carrying out official duties, although under the Department's general rulemaking authority inspection can be withheld in such instances until steps have been taken to prevent recurrences. In addition, the Secretary cannot effectively respond to recurring sanitation or inspection violations since these do not contitute a legal basis under the present law for anything more than a temporary withholding of inspection services until a particular problem has been corrected.

The bill I am introducing today would increase the Secretary of Agriculture's authority to withdraw or refuse inspection services when a determination is made that an individual is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection because of a conviction for any violation of law involving transactions in food, or of any felony. The Secretary also could determine an individual unfit for inspection if that person, or anyone responsibly connected with a company, threatened, assaulted or in any way interfered with a Federal inspector performing official inspection duties. Finally, the bill would permit the Secretary to withdraw inspection if an individual has recurringly failed to comply with sanitation or other requirements of inspection laws.

The Meat and Poultry Inspection Improvement Act, in addition, would permit the Secretary to summarily withdraw Federal inspection services, pending an expedited hearing, in cases where an immediate response is imperative to protect the public health and welfare or to guarantee that Federal inspectors can safely and effectively execute their duties. However, those slaughter and processing plants that consistently fail to abide by certain sanitation or other inspection requirements, sanitation, for example, would first be notified of their failure to comply with USDA regulations and afforded an opportunity to demonstrate that any deficiency had been corrected and would not recur.

This proviso would negate any arbitrary or capricious action by the Secretary against any company, and would allay concerns voiced by some segments of the packing industry about the potential for abuse of the summary withdrawal authority for recurring violations. More importantly, what should be recognized is that no company operating within the Federal Government's inspection guidelines need fear that the authority would ever be used against them.

The industry has also questioned whether due process rights might be infringed upon by this added authority. Because such authority represents a critical part of this legislation, both USDA's own general counsel and the Department of Justice have carefully studied the matter and have issued legal opinions supporting the constitutionality of this provision, assuring the Secretary that he does indeed have such authority when the health and welfare of the public is endangered.

Mr. President, all parties concerned with this issue have much to gain from this bill. Consumers would benefit from the further assurance of safe and wholesome meat and poultry and would demonstrate their faith in that assurance at the marketplace. Ranchers and farmers would find ready and profitable markets for their livestock and poultry. Reputable packers would be protected from the unfair economic advantages others in their industry gain by attempting to circumvent inspection laws. All who have an interest in this Nation's meat and poultry supply—the most plentiful and the safest in the world—should support this bill's purpose, recognize its necessity and urge its enactment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and explanatory material be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2860

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Meat and Poultry Inspection Improvement Act."

FEDERAL MEAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 2. Section 401 of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 671) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 401. (a) The Secretary may (for such period, or indefinitely, as the Secretary deems necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act) refuse to provide, or withdraw, inspection service under title I of this Act with respect to any establishment if the Secretary determines, after opportunity for a hearing is accorded to the applicant for, or recipient of, such service, that such applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection under title I because—

"(1) the applicant or recipient, or any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has been convicted, in any Federal or State court, of (A) any violation of law based upon the acquiring, handling, or distributing of adulterated, misbranded, or deceptively packaged food or upon fraud, bribery, or extortion in connection with transactions in food or (B) any felony, or

"(2) the applicant or recipient, any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, or any employee or agent of the applicant or recipient acting within the scope of such employment or agency, has threatened to forcibly assault, resist, oppose, impede, intimidate, or interfere with or has forcibly assaulted, resisted, opposed, impeded, intimidated, or interfered with any person while engaged in or on account of the performance of official duties under this Act:

"Provided, That, the Secretary may direct that, pending opportunity for an expedited hearing and the final determination and order under paragraph (a) and any judicial review thereof, inspection service shall be denied or suspended if the Secretary deems such action necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties under this Act and so notifies the affected applicant for or recipient of such service.

"(b)(1) The Secretary may (for such period, or indefinitely, as the Secretary deems necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act) refuse to provide, or withdraw, inspection service under title I of this Act with respect to any establishment if the Secretary determines, after opportunity for a hearing is accorded to the applicant for, or recipient of, such service, that the applicant or recipient, or any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has recurringly failed to comply with sanitation or other requirements of this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder.

"(2) The Secretary may direct that, pending opportunity for an expedited hearing with respect to any refusal or withdrawal of inspection service and the final determination and order under paragraph (b) and any judicial review thereof, inspection service shall be denied or suspended if the Secretary deems such action necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties under this Act:

"Provided, That, before such action is taken, the applicant for, or recipient of, such service has been given notice of such violations and an opportunity to demonstrate that compliance with the Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder has been achieved and will be maintained, and the applicant or recipient has failed to so demonstrate, as determined by the Secretary.

"(c) For the purpose of this section (1) the term "person" means any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other business unit, and (2) a person shall be deemed to be responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient if such person is or was a partner, officer, director, holder, or owner of 10 per centum or more of its voting stock or employee in a managerial or executive capacity.

"(d) The determination and order of the Secretary with respect to withdrawal or refusal of inspection service under this section shall be final and conclusive unless the affected applicant for, or recipient of, inspection service files application for judicial review within thirty days after the effective date of such order; and inspection service shall be withdrawn or refused as of the effective date of such order pending any judicial review thereof unless the Secretary directs otherwise. Judicial review of any such order shall be in the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the applicant for, or recipient of, inspection service has its principal place of business or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and shall be upon the record upon which the determination and order are based. The provisions of section 204 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (42 Stat. 162, as amended; 7 U.S.C. 194), shall be applicable to appeals taken under this section.

"(e) The provisions of this section shall be in addition to and not derogate from any other provision of this Act for refusal or withdrawal of inspection service under title I.".

SEC. 3. Section 404 of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 674) is amended by deleting the words "section 7(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 7(e) and 401".

POULTRY PRODUCTS INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 4. Section 18(a) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 467(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. (a)(1) The Secretary may (for such period, or indefinitely, as the Secretary deems necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act) refuse to provide, or withdraw, inspection service under this Act with respect to any establishment if the Secretary determines, after opportunity for a hearing is accorded to the applicant for, or recipient of, such service, that such applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection under this Act because—

"(A) the applicant or recipient, or any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has been convicted, in any Federal or State court, of (i) any violation of law based upon the acquiring, handling, or distributing of adulterated, misbranded, or deceptively packaged food or upon fraud, bribery, or extortion in connection with transaction in food or (ii) any felony, or

"(B) the applicant or recipient, any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, or any employee or agent of the applicant or recipient acting within the scope of such employment or agency, has threatened to forcibly assault, resist, oppose, impede, intimidate, or interfere with or has forcibly assaulted, resisted, opposed, impeded, intimidated, or interfered with any person while engaged in or on account of the performance of official duties under this Act:

"Provided, That, the Secretary may direct that, pending opportunity for an expedited hearing and the final determination and order under paragraph (a)(1) and any judicial review thereof, inspection service shall be denied or suspended if the Secretary deems such action necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties under this Act and so notifies the affected applicant for or recipient of such service.

"(2)(A) The Secretary may (for such period, or indefinitely, as the Secretary deems necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act) refuse to provide, or withdraw, inspection service under this Act with respect to any establishment if the Secretary determines, after opportunity for a hearing is accorded to the applicant for, or recipient of, such service, that the applicant or recipient, or any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has recurringly failed to comply with sanitation or other requirements of this Act or the regulations promulgated thereunder.

"(B) The Secretary may direct that, pending opportunity for an expedited hearing with respect to any refusal or withdrawal of inspection service and the final determination and order under paragraph (2)(A) and any judicial review thereof, inspection service shall be denied or suspended if the Secretary deems such action necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties under this Act:

"Provided, That, before such action is taken, the applicant for or recipient of, such service has been given notice of such violations and an opportunity to demonstrate that compliance with the Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder has been achieved and will be maintained, and the applicant or recipient has failed to so demonstrate, as determined by the Secretary.

"(3) For the purpose of this subsection a person shall be deemed to be responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient if such person is or was a partner, officer, director, holder, or owner of 10 per centum or more of its voting stock or employee in a managerial or executive capacity.

"(4) The provisions of this subsection shall be in addition to and not derogate from any other provision of this Act for refusal or withdrawal of inspection service under this Act.".

SEC. 5. Section 18(c) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 467(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting immediately before the period at the end of the first sentence: "; and where such determination and order is pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, inspection service shall be withdrawn or refused as of the effective date of such order pending any judicial review thereof unless the Secretary directs otherwise"; and

(2) by deleting "Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, as amended" and inserting in lieu thereof "Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (42 Stat. 162, as amended; 7 U.S.C. 194),".

SEC. 6. Section 6(c) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 455(c)) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof ", and the Secretary may remove inspectors from any establishment which fails to destroy any condemned carcass, part, or other poultry product".

ANALYSIS OF DRAFT LEGISLATIVE PROPOSAL TO INCREASE AUTHORITY TO REFUSE TO PROVIDE OR TO WITHDRAW INSPECTION SERVICE

Sections 401 and 18(a) of the FMIA and PPIA, respectively, currently authorize the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing, to refuse to provide or to withdraw inspection service based upon a determination that the applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection because the applicant or recipient (or anyone responsibly connected) has been convicted in court of any of various violations of law. The proposal would amend these sections by expanding the grounds on which inspection service could be refused or withdrawn and the Secretary's authority to respond to various circumstances.

The existing provisions would be modified to provide a consistent and somewhat broader set of violations of law by the applicant or recipient or any person (defined to include any business unit) responsibly connected therewith (proposed sections 401(a)(1) and 18(a)(1)(A), respectively). The Secretary also would be able to refuse or withdraw inspection service based on a determination that the applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection when the applicant or recipient, any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, or its employees or agents has threatened to or has forcibly assaulted, intimidated, or in other ways interferred with persons performing official duties (proposed sections 401(a)(2) and 18(a)(1)(B), respectively). As regards either of these grounds for refusal or withdrawal, the proposal would authorize the Secretary, if such action is deemed necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties and so notifies the affected applicant or recipient, to deny or suspend inspection service pending opportunity for an expedited hearing and the final determination and order and any judicial review thereof (proviso to proposed sections 401(a) and 18(a)(1), respectively).

In addition, the proposal would authorize the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing, to refuse to provide or withdraw inspection service when the applicant or recipient, or any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has recurringly failed to comply with sanitation or other requirements of the Act or regulations (proposed sections 401(b) and 18(a)(2), respectively). These proposed provisions also would authorize the Secretary to deny or suspend inspection service if such action is deemed necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health or welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties; however, before taking such action, the applicant or recipient would have to be notified of such violations and given an opportunity to demonstrate that compliance with the Act and regulations has been achieved and will be maintained, and have failed to so demonstrate, as determined by the Secretary (proviso to proposed sections 401(b) and 18(a)(2), respectively).

The proposal would further amend sections 401 and 18 of the FMIA and PPIA, respectively, by providing that when the Secretary directs that inspection service be withdrawn or refused, inspection service would be withdrawn or refused as of the effective date of the Secretary's order pending any judicial review thereof unless the Secretary directs otherwise (proposed section 401(c) and proposed amendment to section 18(c), respectively). Finally, the proposal would clarify when a person is deemed to be "responsibly connected" with an applicant or recipient; it would amend section 401 of the FMIA to provide for judicial review in the United States Courts of Appeal of the refusal or withdrawal of inspection service (as the PPIA currently provides) (see also the amendment to section 404 of the FMIA); and it would clarify the Secretary's existing authority under other sections of the FMIA and the PPIA (see section 18(b)) by explicity stating in section 6(c) of the PPIA that inspectors may be removed from establishments that fail to destroy condemned carcasses, parts, or other poultry products.

MEAT AND POULTRY INSPECTION IMPROVEMENT ACT—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 2

Section 401 of the Federal Meat Inspection Act (FMIA) currently authorizes the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing, to refuse to provide or to withdraw inspection service based upon a determination that the applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection under the FMIA because the applicant or recipient (or anyone responsibly connected) has been convicted in court of any of various violations of law. Section 2 of the proposed Act amends this section by expanding the grounds on which inspection service could be refused or withdrawn.

The existing provision would be modified to include a set of violations of law by the applicant or recipient or any person (defined to include any business unit) responsibly connected therewith that is somewhat broader and consistent with the Poultry Products Inspection Act (PPIA) (proposed section 401(a)(1)). This section of the proposed Act also authorizes the Secretary to refuse or withdraw inspection service based on a determination that the applicant or recipient is unfit to engage in any business requiring inspection when the applicant or recipient, any person responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, or its employees or agents has threatened to or has forcibly assaulted, intimidated, or in other ways interfered with persons performing official duties (proposed section 402(a)(2)). Section 2 further amends section 401 by authorizing the Secretary, if such action is deemed necessary in the public interest in order to protect the health and welfare of consumers or to assure the safe and effective performance of official duties and so notifies the affected applicant or recipient, to deny or suspend inspection service pending an expedited hearing and the final determination and order and any judicial review thereof (proviso to proposed section 401(a)).

As is the case under the current provisions of the FMIA, a conviction of a felony or other specified crimes would not, in itself, result in the refusal or withdrawal of inspection service. The conviction must be shown to make the applicant or recipient "unfit" to engage in business requiring inspection under the FMIA. In this connection, the Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit recently held that mitigating circumstances were material and relevant to a determination by the Secretary as to whether inspection should be denied or withdrawn under section 401 of the FMIA. (Utica Packing Company and David Fenster v. Bergland, et al., No. 811383 (6th Cir. Sept. 2, 1982).) However, as the Court noted, "The more closely the conduct strikes to the policies of the Federal Meat Inspection Act, the more likely it alone will support a determination of unfitness regardless of the mitigating facts present". The position of the Court of Appeals in that case has been adopted by the Department for all cases arising under section 401. It is not the intent to revise the Department's policy in this regard.

With respect to the denial or withdrawal of inspection service for threats to and forcible assaults, etc., it is noted that the Department currently has no specific authority in either the FMIA or PPIA for withdrawal of inspection for such actions. However, in consultation with the Department of Justice, the Department has issued regulations under the general rulemaking authority in the FMIA and PPIA (9 C.F.R. 305.5(a) and 381.29(d), respectively) concerning this matter. Those regulations provide that if a program employee has been threatened with forcible assault, or has been forcibly assaulted, intimidated or interfered with, in or on account of the performance of official duties, by an operator of an establishment of any official, employee, or agent thereof, inspection may be temporarily suspended until the establishment satisfactorily justifies the incident, takes effective steps to prevent a recurrence, or provides acceptable assurance that there will not be any recurrances. The proposed amendment would provide explicit authority to take action and protect employees of the Department and avoid impairment of proper inspection.

With respect to the denial or suspension of inspection service by the Secretary pending opportunity for an expedited hearing and any judicial review of the final determination and order, it is the intent to limit such actions to convictions that strike at the heart of the FMIA, such as convictions relating to the intentional distribution of unwholesome or otherwise adulterated or misbranded product which could endanger the public health or welfare or convictions involving intent to defraud or bribery of an inspector or other employee of the Department or extortion. Also, it is the intent that such action be taken where an inspector or other program employee has been threatened with or has been forcibly assaulted, intimidated, or otherwise interfered with in such a manner that inspection must be suspended so as to assure the safe and effective performance of duties by program employees.

In practice, when situations such as the use or threatened use of physical violence occur, inspectors assigned to the affected plant are instructed by their supervisor to leave the premises. This has the effect of shutting down the plant's operations since the company may not operate unless there is an assigned inspector on site. The company is immediately notified of the action and given the opportunity to present its views at an expedited, informal hearing before a Department official. This usually occurs within 8 to 24 hours, and in the vast majority of cases leads to resolution of the matter. Many times, resolution is achieved by removing or isolating a company employee. In other cases, mitigating circumstances obviate the need for any change at all. When the company is not satisfied with the changes desired to regain the assignment of inspectors, a short-term solution may be agreed upon and a subsequent formal hearing held before an administrative law judge. However, it is extremely rare that these situations reach that level. Here again, it is the Department's intent to continue current practices in this regard.

In addition, Section 2 of the proposed Act amends section 401 of the FMIA to authorize the Secretary to refuse to provide or withdraw inspection service when the applicant or recipient, or anyone responsibly connected with the applicant or recipient, has recurringly failed to comply with sanitation or other requirements of the Act or regulations (proposed sctions 401(b)). Under this new authority, a decision by the Secretary to refuse to provide or withdraw inspection would not require a determination of unfitness. The authority to initiate a complaint would be delegated no lower than the Administrator of the Food Safety and Inspection Service.

Inspectors in carrying out their duties may, overtime, point out a number of plant deficiencies that need correction. This alone would not constitute a basis for refusing or withdrawing inspection service as provided in this section. In taking such action, these conditions coupled with a confirmed disregard and failure to make needed corrections on a continuing or repeated basis or a pattern of neglect would be considered.

Recurring failures would have to be documented over a period of time (anywhere from a number of months to years) and could include sanitation failures such as rodent infestation or use of filthy equipment in processing, removal of abnormal tissues to mask disease, use or substitution of unapproved or unlisted ingredients, and/or practices leading to economic deception. Documentation of recurring failures would arise from record such as in-depth plant reviews, sanitation histories, laboratory product sampling results, product handling violations, warning letters and other records prepared by the FSIS Compliance Division, convictions, delistments by foreign governments, reports from the Office of the Inspector General or General Accounting Office, import/export records, and consumer and "whistleblower" complaints.

Finally, as with other bases for refusal or withdrawal, the Secretary is authorized under this proposed subsection to deny or suspend inspection service for recurring failures. However, before taking such action in these cases, the applicant or recipient has to be notified of such violations and given an opportunity to demonstrate that compliance with the Act and regulations has been achieved and will be maintained, and fail to so demonstrate, as determined by the Secretary (proviso to proposed section 401(b)).

Section 2 further amends section 401 of the FMIA by providing that when the Secretary, after opportunity for a hearing, directs that inspection service be withdrawn or refused, such action will be taken as of the effective date of the Secretary's order pending any judicial review thereof unless the Secretary directs otherwise (proposed section 401(d)). Finally, the proposed Act clarifies when a person is deemed to be "responsibly connected" with an applicant or recipient (proposed section 401(c)); and it provides for judicial review in the United States Courts of Appeal of the refusal or withdrawal of inspection service (as the PPIA currently provides) (proposed section 401(d)) (see also the conforming amendment in Section 3).

SECTION 3

Section 3 of the proposed Act amends section 404 of the FMIA to exclude section 401, consistent with a change made by Section 2 (see proposed section 401(d) of the FMIA).

SECTION 4

Section 4 of the proposed Act amends section 18(a) of the PPIA to include the same authority to refuse to provide or withdraw inspection service (with provisions for denying or suspending such service) as Section 2 of the proposed Act provides under section 401 of the FMIA (see proposed section 401 (a)-(c) and (e)).

SECTION 5

Section 5 of the proposed Act amends section 18(c) of the PPIA to include the same provision regarding withdrawal or refusal of inspection service as of the effective date of the order pending any judicial review, unless the Secretary directs otherwise, as Section 2 of the proposed Act provides under section 401 of the FMIA (see proposed section 401(d)).

SECTION 6

Section 6 of the proposed Act clarifies the PPIA by amending section 6(c) to state explicitly that inspectors may be removed from establishments which fail to destroy condemned carcasses, parts, or other poultry products (see section 18(b) of the PPIA).●

By Mr. ABDNOR (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. 2861. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make available the Pick-Sloan Missouri basin program pumping power to the Hilltop and Gray Goose irrigation projects; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HILLTOP AND GRAY GOOSE IRRIGATION PROJECTS

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, today, along with Senator PRESSLER, I am introducing legislation to provide for delivery of a small portion of South Dakota's allocation of Pick-Sloan Missouri basin program pumping power to the Hilltop and Gray Goose irrigation projects. Congressman DASCHLE is introducing identical legislation in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, each of these projects is organized as a public irrigation district under State law; each is financed by the Federal Government, through the Farmers Home Administration; and each is in very difficult financial straits due to large and rapid increases in pumping power costs.

The Hilltop and Gray Goose irrigators have discussed this matter with their power supplier, East River Electric Cooperative, Inc.; and following intense and extended deliberations, East River's board of directors voted narrowly not to oppose the introduction of legislation on behalf of Hilltop and Gray Goose. The board is cognizant of the importance of reasonable pumping power costs and does not want to contribute to the demise of these projects.

According to former Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior Dan Beard, over 170 megawatts of power and over 310 million kilowatt-hours of energy are allocated to irrigation development in our State; but as of this year not one, single kilowatt-hour has been delivered as promised.

At long last we are on the verge of seeing the Federal commitment honored to some small extent, however. Under the provisions of section 5 of Public Law 97-273, irrigation pumping power will be delivered to several Indian projects, and the bill my colleagues and I have introduced today will make power available to two small non-Indian projects as well.

As I said, these projects are in dire straits due to escalating pumping costs, and the provision of a small portion of South Dakota's low-cost Missouri basin program irrigation pumping power will help to ensure their survival.

Mr. President, section 5 of Public Law 97-273 states that Pick-Sloan Missouri basin program pumping power "* * * shall also be made available to such additional irrigation projects as may be subsequently authorized to receive such power by act of Congress."

The measure I have introduced today, in accord with the provisions of section 5 of Public Law 97-273, simply would add to the list of projects contained therein the names of the Hilltop and Gray Goose projects.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope my colleagues will support the prompt enactment of this measure so that the Federal Government can begin to honor its commitment to my State under the Pick-Sloan program, so that irrigators in South Dakota can begin to have access to a portion of the power designated for their use, and, finally, so that the Hilltop and Gray Goose irrigators can avoid financial ruin.

Finally, Mr. President, various forces have conspired, figuratively speaking, to prevent South Dakota from realizing the irrigation benefits promised us under the Pick-Sloan Missouri basin program. If I have anything to say about it, that is going to change; commitments are going to be honored; everyone is going to play by the rules of the game as they have been set forth under the program; and South Dakota irrigators are going to be allowed the use not only of the water but also the pumping power to which they are entitled.

Obviously, Mr. President, I alone cannot cause those who are working against my State's interests to change their ways and be fair to us. I do want to incorporate in the record a table which shows the great disparity in irrigation benefits among the 17 reclamation States, however. My colleagues and interested others will note the Dakotas are far at the bottom, both in terms of the percentage of our cropland irrigated and total acres irrigated. Those who care little for the best interests of South Dakota can be expected to continue to fight against us, but the following table gives some indication—even without taking into account the half million acres we gave up for the Pick-Sloan program—just how unfair they have been to us:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and the table mentioned earlier be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and table were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2862. A bill to declare that the United States holds certain lands in trust for the Cocopah Indian Tribe; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

LANDS IN TRUST FOR THE COCOPAH INDIAN TRIBE

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to provide the Cocopah Tribe of Arizona with additional land by authorizing the transfer of 3,930 acres of Bureau of Land Management land in Yuma County, AZ into trust for use by the tribe for its tribal members. While the Cocopah Tribe has historically occupied the lands all along the Colorado River, most of its members now live on about 1,700 acres of reservation land in southwestern Yuma County. This land is now being utilized to the maximum capacity by the tribe and it has become necessary for the tribe to seek augmentation of its reservation if it is to substantially improve the quality of life for the tribe members. The demand for increased housing, community facilities, commercial, and industrial development requires the additional land. The proposed transfer of the 3,930 acres will quicken the speed with which the Cocopah tribal government can move toward its goal of building the needed housing, developing a more diverse economic base and accommodating the needs of the growing reservation population. The tribe has worked closely with Federal and State agencies, the county and municipal governments and individual land users in making its selection. The lands proposed for transfer are adjacent to existing reservation lands and located in the proximity of the town of Yuma, AZ. The bill will protect any preexisting rights or interests held by any party in the selected lands.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2862

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subject to the provisions of subsection (b), all rights, title, and interests of the United States in the following lands (including all improvements thereon and appurtenances thereto) located in Yuma County, Arizona, are hereby declared to be held by the United States in trust for the benefit and use of the Cocopah Tribe and are hereby declared to be part of the reservation of the Cocopah Tribe:

(b) Nothing in this Act shall deprive any person of any right-of-way, mining claim, grazing permit, water right, or other right or interest which such person may have in the lands described in subsection (a) on the date preceding the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the provisions of Executive Order 11988 (42 U.S.C. 4321, note) shall apply to the lands described in subsection (a).

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 2864. A bill to amend chapter 47 of title 18, United States Code, to provide penalties for fraud and related activities in connection with computers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMPUTER FRAUD AND ABUSE ACT

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am introducing today the proposed Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, to help combat the alarming increase in computer crime. I introduce this bill as a companion measure to the computer provisions contained in Congressman Hughes' H.R. 5616, the proposed Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, which was reported by the House Judiciary Committee on June 26, 1984, and was passed by the full House under suspension of the rules just yesterday. The Senate has already passed legislation—S. 1870, on April 25 of this year—containing counterfeit access device provisions comparable to those contained in the first half of the House bill.

Mr. President, with the advent of the computer age has come a new breed of criminal and a new brand of crime: computer fraud. With the use of a personal computer and a telephone, unauthorized access can be gained to another computer system, where information and financial data can be manipulated to accomplish a broad range of unlawful ends. The growing magnitude of this problem becomes evident when we consider that in 1978 there were an estimated 5,000 desk top computers, that there are more than 5 million today, and 80 million projected by 1990.

This legislation would provide Federal criminal penalties, in the form of both substantial fines and imprisonment, for computer fraud—defined as knowingly gaining access to a computer without authorization, or using a computer for purposes beyond those authorized, to obtain anything of value aggregating $5,000 or more in a 1 year period, or to obtain classified information or to tamper with information maintained in a Federal Government computer. The act would also cover attempts and conspiracies to commit computer fraud.

Mr. President, the introduction of this legislation today arises out of the activities of the Congressional Crime Caucus, which I am privileged to co-chair together with my distinguished colleague and good friend, Congressman BILL HUGHES. At our most recent meeting, the caucus set an agenda for the enactment of a number of important and achievable bills. Prominent among those, in addition to the present bill, were three bills which have already passed both Houses in the last Congress, in H.R. 3963, but were vetoed primarily on the basis of an unrelated provision establishing a drug czar—the Justice Assistance Act, S. 53; the Armed Career Criminal Act, S. 52; and the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984, S. 948. In the coming months, the caucus will be actively working toward final passage of each of these important measures, and we welcome the support of all of our colleagues in this vital endeavor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the proposed Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984, and the recent letter from myself and Mr. HUGHES to the members of the Congressional Crime Caucus be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2864

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representative of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 47 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 1030. Fraud and related activity in connection with computers

"(a) Whoever—

"(1) having devised a scheme or artifice to defraud, knowingly and with intent to execute such scheme or artifice, accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and by means of one or more instances of such conduct obtains anything of value (other than the use of the computer) aggregating $5,000 or more during any one year period and affects interstate or foreign commerce;

"(2) knowingly accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and by means of such conduct obtains information that has been determined by the United States Government pursuant to an Executive order or statute to require protection against unauthorized disclosure for reasons of national defense or foreign relations, or any restricted data, as defined in paragraph r. of section 11 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, with the intent or reason to believe that such information so obtained is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation;

"(3) knowingly accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and thereby obtains information contained in a financial record of a financial institution, as such terms are defined in the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.), or contained in a file of a consumer reporting agency on a consumer, as such terms are defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. 1681 et seq.);

"(4) knowingly accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and by means of one or more instances of such conduct obtains anything, or causes a loss, of a value aggregating $5,000 or more during any one year period and affects interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(5) knowingly accesses a computer without authorization, or having accessed a computer with authorization, uses the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such authorization does not extend, and by means of such conduct knowingly uses, modifies, destroys, or discloses information in, or prevents authorized use of, such computer, if such computer is operated for or on behalf of the Government of the United States and such conduct affects such operation; shall be punished as provided in subsection (c) of this section. It is not an offense under paragraph (4) or (5) of this subsection in the case of a person having accessed a computer with authorization and using the opportunity such access provides for purposes to which such access does not extend, if the using of such opportunity consists only of the use of the computer.

"(b)(1) Whoever attempts to commit an offense under subsection (a) of this section shall be punished as provided in subsection (c) of this section.

"(2) Whoever is a party to a conspiracy of two or more persons to commit an offense under subsection (a) of this section, if any of the parties engages in any conduct in furtherance of such offense, shall be fined an amount not greater than the amount provided as the maximum fine for such offense under subsection (c) of this section or imprisoned not longer than one-half the period provided as the maximum imprisonment for such offense under subsection (c) of this section, or both.

"(c) The punishment for an offense under subsection (a) or (b)(1) of this section is—

"(1)(A) a fine of not more than the greater of $10,000 or twice the value obtained by the offense or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both, in the case of an offense under subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) of this section which does not occur after a conviction for another offense under such subsection, or an attempt to commit an offense punishable under this subparagraph; and

"(B) a fine of not more than the greater of $100,000 or twice the value obtained by the offense or imprisonment for not more than twenty years, or both, in the case of an offense under subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) of this section which occurs after a conviction for another offense under such subsection, or an attempt to commit an offense punishable under this subparagraph; and

"(2)(A) a fine of not more than the greater of $5,000 or twice the value obtained or loss created by the offense or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in the case of an offense under subsection (a)(3), (a)(4), or (a)(5) of this section which does not occur after a conviction for another offense under such subsection, or an attempt to commit an offense punishable under this subparagraph; and

"(B) A fine of not more than the greater of $10,000 or twice the value obtained or loss created by the offense or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both, in the case of an offense under subsection (a)(3), (a)(4), or (a)(5) of this section which occurs after a conviction for another offense under such subsection, or an attempt to commit an offense punishable under this subparagraph.

"(d) The United States Secret Service shall, in addition to any other agency having such authority, have the authority to investigate offenses under this section. Such authority of the United States Secret Service shall be exercised in accordance with an agreement which shall be entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General.

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'computer' means an electronic, magnetic, optical, electrochemical, or other high speed data processing device performing logical, arithmetic, or storage functions, and includes any data storage facility or communications facility directly related to or operating in conjunction with such device, but such term does not include an automated typewriter or typesetter, a portable hand held calculator, or other similar device.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 47 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1030. Fraud and related activity in connection with computers.".

SEC. 3. The Attorney General shall report to the Congress annually, during the first three years following the date of the enactment of this Act, concerning prosecutions under the section of title 18 of the United States Code added by this Act.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSIONAL CRIME CAUCUS COLLEAGUE: At the meeting of the Congressional Crime Caucus on June 19, 1984, discussion centered on the broad range of significant crime legislation presently pending in the 98th Congress. Of the individual measures pending, a number were identified as meriting priority treatment and as being most likely to achieve prompt passage.

The following three measures should be afforded highest priority inasmuch as the substance of each has already been approved by both Houses in the last Congress, even though the omnibus bill that contained them was pocket vetoed by the President, primarily on the basis of an unrelated provision establishing a "Drug Czar":

Justice Assistance Act (H.R. 2175, S. 53)—a bill to provide Federal matching funds to carry out state and local anticrime programs. Passed House; pending in Senate. Chairman Thurmond is considering offering a substitute to S. 53 on the floor consisting of Justice Assistance, the Missing Children's Assistance Act (S. 2014), and a reauthorization of the Juvenile Justice Act.

Armed Career Criminal Act (H.R. 1627, S. 52)—to provide Federal jurisdiction over certain state crimes committed by armed repeat offenders. Passed Senate; House hearings on June 28, 1984.

Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984 (H.R. 4901, S. 948)—to increase fines and expand forfeiture provisions in drug cases. Passed Senate; in House, reported by Judiciary but awaiting action by Ways and Means (no action is expected there until the conclusion of the conference on the tax portion of the pending deficit-reduction package).

A complete listing of important "achievable" measures must also include the following:

Bail Reform Amendments Act (H.R. 3005, S. 215)—to alter guidelines for determining bail. Passed Senate; reported by House Courts Subcommittee on June 13, 1984, awaiting full Committee action.

Sentencing Reform (H.R. 4827, S. 668)—to reform federal criminal sentencing procedures. Passed Senate; reported by House Criminal Justice Subcommittee on June 21, 1984, awaiting full Committee action.

Counterfeit Access Device & Computer Fraud and Abuse Act (H.R. 5616, S. 1870)—to provide criminal penalties for counterfeiting access devices and for computer fraud and abuse. Passed Senate (but with no computer provisions); ordered reported by House Judiciary on June 26, 1984. Senator Specter will introduce a computer measure in Senate comparable to the provisions reported by the full House Committee.

Insanity Defense Reform (H.R. 3336, S. 56)—to shift burden of proof to defendant. House and Senate bills very similar. Reported by House Judiciary, rule requested by Mr. Conyers. S. 56 is pending in Criminal Law Subcommittee, but comparable provisions were approved by the Senate in the omnibus crime bill (S. 1762).

Law Enforcement Officers Protection Act (H.R. 5835, S. 2776)—to limit availability and use of handgun bullets capable of penetrating body armor. Both bills introduced quite recently, in mid-June, in consultation with interested private organizations, including the Fraternal Order of Police and the NRA, which had been primarily responsible for opposition to the bills introduced earlier in both Houses. House Crime Subcommittee hearings held on June 27, 1984. S. 2776 is currently pending on full committee calendar.

Organized Crime Commission (H.J. Res. 548, S.J. Res. 233)—to give the President's OCC certain powers, including the authority to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of information. Passed both Houses; relatively minor differences to be resolved.

Extradition Act (H.R. 3347, S. 220)—to reform U.S. extradition procedures. Reported by House Judiciary; in Senate, extradition provisions were severed from S. 1762 and placed on Senate Calendar, as S. 2236, while S. 220 remains pending in Criminal Law Subcommittee.

Victims of Crime Assistance Act (H.R. 3498, S. 2423)—to provide certain asistance to victims of crime. Hearings under way in House Criminal Justice Subcommittee; reported by Senate Judiciary.

Note also was taken of the following four major crime bills enacted to date in the 98th Congress:

Federal Anti-Tampering Act (the so-called "Tylenol bill" providing increased penalties for tainting or mislabeling consumer products such as drugs, food, cosmetics and medical devices), P.L. 98-127, signed October 13, 1983.

Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act (reauthorizing a program of drug abuse treatment and monitoring for certain Federal offenders), P.L. 98-236, signed March 20, 1984.

Child Protection Act of 1984 (governing the interstate production and distribution of child pornography), P.L. 98-292, signed May 21, 1984.

Controlled Substances Registrants Protection Act of 1984 (making pharmacy robbery or burglary a Federal crime), P.L. 98-305, signed May 31, 1983.

We seek the cooperation and support of all Caucus members in carrying out this vital agenda. If you have any suggestions or additions, please let us know. If we do not hear from you by July 15, we will finalize this list as the formal position of the Caucus. The task is great, yet the time is so short. Let's get cracking!

Sincerely,

WILLIAM HUGHES,
Co-Chairman.
ARLEN SPECTER,
Co-Chairman.

By Mr. DOLE:

S. 2865. A bill authorizing the President to proclaim modifications in the rates of duty for certain articles in trade in civil aircraft; to the Committee on Finance.

EXPANSION OF TRADE IN CIVIL AIRCRAFT

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing S. 2865, a bill to authorize the President to proclaim modifications in tariffs on certain articles used in civil aircraft. The authority, if exercised, would be used to implement an agreement the administration has undertaken to expand the existing agreement on Trade in Civil Agreement, which was negotiated under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and approved by the Congress in the Trade Agreements Act of 1979.

The existing agreement has three principal features: First, reducing Governments' involvement in aircraft procurement; second, reducing or eliminating subsidies in this sector; and three, eliminating tariff barriers to trade in aircraft and aircraft parts. Among other obligations, the 20 signatory nations undertake to avoid directing procurement of aircraft from particular sources, and to refrain from requiring sellers to engage in offset production or support contracts. Duties were eliminated on civil aircraft and engines, many parts and pieces of equipment, and flight simulators. The parties also agreed to negotiate after 3 years on expansion of the agreement's scope.

Last October, the parties to the agreement tentatively agreed to broaden the tariff coverage of the agreement to encompass certain other items. These include such articles as automatic door closers, compressor parts, air-conditioning machines, and pumps. Before these changes become effective, however, the Congress must authorize the President to proclaim them. Further, the authority must be discretionary, so that the President can refrain from ratifying the agreement in the event he determines that the other principal parties to it—Canada, the EC, and Japan—are not also implementing it on a reciprocal basis.

U.S. producers of civil aircraft lead the world in production and technological innovation, and the United States enjoys a substantial trade surplus in the sector; in 1983, our producers exported $10.3 billion in items covered by the aircraft agreement, while about $3 billion of comparable articles were imported. I am proud that Kansas firms and workers make our State a leader in this field.

The interference by other governments in trade in civil aircraft is well-known and is a constant threat to U.S. export efforts. The aircraft agreements does not guarantee that no such trade distortions will occur, but it does mark a significant acknowledgment by other major U.S. competitors of the need to minimize the unfairness sometimes associated with this trade. Given the competitive lead of U.S. producers, I believe that an expansion of the agreement will benefit this country's trade interests. I therefore am pleased to sponsor this bill on behalf of the President, and I invite my colleagues to consider this bill favorably as well, after the Committee on Finance has completed its work on it.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 2866. A bill to authorize the Attorney General of the United States to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the level of State and local enforcement of State laws relating to production, illegal possession, and transfer of controlled substances; to authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the ability of States to provide drug-abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATE AND LOCAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1984. I am pleased to have Senators D'AMATO, BURDICK, PRYOR, and HOLLINGS join me in introducing this bill. Our legislation is a companion measure to H.R. 5990, introduced on June 29, 1984, by my distinguished colleague from New York, Representative CHARLES RANGEL, chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control. We are offering this legislation in response to a drug epidemic that is no better, and perhaps considerably worse, than in the later 1960's—when I first became involved with this issue.

It was in 1969 that I agreed to serve as President Nixon's Special Assistant for Urban Affairs. I did so with an expressed intention of concentrating on the international aspects of urban affairs—namely, the French connection. By August 1969, I had embarked on a mission that would take me to Calcutta, Istanbul, and Paris. The purpose of these missions was to discuss the flow of heroin into the United States—harvested from poppies in Turkey, manufactured in Marseille, and finally consumed by Americans.

In ongoing consultations with American and foreign officials, I made clear that our problem with heroin might soon become theirs. The many trips that followed convinced these foreign governments to help us break the French connection. This was a large, but predictably temporary, victory in the battle against drug trafficking and abuse. Supplies dried up, prices rose, and soon only the most addicted users—not the new or experimental ones—were pursuing their heroin fixes.

But new routes, new connections if you will, soon emerged. Mexico became a major supplier of heroin, until a similar diplomatic effort broke that connection. Pakistan and Afghanistan now supply much of the Nation's heroin. And have no doubt that other countries quickly will fill any void, should we successfully eliminate the Southwest Asian connection.

Supplies of illegal drugs will always be out there. We continue our efforts, as we should—for not to do so would constitute a surrender that would redouble the number of suppliers. But we also must recognize that an effective antidrug campaign must also involve considerable efforts within the United States. This legislation is based on such a recognition, and would be part of such an effort.

The Drug Enforcement Agency has just released its annual "Narcotics Intelligence Estimate" for 1983. This was to be the year that we had turned the tide on drug abuse. The storied successes of the President's South Florida Task Force and other Federal initiatives had led many of us to believe that our interdiction programs were working. But this year's annual estimate tells a more sobering story. The consumption of heroin jumped 4 percent in 1983. Cocaine use, the new wonder drug of the 1980's, grew by 12 percent last year. Marijuana use increased as well, by 5 percent. The number of deaths from PCP—"Angel dust" in the vernacular—jumped by 50 percent. Across the board, the Reagan administration's vaunted antidrug campaign has done little to reduce the use of controlled substances.

In New York State, according to Julio Martinez, the director of the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services, an estimated 22 percent of the State's population, or 3.2 million citizens, have become recent abusers of cocaine, marijuana, heroin, PCP, and pills. Of these, an estimated 1.5 million are regular users of narcotic and nonnarcotic drugs. Mr. Martinez expects the number of nonnarcotic abuses to increase by 20 percent by 1988; the number of narcotic abuses by 10 percent.

It would be instructive to review just why this explosion in drug use and abuse should concern us. Too often, we think of drug abuse in the most vague terms, more as a sin than as a real threat to the Nation's physical and mental health: Drugs are illegal, and therefore we are outraged over the use of them. But the costs are real, and they pose a greater threat to the viability of our society than practically anything I can think of—save nuclear war or totalitarian rule.

The health risks to users are obvious and well documented. The threat to the victims of drug-related crimes is equally great. Some 60 percent of New York State prisoners have a history of serious drug abuse. This suggests two things: individuals on a high are more likely to commit crimes; and individuals in need of a fix are more likely to steal to support their habits. Both suggestions are borne out by experience. The New York State Department of Substance Abuse Services estimates that the average daily user of heroin accounts for $55,000 of crime each year. On May 10, 1984, Stanley Marcus, the U.S. attorney for the southern district of Florida, testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse that one-half of all jail and prison inmates regularly used drugs before committing their offenses. He also estimated that one in four homicides in Miami is drug related—murderers high on drugs, killing to obtain drugs, or killing while selling someone else drugs.

And so it is that an imperative exists for this legislation. My bill would provide $750 million annually to assist States and localities in enforcing their drug laws, and to provide adequate drug treatment, prevention, and rehabilitation services. The program would be authorized initially for fiscal years 1986-1990, with $125 million each year available for the following programs:

First, apprehension of violators of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances;

Second, prosecution of such violators;

Third, adjudication of cases involving State drug violations;

Fourth, expansion and construction of correctional facilities for the detention of drug-law violators;

Fifth, eradication of wild or illegally grown drug crops; and Sixth, expansion of prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs.

The Department of Justice would administer the grants for the first five programs, and the Department of Health and Human Services would administer the treatment, prevention, and rehabilitation program. The grants would be targeted to those States with the most severe drug problems, although all States would be eligible for assistance.

This bill will not solve the Nation's drug problem. I have chosen to focus on the one element that is often overlooked—the administration of justice once interdiction and undercover operations have captured or exposed drug law violators. This bill also would assist in the most effective long-term approach to drug abuse and the prevention and reform of drug habits. Too often we overlook the necessity of going beyond punishment. Until we do more to reduce the demand for drugs, we will face constant challenges from traffickers seeking the enormous profits of illegal-drug trade.

This measure represents an important element in what I hope will be a more comprehensive approach to drug abuse and trafficking. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2866

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1984".

AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS

SEC. 2. (a) The Attorney General of the United States may make grants to States which apply under section 3, for the purpose of assisting States and units of local government—

(1) to provide additional personnel, equipment, facilities, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread apprehension of persons who violate State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances and to pay operating expenses (including the purchase of evidence and information) incurred as a result of apprehending such persons,

(2) to provide additional personnel, equipment, facilities, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread prosecution of persons accused of violating such State laws and to pay operating expenses in connection with such prosecution,

(3) to provide additional personnel (including judges), equipment, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread adjudication of cases involving persons accused of violating such State laws, to pay operating expenses in connection with such adjudication, and to provide quickly temporary facilities in which to conduct adjudications of such cases,

(4) to provide additional correctional facilities (including the expansion of existing prisons) for the detention of persons convicted of violating State laws relating to the production, possession, or transfer of controlled substances, and to establish and improve treatment and rehabilitative counseling provided to drug dependent persons convicted of violating State laws, and

(5) to conduct programs of education aimed at destroying wild or illicit growth of plant species from which controlled substances may be extracted.

(b) The Attorney General shall make grants under subsection (a) based on the relative needs of the States, taking into consideration—

(1) the nature and extent, throughout the State involved or in any part of such State, of problems arising in the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances, and

(2) the availability of State and local resources to resolve such problems.

APPLICATIONS TO RECEIVE GRANTS

SEC. 3. To request a grant under section 2, the chief executive officer of a State shall submit to the Attorney General an application at such time and in such form as the Attorney General may require by rule.

(1) Such application shall include a Statewide strategy for the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances. Such strategy shall be prepared after consultation with State and local officials whose duty it is to enforce such laws. Such strategy shall include a description of—

(A) the level of current State and local expenditures directly attributable to the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances,

(B) the kinds and extent of problems arising in the enforcement of such State laws, and

(C) the manner in which a grant received under section 2 will be expended to alleviate such problems.

(2) The chief executive officer of such State shall designate and identify in such application a single State agency which will distribute to appropriate State and local government entities, as determined by such State, any grant received under section 2.

(3) Such application shall identify each of the 5 general purposes specified in section 2(a) for which such grant is requested and, with respect to each such purpose, the amount of funds requested for such purpose and the specific uses for which a grant received for such purpose will be expended.

(4) The chief executive officer of such State shall agree, in such application and on behalf of such State, to comply with the requirements of sections 4, 5, and 6 as a condition of receiving a grant under section 2.

STATE AND LOCAL PARTICIPATION

SEC. 4. (a) No part of a grant made under section 2 may be used to supplant State or local funds that would be available to such State or unit of local government in the absence of such grant.

(b) A grant made under section 2 may not be expended for more than 90 percent of the cost of the identified uses, in the aggregate, for which such grant is received to carry out any one of the 5 general purposes specified in section 2(a). The non-Federal portion of the expenditures for such uses shall be paid in cash.

(c) Not more than 10 percent of a grant made under section 2 may be used for costs incurred to administer such grant.

REPORTS

SEC. 5. (a) Each State which receives a grant under section 2 shall submit to the Attorney General, for each year in which any part of such grant is expended by a State or local government entity, a report which contains—

(1) information specifying—

(A) the number of arrests made for violations of State law relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances,

(B) the number of convictions resulting from such arrests,

(C) the quantity and kinds of controlled substances seized in connection with such arrests, and

(D) the value of property forfeited to the State in connection with the enforcement of such laws,

(2) a summary of the activities carried out with such grant and an assessment of the impact of such activities on meeting the needs identified in the State strategy submitted under section 3(1), and

(3) such other information as the Attorney General may require by rule.

Such report shall be submitted in such form and by such time as the Attorney General may require by rule.

(b) Not later than 90 days after the end of each fiscal year for which grants are made under section 2(a), the Attorney General shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate a report that includes with respect to each State—

(1) the aggregate amount of such grants made to such State for such fiscal year,

(2) the amount of such grants expended for each of the 5 general purposes specified in section 2(a), and

(3) a summary of the information provided in compliance with subsection (a)(2).

EXPENDITURE OF GRANTS; RECORDS

SEC. 6. (a) The aggregate amount of a grant shall be obligated not later than 2 years after such grant is received by a State. Any part of such grant which is not so obligated shall be repaid by such State to the Attorney General upon the expiration of such 2-year period.

(b) If any part of a grant made under section 2 is used for any purpose other than the purpose for which such part is received by a State, or by a State or local government entity, then the State which received such grant shall promptly repay to the Attorney General an amount equal to such part.

(c)(1) Each State which receives a grant under section 2 shall keep, and shall require units of local government which receive any part of such grant to keep, such records as the Attorney General may require by rule to facilitate an effective audit.

(2) The Attorney General and the Comptroller General of the United States shall have access, for the purpose of audit and examination, to any books, documents, and records of States which receive grants, and of State and local government entities which receive any part of a grant, made under section 2 if, in the opinion of the Attorney General or the Comptroller General, such books, documents, and records are related to the receipt or use of any such grant.

DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services may make grants to States for planning, establishing, maintaining, coordinating, and evaluating projects for the development of more effective prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities to deal with the abuse of controlled substances.

(b) For purposes of making grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(1) the nature and extent, throughout the State involved or in any part of such State, of the need for more effective prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities to deal with the abuse of controlled substances,

(2) the availability of State and local resources to satisfy such need, and

(3) the recommendations of the Attorney General regarding those populations, areas, and localities in a State which have or are likely to have, as a result of increased law enforcement efforts, an exceptional need for such programs and activities.

(c) To request a grant under subsection (a), the chief executive officer of a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time and in such form as the Secretary may require by rule. Such application shall include a description of—

(1) the level of current State and local expenditures for prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities relating to the abuse of controlled substances,

(2) the kinds and extent of the need for such programs and activities, and

(3) the manner in which a grant received under subsection (a) would be expended to satisfy such need.

(d) As a condition of receiving a grant under subsection (a), the chief executive officer of the State involved shall agree on behalf of such State—

(1) to designate a single State agency which will distribute such grant to appropriate State and local government entities, or to private nonprofit entities, to carry out the purposes specified in such subsection,

(2) to be accountable for the expenditure of such grant, and

(3) with respect to such grant, to prepare and submit reports and audits in a manner consistent with the requirements of subsection (a) and subsection (b)(1)-(4) of section 1916 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-5).

(e)(1) No part of a grant made under this section may be used to supplant State or local funds that would be available to such State or unit of local government in the absence of such grant.

(2) Not more than 10 percent of a grant made under this section may be used for costs incurred to administer such grant.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 8. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States,

(2) the term "controlled substance" has the meaning given such term in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)),

(3) the term "correctional facility" means any place for the confinement of persons convicted of violating State law,

(4) the term "drug dependent person" has the meaning given such term in section 2(q) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201(q)),

(5) the term "Secondary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services,

(6) the term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands,

(7) the term "State law" means a State law the violation of which is punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year or by death, and

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 9. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990—

(1) $125,000,000 to carry out paragraph (1) of section 2(a),

(2) $125,000,000 to carry out paragraph (2) of such section,

(3) $125,000,000 to carry out paragraph (3) of such section,

(4) $125,000,000 to carry out paragraph (4) of such section,

(5) $125,000,000 to carry out paragraph (5) of such section.

(b) Not to exceed 10 percent of the amount appropriated for a fiscal year to carry out any paragraph of section 2(a) may be expended by the Attorney General for such fiscal year to carry out any other paragraph of such section, except that the aggregate amount expended by the Attorney General for such fiscal year to carry out such other paragraph may not exceed 110 percent of the aggregate amount appropriated for such fiscal year to carry out such other paragraph.

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated $125,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out section 7.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today as an original cosponsor of the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1984. This legislation authorizes the Attorney General to make grants to States to increase enforcement of State laws relating to the production, illegal possession, and sale of illicit drugs. It authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States to enable them to provide more drug abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation services.

I applaud my colleagues, Senator MOYNIHAN and Congressman RANGEL, for introducing this important legislation.

There is no greater threat to the safety and health of our people than drug abuse and addiction. A heroin addict commits 200 crimes per year to support his habit. The cancer of heroin addiction is spreading throughout our society as supplies become more plentiful and prices fall.

Cocaine use is also on the rise. Once limited to the wealthy, cocaine is now being used in ever increasing quantities by the middle class and the poor. In the State of New York, for example, cocaine use has tripled in the last 5 years. This explosion in the use of heroin, cocaine, and other drugs has overwhelmed local law enforcement, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs. They need our help and they need it now.

Operation Pressure Point, a major drug crackdown on the lower east side of New York, has shown that a massive commitment of Federal, State, and local resources to drug law enforcement can succeed. Robberies in that area are down 50 percent; burglaries are down 35 percent. Also as a result of this crackdown, the number of persons seeking treatment and rehabilitation has swelled dramatically.

This bill seeks to apply the lessons of Operation Pressure Point on a national scale. It authorizes appropriations of $750 million for each of fiscal years 1986 through 1990. It authorizes $125 million per year for each of the six following programs:

First. Apprehension of violators of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances;

Second. Prosecution of such violators;

Third. Adjudication of narcotics cases;

Fourth. Expansion and construction of correctional facilities for incarceration of drug law violators;

Fifth. Eradication of wild or illegally grown drug crops; and Sixth. Prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs.

To succeed, the approach represented by this legislation must become part of a coordinated and comprehensive Federal, State, and local antidrug campaign.

We need to educate our children in the earliest grades regarding the dangers of drug use. We must demand international cooperation, not only to eradicate drugs at their source, but also to interrupt international trafficking in them and to apprehend drug law fugitives.

We need an interdiction effort that deters drug trafficking and disrupts the smuggling networks. We must seize the profits and proceeds of the illicit drug industry and effectively combat money laundering.

The revolving door criminal justice system must be overhauled. Today's system favors the criminal. It releases thousands of poor bail risks prior to trial. There are hundreds of thousands of bench warrants outstanding in New York City alone against those who have failed to keep their court dates. At the Federal level, there are more drug law fugitives than there are drug enforcement administration agents to track them down.

According to the Justice Department's report on Federal drug law violators, only 55 percent of all drug law defendants are incarcerated for their crimes, and their actual time served is on the average only about 3 years.

The enactment of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act, already passed by the Senate and now pending in the House, would be a major step forward in our war on drug-related crime. The Senate acted in February. It is time for the House leadership to bring this bill to the floor for action.

When we enact these measures, we will be able to say, for the very first time, that we do have the will and the commitment to win the war on drugs and crime. I urge my colleagues to give the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act their full support.●

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 2867. A bill to refund the duty paid on the entry of two mass spectrometers which should have been admitted duty-free; to the Committee on Finance.

REFUND OF IMPORT DUTIES ON TWO MASS SPECTROMETERS

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a traiff bill that would refund import duties that Montana State University overpaid because of paperwork mistakes.

The Education, Scientific, and Cultural Material Importation Act, 19 U.S.C. 1202, provides that nonprofit institutions may import scientific equipment duty-free, as long as no equivalent U.S.-manufactured equipment is available.

In 1982, Montana State University needed two mass spectrometers for its Chemistry Department. The spectrometers weren't available from any U.S. manufacturers, so MSU bought them from a manufacturer in Manchester, England.

MSU imported the spectrometers through New York. When they came in, there apparently was some confusion about just what paperwork was needed. Since the paperwork wasn't complete, MSU had to pay a duty of at least $19,000.

As it turns out, a duty that's paid under those circumstances is refundable as long as the importation meets the requirements of 19 U.S.C. 1202 and the importer files a protest with the Customs Service within 90 days and applies for a refund from the Department of Commerce.

MSU formally applied for a refund. But for a year and a half, neither the broker MSU had retained to import the spectrometer, nor the Commerce Department officials MSU checked with about the status of its application ever indicated that a protest had to be filed or that anything else was amiss.

Early this year, Commerce finally notified MSU that Commerce had "ceased processing this application because entry of the instrument to which it relates was liquidated as dutiable on August 27, 1982, and no protest has been lodged to this date. Accordingly duty-free entry is unattainable and a decision by us would be pointless."

Needless to say, MSU was startled to learn this. Repeatedly, the MSU chemistry professor responsible for the spectrometers had checked with Commerce about the status of the refund application; repeatedly, he had been told that everything was in order and the application was being processed. Now, when he learned otherwise, it was too late to file a protest; procedurally, the application was dead.

Mr. President, it appears that there were plenty of mistakes in this case. But I am not concerned about blaming anybody. I just want to get MSU the refund it is rightfully owed.

Consequently, I am introducing legislation to require the Treasury Secretary to "refund the duty paid on the entry of the two mass spectrometers which were imported into the United States in 1982 for the use of Montana State University."

Mr. President, MSU only purchased its spectrometers overseas because it had been unable to obtain them here. Although no formal determinations has ever been made as to whether the relevant standards of 19 U.S.C. 1202 have been met, MSU believes that they have. If that's true, then MSU is being unfairly penalized because of other people's mistakes. Therefore, this legislation provides justified relief. I hope that my colleagues agree and will help me enact this legislation into law as soon as possible.●

S.J. Res. 335. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning on May 19, 1985, as "National Tourism Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today Senator SASSER, Senator PRESSLER, and I, along with 44 of our colleagues, are introducing a Senate joint resolution designating the week of May 19, 1985, "National Tourism Week."

The year 1984 marked the first time National Tourism Week was observed, and by all accounts it was an overwhelming success.

Throughout our land, in all 50 States and in hundreds of communities in the States, Americans turned out to celebrate our most perfect freedom—the freedom to travel.

And in recognizing the personal importance of travel, Americans also took note of the tremendous contribution the travel and tourism industry make to our Nation's economy.

On February 1 of this year, about 100 leaders from the travel and tourism industry gathered with the Members of Congress and representatives of the administration to observe the President signing the 1984 Tourism Week proclamation.

During the ceremony the President credited the travel and tourism industry with helping to "bring about one of the best economic recoveries in decades."

In addition to our strength as an export, tourism's major contribution to the recovery is employment opportunities.

Travel and tourism generated 4.6 million jobs in 1983, or 5 percent of total payroll employment.

Minority workers hold 13 percent of all jobs in the industry—a higher percentage than their share of total U.S. employment.

Women hold over half of all travel industry jobs—54 percent—proportionately one-quarter higher than their overall share.

In our view, there can be little debate that this represents a more tangible and more effective commitment to economic equity than all the existing job training and public assistance programs combined.

The industry also employs, by far, more of our Nation's youth than any other industry.

While only 7 percent of total U.S. employment is represented by youth, it has been estimated that 24 percent of food service workers are teenagers, as well as 75 percent of amusement park workers.

Unfortunately, detailed data is not available on the number of young workers for whom a college education—and ultimately a higher standard of living and a better life—was made possible because of summer travel industry employment.

However, we believe these numbers would be substantial enough to qualify travel and tourism as perhaps the largest private student assistance program in the Nation.

According to the U.S. News & World Report, for example, the New Orleans World's Fair hired over 11,000 young workers this summer.

Additional thousands are being hired by hotels, restaurants, and retail businesses outside the exposition grounds.

Disney World will make some 4,000 jobs available to teenage workers this summer.

Clearly, the travel industry is doing more than its share in providing not only income but training and experience for the young people of this country.

Part of the reason that all this is possible is tourism's ability to create new jobs faster than the rest of the economy, even during recession periods.

The travel industry added 39,000 new jobs in the recessionary year 1982, while overall U.S. employment dropped by 1.6 million jobs.

Despite five recessions since 1958, the industry has produced successively more jobs in each of those intervening 25 years, contributing nearly 11 percent of the 38 million new jobs created.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, payroll jobs in travel-related businesses have increased 183 percent since 1958, or considerably more than twice as fast as the growth in total U.S. payroll employment during the same period.

As recently as 1979, travel and tourism was responsible for creating 35 percent of all new jobs.

In 1980 it provided 28 percent of the new employment generated that year.

Given the justifiable concern regarding some of our hard industries, it also would seem significant that the wage and salary income from tourism surpassed that of the Nation's steel and automobile manufacturing industries combined in 1982.

Moreover, the increase in employment since 1973 in eating and drinking places alone is greater than the total employment in the automobile and steel industries combined.

While we obviously cannot turn our backs on our so-called basic industries, it is equally foolish to ignore, in a policy sense, industries with truly exceptional employment growth potential.

Tourism can hasten the transition from aging basic industries to a predominantly high technology future while retaining the same commercial viability and imperviousness to technological obsolescence it has always enjoyed.

In a large sense, however, tourism to and within the United States from abroad has an intangible, if perhaps more significant value.

In the words of President Reagan:

Travel and tourism goes far beyond economics.

Experiencing America firsthand provides outstanding educational opportunities and is terrific for personal growth * * * there's no better way to promote international understanding and good will, or to explain freedom and democracy, than through travel and tourism.

Travel and tourism is an important industry.

It's good business and it's great for America.

And why not?

You're selling the best product in the world.

And so, Mr. President, it is with these factors in mind, and the words of the President still ringing in our ears, that my colleagues and I are pleased to offer this resolution today.

We urge its expeditious consideration and swift passage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 335

Whereas tourism is vital to the United States, contributing to economic prosperity, employment, and international balance of payments;

Whereas travelers from the United States and other countries spent $255,000,000,000 in the United States during 1982, directly producing four million five hundred thousand jobs, $41,000,000,000 in wages and salaries, and over $20,000,000,000 in Federal, State, and local tax revenues:

Whereas, if viewed as a single retail industry, the travel and tourism sector of the economy constituted the second largest retail industry in the United States in 1982, as measured by business receipts;

Whereas tourism contributes substantially to personal growth, education, and intercultural appreciation of geography, history, and people of the United States;

Whereas tourism enhances international understanding and good will; and

Whereas, as people throughout the world become more aware of the outstanding cultural and recreational resources available across the United States, travel and tourism will become an increasingly important aspect of the daily lives of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the week beginning on May 19, 1985, hereby is designated as "National Tourism Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am very pleased today to join in the sponsorship of the joint resolution calling for designation of May 19–26, 1985, as "National Tourism Week," with the hope that this week will become what it deserves to be: A national institution which each year sparks in every American an awareness and an appreciation of one of the most important industries in our economy.

When I joined my colleague and cochairman of the Senate tourism caucus, Senator WARNER, in introducing a National Tourism Week resolution a year ago—on June 29, 1983—I said then that "A National Tourism Week will encourage all those concerned with the future and the health of the vital travel and tourism industry to appreciate and understand the real, tangible benefits this industry provides."

Toward that end, National Tourism Week 1984 was enormously successful. The success of its observance warrants the observance of a National Tourism Week next year and every year.

Just how can one measure the success of the week of May 29–June 2, this year's National Tourism Week?

Donna Tuttle, the Department of Commerce Under Secretary for Travel and Tourism, a key figure in the coordination of this week, recently released a report on the way in which National Tourism Week 1984 was observed across the country.

Based on the evidence outlined in the report, she said, "National Tourism Week was a highly successful promotion which met with very gratifying and tangible results."

Secretary Tuttle said that upon reviewing the report, one would agree "that the earlier we begin our planning the more impressive the results will be next year."

I do indeed agree with Secretary Tuttle, and this is one of the reasons I support early consideration of, and action on this resolution. I am confident that my colleagues and others will agree once they, too, review the report on Tourism Week activities, so I ask unanimous consent that the contents of the report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Travel and tourism is perhaps the most important U.S. business. It is, in fact, either the first, second or third largest industry in 41 of our States. Travel and tourism generate a $41 billion payroll in our country.

It employs 4.5 million Americans directly, and another 2.5 million in supporting jobs.

The industry means $20 billion in tax revenues for Federal, State, and local governments.

Because the industry is so vast, people may not realize that this business is actually thousands of small businesses. In fact, 99 percent of the industry consists of small businesses. As a member of the Small Business Committee, I am especially sensitive to this fact, as small businesses constitute the backbone of our Nation's economy.

As a cochair of the Senate tourism caucus, I take great satisfaction in noting that the past several years have witnessed a growing awareness in the Congress of the importance of travel and tourism to our Nation and its economic well-being.

The congressional travel and tourism caucus, under the direction of Representative BILL BONER of Tennessee, also plays a significant role in promoting greater awareness of the importance of travel and tourism among our Nation's lawmakers.

So, too, does the work of the Travel and Tourism Government Affairs Council. Organized 2 years ago, this travel industry organization has taken great strides in helping not only government at all levels, but the industry itself, to understand the great common interests of the many diverse components within travel and tourism.

All of us can take some degree of satisfaction in knowing that National Tourism Week 1984 was a success, and all of us can look forward to an even more successful National Tourism Week next year.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK—MAY 27-JUNE 2, 1984—WRAP-UP REPORT

"Despite our late start, I believe the signs are encouraging that as a government we are beginning to appreciate the national importance of travel and tourism, and beginning to act accordingly. One of the most significant reasons for this change in government attitude is the travel industry itself. So it is the men and women in the industry who should be recognized during National Tourism Week, and it is their effort which should be celebrated."—Statement by Sen. Daniel Inouye CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 24, 1984.

This inspiring message from long-time supporter of the travel and tourism industry Senator Daniel Inouye (D-Hawaii) was only one of many inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during National Tourism Week 1984, but it sums up the optimistic feeling of all the participants that this special event was a highly successful promotion which should become an annual opportunity to highlight the contributions of America's travel and tourism industry.

National Tourism Week got off to an attention-getting start with the "kick-off" in Washington, D.C. on May 22. Three U.S. Senators and seven Congressmen attended the joint U.S.T.T.A.-American Bus Association sponsored breakfast on Capitol Hill. The unveiling of the U.S. Postal Service aerogramme was an impressive ceremony and the presentation of a "Travel . . . The Perfect Freedom" T shirt to Vice President Bush focused the attention of the White House on the week's events. With the Southeast Tourism Society in town, their "hoedown" on the Mall was the most sought after invitation in the Nation's Capital. Representatives of the handicapped aired their views on what can be done to help the disabled traveler and the nation's media developed a new awareness of the importance of travel as a story to be covered on TV, radio, and in print.

Major media coverage included my appearance, along with the mascots from the Worlds' Fair and Summer Olympics, on the May 31 edition of ABC's Good Morning America; interviews on the CBS radio national show Crosstalk; NBC Sunday Night News (for June or early July airing); the Satellite Business Network; San Francisco Business Journal; and major articles in the Chicago Tribune, USA Today, and the New York Times. In addition, the respected Congressional Quarterly issued a special report on travel and tourism and the Commerce Department's widely read magazine Business America highlighted U.S.T.T.A. as their cover story. Copies of the National Tourism week media coverage are attached to this report.

U.S.T.T.A. conducted a familiarization tour to Washington, D.C. for six leading journalists from the major international markets. The journalists received a VIP view of Washington through the assistance of the Washington, D.C. Convention and Visitors Bureau.

The Department of Commerce in Washington, D.C. flew a banner saluting National Tourism Week. The busy main lobby offered a special exhibit of new state travel posters with signs reminding people of the economic impact of tourism in America.

U.S.T.T.A.'s regional offices celebrated NTW overseas:

U.S.T.T.A. Mexico held a reception at the residence of Ambassador John Gavin with guests including top airline and agency representatives. A video tape of President Reagan's special message and another on the Louisiana World Exposition were highlights of the event.

U.S.T.T.A. Frankfurt held a reception on May 22 for 50 travel industry offici als from all parts of Germany.

U.S. Consul General, Winnepeg officially opened the U.S. pavilion at the 7th Annual National Conference and Trade Show of the Association of Canadian Travel Agents May 30 to commemorate National Tourism Week.

Ambassador Galbraith in France hosted a reception celebrating National Tourism Week and honoring the French travel industry and press on May 24. More than 100 travel industry leaders, French government representatives, travel editors, television and embassy officials attended.

U.S. Deputy Chief of Mission in Tokyo, William Clark, received 200 leading Japanese travel executives at his residence in observance of National Tourism Week.

I was especially pleased by the turnout of more than 100 Congressional aides for the National Tour Association-United Bus Owners sponsored breakfast, followed by a briefing on U.S.T.T.A. programs and policies. This agency clearly accomplished its goals of increasing awareness of the economic impact of tourism and encouraging cities, states, and industry to make National Tourism Week an effective vehicle to promote the contributions of travel and tourism to America. The following "wrap-up" report briefly summarizes the major activities carried-out nation-wide:

The city of Mobile, Alabama and the Mobile Area Chamber of Commerce and Convention and Visitors Council hosted a luncheon commemorating NTW, using U.S.T.T.A.'s slogan "Travel . . . The Perfect Freedom." Governor George C. Wallace proclaimed Tourism Appreciation Week in conjunction with National Tourism Week.

Alaska celebrated NTW by proclaiming "Tourism Month" and programs hosting international tour operators and press were planned for the entire month of May. An inspection tour for 20 Japanese travel writers was followed by a group of 12 top German editors and publishers. Anchorage held hospitality seminars for the 5500 residents who work directly with visitors.

Governor Bruce Babbitt of Arizona signed a state proclamation for National Tourism Week at a news conference for the travel and tourism industry.

A "River Fest" kicked-off Arkansas' tourism week with a wide range of arts, crafts, bands and childrens' displays. Governor Bill Clinton issued a state tourism proclamation.

California cities jumped on the bandwagon to commemorate NTW. Palm Springs Mayor Frank Bogert signed a city tourism week proclamation. The Palm Springs Convention and Visitors Bureau hosted a program designed to acquaint community members with the profession of special events planning. Mayor William Gissler proclaimed Santa Clara Tourism Week urging the people of the Mission City to observe it with appropriate activities and ceremonies. Anaheim Area Visitor and Convention Bureau planned a tourism salute during a California Angels baseball game at Anaheim Stadium and a media campaign featuring public service announcements on local radio and TV stations. Highlights also included: proclamations from the Anaheim City Council and the Orange County Board of Supervisors, distribution of a fact sheet highlighting economic statistics on tourism in the weekly pay envelopes of all hotel employees, and the unfurling of marquee signs recognizing tourism week throughout the city. Sacramento hosted an International Summer Festival and its Mayor issued a city tourism week proclamation.

DONNA TUTTLE,
Under Secretary for Travel and Tourism.

U.S.T.T.A. does not intend to infer that this listing is all inclusive. It is simply a compilation of information that has been collected and/or received by this agency.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Virginia and others in introducing this important resolution designating the week of May 19-25, 1985, as National Tourism Week. This valuable industry deserves recognition for its valuable economic and social contribution to our Nation. And, as importantly, the people deserve to know how this industry affects their lives.

The U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration [USTTA], under the dynamic leadership of Under Secretary Tuttle, has done a great job in implementing the 1984 National Tourism Week. With the support of the industry, we have made great strides toward educating the American public about the major role travel and tourism plays in our everyday lives. As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Business, Trade, and Tourism, I have fought for many years to gain for this important industry the recognition it deserves. I am pleased to see we are finally making substantive progress toward that end.

Tourism is of vital economic importance to our Nation. In 1983 alone, it generated $20 billion in tax revenue for our Federal coffers through international and domestic travel. It is the third largest retail industry in the United States. Conservative estimates show that it employs, directly and indirectly, over 6.7 million Americans in this country. Over one-half of those jobs are held by women, and 13 percent are minorities.,

In my home State of South Dakota, tourism is our second largest industry; 45 other States also have tourism ranking among their top three industries. Promotion of this industry through National Tourism Week spurs economic growth throughout the States and promotes the advancement of the 1.4 million tourism-related small businesses. Tourism is an essential industry in America with a vast amount of potential for even greater expansion.

The United States is far behind almost every foreign nation—developed and Third World—in tourism promotion efforts. I was very proud to have sponsored the National Tourism Policy Act which established our first national tourism policy and created the USTTA. But we are far from realizing our fullest potential in competitively promoting the United States as an international travel destination. The need for a strong central agency to coordinate Federal and State efforts for tourism promotion should be more fully recognized and acted upon for the benefit of the entire Nation.

National Tourism Week provides all Americans and foreign visitors the opportunity to discover the wealth that lies within the infinite variety of this country. We are rich with breathtaking scenery of every type. My home State of South Dakota possesses wide, open prairie, the beautiful Black Hills, the majestic Mount Rushmore, and Crazy Horse Mountain, and a fascinating history of the Old West. Every State has its own unique attractions just waiting to be shared and enjoyed. All we need to do is open the door and invite travelers to partake.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important resolution and other efforts to strengthen our travel and tourism industry.

Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I join in sponsoring this joint resolution designating

May 19-25, 1985, as National Tourism Week. It seems fitting and proper that we commemorate this occasion and pay tribute to what is one of the most important industries in the United States today.

The travel and tourism industry not only plays a vital role in the economy of my home State of Nevada, but in the rest of the Nation as well. I hope that in designating National Tourism Week, we can bring to light the importance of the tourism industry in this country and demonstrate our commitment to ensuring the health and well-being of this vibrant industry.

The facts speak for themselves when one considers the importance of this industry. The business of travel generated $210 billion in revenue last year and supported, directly and indirectly, 6.8 million jobs for Americans. Over $50 million are realized daily from travel-generated taxes, contributing greatly to the coffers at all levels of government.

Even more importantly, as we observe National Tourism Week, we should be grateful that we are free to enjoy all of the great things this country has to offer. We should continue to extend a warm welcoming hand to our friends overseas. Overseas visitors to the United States contribute to better understanding between peoples and nations.

In short, it is altogether fitting that we celebrate the successes of the travel industry and focus on its many benefits by designating May 19-25, 1985, as National Tourism Week. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join my colleagues today in introducing legislation to designate the week of May 19-26, 1985, as National Tourism Week.

This year, the importance of travel and tourism was officially recognized for the first time by President Reagan's proclamation of the week beginning May 27, 1984, as National Tourism Week. This recognition was long overdue. After all, the travel and tourism industry is the second largest in the United States, generating over $200 billion per year and directly supporting 4.6 million jobs.

While our Federal commitment to this industry is still not what it should be, it is improving dramatically. The U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration [USTTA], our agency for international tourism promotion, has a fiscal year 1984 budget of $12 million. This represents a significant increase over recent USTTA budgets, but is still less than half of what other Western nations, our chief competitors for the international tourism dollar, spend on tourism promotion. Small wonder that our share of the international travel market has dropped from 13 percent in 1976 to about 10.6 percent. This drop is particularly dramatic when one considers that each percent of this market represents over $1 billion.

As chairman of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, which has jurisdiction over travel and tourism, I have a great interest in the relationship between the tourism industry and the Government. I have seen many signs in recent years that this relationship is improving.

One important step toward improving our Federal commitment to travel and tourism was passage of the National Tourism Policy Act of 1981 [Public Law 97-63], which created the USTTA. The act also created an industry Travel and Tourism Advisory Board to the Department of Commerce and an interagency Tourism Policy Council to coordinate Federal tourism policy.

Of course, the Congress has been working closely with the travel and tourism industry for several years. The first official industry advisory group in Washington was the Travel and Tourism Industry Advisory Council, to the Senate Commerce Committee formed in 1979. Senate support for tourism has since reached the point where the vast majority of us are members of the Senate Tourism Caucus.

The creation of National Tourism Week is the most recent legislative effort to increase public awareness of the significance of travel and tourism. I hope that this year's and next year's National Tourism Week will help convince State and local governments of the value of tourism promotion. I am very proud that my home State of Oregon is one of nine States to have already legislated a State tourism policy. The Oregon State Legislature created a State tourism policy in 1981 and upgraded it last year with the creation of a Tourism Policy Council.

We Oregonians have always been very proud of the natural beauty of our State. We feel that Oregon has as much to offer visitors as any State does, yet many States have attracted more visitors than Oregon has. We cannot blame this on remoteness, as our neighbor to the south, Califorina, is the most-visited State in the United States.

A more likely reason is that Oregan has never before had a sufficient commitment to tourism promotion. With a State tourism policy in place. Oregonians can expect travel and tourism to generate more than the $2 billion annual expenditures and 54,000 jobs that the industry already accounts for in Oregon.

Let me conclude, Mr. President, by urging my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution. Promotion of tourism is one activity that Senators from all parts of the Nation and both sides of the aisle can wholeheartedly support, and I ask my colleagues to join me in doing so by cosponsoring this legislation.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the Senate joint resolution which designates May 19-26, 1985, as "National Tourism Week." As one of the top three industries in the United States, an employer of over 6.7 million men and women, and a contributor of $200 billion to our economy, the tourism industry has a very important story to tell the American people. As we know from last year's experience, celebration of National Tourism Week is an excellent vehicle for telling it.

So that our cities, States, and the entire industry have adequate leadtime to plan for this most worthwhile celebration I urge the Congress and the President to act expeditiously on this resolution.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to join Senator WARNER, Senator SASSER, and a number of our colleagues in cosponsoring a joint resolution designating the week of May 19, 1985, as "National Tourism Week."

Tourism ranks as one of the top three industries in over 40 States. In all, travel and tourism generate nearly $41 billion in wages and salaries each year, directly employing 4.5 million Americans and indirectly affecting another 2.5 million workers.

Mr. President, tourism is the second largest industry in my State, Minnesota. Travelers spent almost $4 billion there during 1982, about $960 per resident. During that year, an estimated 103,500 Minnesotans derived a livelihood from travel-related enterprises, making about $862 million in the process. Quite clearly, Mr. President, the travel industry provides tremendous economic benefits to Minnesota and most other States.

However, we should applaud the American tourism industry for yet another reason. Freedom to experience abundant natural resources and explore a rich national heritage is not a luxury enjoyed universally throughout the world. The American tourist industry has opened up valuable educational opportunities for millions of Americans and visitors from abroad by providing access to the many diverse treasures this Nation has to offer.

I hope my colleagues will join us in saluting the American tourism industry by taking timely action on this legislation.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am happy to join in the introduction of legislation providing for the observance of National Tourism Week in May 1985. A similar observance this year proved to be highly successful and helped to spread the word that tourism is one of our Nation's foremost economic endeavors.

Although many people know that Hawaii is one of our Nation's leading tourist destinations, few realize that tourism is also the first, second or third most important business in 40 other States. Among retail and service industries, tourism is second in size only to the food industry, employing nearly 7 million people directly or indirectly. About one new job is created in this country for every 59 new foreign visitors.

In recent years, the travel industry has generated $30 million in Federal tax revenue every single day—about $11 billion annually. State and local governments also benefit to the tune of nearly $10 billion a year.

Although domestic travel accounts for most of these revenues, the number of foreign visitors to the United States has continued to increase; 21.6 million such visitors arrived in the United States in 1983, traveling for business purposes or pleasure. Each of these foreign visitors spent over $500 while in this country.

Mr. President, we in Hawaii have benefited greatly from tourism, especially with the guidance of the Hawaii Visitors Bureau since we achieved statehood 25 years ago. This year some 5 million visitors are expected in Hawaii from abroad and from other States in the United States. We have concentrated on building a high quality tourism industry which provides about 55,000 jobs for island residents—a large number when one considers that Hawaii is one of the Nation's smallest States. For many visitors from abroad, Hawaii is the gateway to the United States. It is where the visitors gets his first impression of our country, and Hawaii's travel industry takes pride in providing a warm welcome. Travel, for foreign visitors especially, but also for Americans traveling in the United States, provides an opportunity to get to know other peoples and other cultures, and it can help strengthen the ties of friendship which exist between this country and its neighbors in Latin America, Europe, the Far East and elsewhere.

In closing, I wish to commend the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration in the Department of Commerce for its efforts to promote understanding and appreciation of America's travel industry. I urge the Senate to take prompt action on this resolution providing for the observance of National Tourism Week next year.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in supporting the resolution to designate the week of May 19-26, 1985, as "National Tourism Week."

Tourism is one of Michigan's most vital and important industries and a key element in Michigan's long-term economic growth. Tourism contributes about $11 billion to Michigan's economy and employs about a quarter of a million people. Tourism ranks only behind manufacturing and agriculture in its impact on our economy.

In the last year more than 40 million tourists have visited our Great Lakes State. They enjoyed the Traverse City Cherry Festival, the Holland Tulip Festival, and the Grand Haven Coast Guard Festival. They came by bus, train, boat, plane, and automobile to see the Detroit Tigers win yet another game, cheer at a Saturday afternoon football game at one of our outstanding universities, or take a fall color tour. They came to our beaches and wonderful weather and waters.

Anyone who has had the pleasure to visit our magnificent State understands the beauty and splendor. I am constantly reminded as I travel from the northern tip of the Keweenaw Peninsula to the western shoreline of Lake Erie how fortunate I am to see so much of this beautiful territory. I wish everyone in this Chamber could know the joy of catching a trout in one of Michigan's great lakes, sampling a piece of fudge while spending a quiet afternoon on Mackinac Island, visiting Flint's AutoWorld, skiing one of our numerous ski slopes, and enjoying a convivial evening with family and friends in Detroit's Greektown or at its unique Renaissance Center.

This year National Tourism Week was a big success for small businesses because 99 percent of the tourism industry is made up of small businesses. Tourism means jobs. A thriving industry means more job opportunities and job stability for millions of small businesses. Tourism is a labor-intensive industry. Nationwide, the industry is the chief employer of minorities, females, unskilled, and semiskilled workers. Tourism is vital to our economy.

I am happy to take this opportunity to support the National Tourism Week resolution and to salute the people who work in the tourism industry in my State. I will also seize this opportunity to invite all to visit Michigan—get to know the friendly citizens and the many attractions we are so proud of.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in the Senate tourism caucus in urging the Senate to approve a joint resolution designating May 18-26, 1985, "National Tourism Week." I understand that the tourism industry, which employs 4.5 million individuals across the Nation, has endorsed this resolution, based on the positive impact which a similar resolution had on tourism in 1984.

The Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism, under the able leadership of Jo Luck Wilson, has sought to maximize the economic benefits of tourism for our State. Among other projects, the department has solicited information from Arkansas travelers as they have stopped at tourist information centers [TIC] across our State. The information recorded as a result of this survey is helpful to the department and to our businesses, since it gives us a picture of who the Arkansas traveler is and what has brought him or her to the land of opportunity.

Statistics emphasize the importance of tourism to our State. In 1983, almost 14 million visitors journeyed across our borders, spending about $1.6 billion, contributing over $58 million in State taxes and more than $15 million in local taxes. The travel and tourism industry—composed primarily of small business people—provided jobs for almost 45,000 Arkansans, with a payroll amounting to $291.1 million.

As I indicated, statistics are a very tangible and helpful way to demonstrate what tourism means to the State of Arkansas. Although statistics can fail to convey the reasons why tourism is such a thriving industry in Arkansas, I think all Arkansans are well aware of the many attractive travel opportunities which our State has to offer. From the picturesque Ozark Mountains of northwest Arkansas, to the world famous Hot Springs National Park to the Murfreesboro Diamond Mine, just to name a few—the lure is there, radiating from the land and the friendly people who inhabit it.

In short, Arkansas is a refreshing place for people who want to get away for a day, a week or for months to fish, to hike or hunt, to dig diamonds or take healthful mineral baths, to trace history or get lost in the clean air of our mountains. Should any of my colleagues like any further information on the merits of travel to our State, they need only ask.

Today we seek to recognize the many good things that tourism means for all of our home States. In that spirit, I call upon the Senate to adopt this significant resolution, calling attention to the virtues of an industry which deserves our strongest support and praise.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEBT COLLECTION ACT

D'AMATO AMENDMENT NO. 3395

Mr. D'AMATO proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1668) to amend chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, to authorize contracts retaining private counsel to furnish collection services in the case of indebtedness owed the United States; as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 3718 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (d);

(2) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively;

(3) in subsection (d), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by inserting "or (b)" after "subsection (a)";

(4) in subsection (e), as redesignated by paragraph (2), by striking out "(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(d)"; and

(5) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Attorney General may make contracts retaining private counsel to furnish legal services, including representation in negotiation, compromise, settlement, and litigation, in the case of any claim of indebtedness owed the United States. Each such contract shall include such terms and conditions as the Attorney General considers necessary and appropriate, including a provision specifying the amount of the fee to be paid to the private counsel under such contract or the method for calculating that fee.

"(2) The head of an executive or legislative agency may refer to a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection claims of indebtedness owed the United States arising out of activities of that agency.

"(3) Notwithstanding sections 516, 518(b), 519, and 547 (2) of title 28, a private counsel retained under paragraph (1) of this subsection may represent the United States in litigation in connection with legal services furnished pursuant to the contract entered into with that counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(4) A contract made with a private counsel under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include—

"(A) a provision permitting the Attorney General to terminate the contract if the Attorney General finds that termination of the contract is in the public interest;

"(B) a provision permitting the Attorney General to have any claim referred under the contract returned to the Attorney General if the Attorney General finds such action to be in the public interest;

"(C) a provision permitting the head of any executive or legislative agency which refers a claim under the contract to resolve a dispute regarding the claim, to compromise the claim, or to terminate a collection action on the claim; and

"(D) a provision requiring the private counsel to transmit monthly to the Attorney General and the head of the executive or legislative agency referring a claim under the contract a report on the services relating to the claim rendered under the contract during the month and the progress made during the month in collecting the claim under the contract.

"(5) Notwithstanding the fourth sentence of section 803 (6) of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 U.S.C. 1692a (6)), a private counsel performing legal services pursuant to a contract made under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be considered a debt collector for the purposes of such Act.

"(c) The Attorney General shall transmit to the Congress an annual report on the activities of the Department of Justice to recover indebtedness owed the United States which was referred to the Department of Justice for collection. Each such report shall include a list, by agency, of the total number and amounts of collected and uncollected claims of indebtedness which were referred to the Department of Justice for collection, shall separately specify any uncollected claim of indebtedness which was covered by a contract (1) which was terminated by the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(A) of this section or (2) under which the claim was returned to the Attorney General under subsection (b)(4)(B) of this section, and shall describe the progress made by the Department of Justice in collecting uncollected claims of indebtedness during the one-year period covered by the report.".

SEC. 2. Not later than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress a report on the actions taken under section 3718(b) of title 31, United States Code (as added by paragraph (5) of the first section of this Act).

METZENBAUM AMENDMENTS NOS. 3396 THROUGH 3398

Mr. METZENBAUM proposed three amendments to the bill S. 1668, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3396

On the first page, line 19, after "States.", insert the following: "If the Attorney General makes a contract for legal services to be furnished in any judicial district of the United States under the first sentence, the Attorney General shall use his best efforts to retain, from among attorneys regularly engaged in the private practice of law in such district, more than one private counsel to furnish such legal services in such district.".

AMENDMENT NO. 3397

AMENDMENT NO. 3398

On page 3, line 6, insert "(1)" after "(c)".

On page 3, line 15, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A)".

On page 3, line 16, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(B)".

On page 3, line 21, strike out the end quotation marks and the period after the end quotation marks.

On page 3, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

"(2)(A) The Comptroller General of the United States shall carry out an annual audit of the actions taken by the Attorney General under subsection (b) of this section during the preceding twelve months. The Comptroller General shall detemine the extent to which there is competition among private counsel to obtain contracts awards under such subsection, the reasonableness of the fees provided in such contracts, and the results of the debt collection efforts of private counsel retained under such contracts.

"(B) After completing each audit under subparagraph (A), the Comptroller General shall transmit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions resulting from the audit.".

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1985

MOYNIHAN AMENDMENT NO. 3399

Mr. MOYNIHAN proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 5798) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 2, at the end of line 21, add the following: "None of the funds appropriated for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be expended after October 3, 1984, that do not include appointed officials for all the positions as public members of the board of trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, as provided under the amendments made by section 341 of the Social Security Amendments of 1983.".

CHILES (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3400

Mr. CHILES (for himself, Mr. ROTH, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. BOREN, and Mr. ZORINSKY) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

On page 60, beginning with line 22, strike out through line 2 on page 61 and insert the following:

"(3) Former Presidents and their spouses, widows, widowers, or minor children, in accordance with sections 731 and 732 of the Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations Act, 1985.

"(4) Former Vice Presidents, in accordance with section 733 of such Act.".

On page 64, after line 22, insert the following:

TITLE VII—FORMER PRESIDENTS

PART A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. For purposes of this title, the term "former President" means an individual—

(1) who has held the office of President of the United States of America;

(2) whose service in such office has terminated other than by removal pursuant to section 4 of article II of the Constitution of the United States of America; and

(3) who does not currently hold such office.

PART B—PRESIDENTIAL LIBRARIES

SEC. 711. (a) The first paragraph of section 2101 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the semicolon a comma and "and may include research facilities and museum facilities in accordance with this chapter".

(b) Section 2108(a) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) When the Administrator of General Services considers it to be in the public interest he may, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, accept for and in the name of the United States, land, buildings, and equipment offered as a gift to the United States for the purpose of creating a Presidential archival depository, take title to the land, buildings, and equipment on behalf of the United States, and maintain, operate, and protect them as a Presidential archival depository and as a part of the national archives system.

"(2) The Administrator, in consultation with the Archivist of the United States and the Commissioner of the Public Buildings Service, shall promulgate architectural and design standards applicable to Presidential archival depositories in order to ensure that such depositories (A) preserve Presidential records subject to chapter 22 of this title and papers and other historical materials accepted for deposit under section 2107 of this title and (B) contain adequate research facilities.

"(3) The Administrator shall accept and take title to only such land, buildings, and equipment under paragraph (1) as are necessary to establish, for each President or former President, a single Presidential archival depository in one building not in excess of sixty thousand square feet in one geographic location, in the case of a President or a former President who served as President for not more than one term of four years, or not in excess of seventy thousand square feet in one geographic location in the case of a President or a former President who served as President for more than one term of four years, including museum space.

"(4) The Administrator may make agreements, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph and paragraph (5) and upon such other terms and conditions he considers proper, with a State, political subdivision, university, institution of higher learning, institute, or foundation to use as a Presidential archival depository land, buildings, and equipment of the State, subdivision, university, or other organization, to be made available by it without transfer of title to the United States. Any such agreement shall provide that any such Presidential archival depository shall comply with the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(5)(A) Prior to accepting and taking title of any land, buildings, and equipment under paragraph (1), and prior to entering into any agreement under paragraph (4) or any other agreement to accept or establish a Presidential archival depository, the Administrator shall submit a prospectus for the proposed Presidential archival depository to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives. The prospectus shall include—

"(i) a description of the land, buildings, and equipment offered as a gift or to be made available without transfer of title;

"(ii) a statement of the terms of the proposed agreement, if any;

"(iii) a general description of the types of records, papers, documents, or other historical materials proposed to be deposited in the Presidential archival depository so to be created, and of the terms of the proposed deposit;

"(iv) a statement of the additional improvements and equipment, if any, necessary for the satisfactory operation of the depository, together with an estimate of the cost of such improvements;

"(v) an estimate of the annual cost to the United States of maintaining, operating, and protecting the depository; and

"(vi) a statement indicating whether or not a proposed Presidential archival depository complies with the architectural and design standards promulgated pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(B) The Administrator may not take title to land, buildings, and equipment or make an agreement, until the expiration of the first period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress following the date on which the report is transmitted.

"(6) No physical or material changes in or additions to a Presidential archival depository may be made unless—

"(A) the Presidential archival depository, after any such change or addition, complies with the architectural and design standards established pursuant to paragraph (2);

"(B) the Presidential archival depository, after any such change or addition, is one building not in excess of sixty thousand square feet in one geographic location, including museum space; and

"(C) the Administrator has submitted a prospectus to the Congress describing any such change or addition and a period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress has expired within the date on which the prospectus was submitted.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

"(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three to a day certain are excluded in the computation of a period of time in which Congress is in continuous session.

"(8)(A) The Administrator may provide technical assistance to any private organization or institution establishing a museum or memorial for a President or former President and may provide such institution with microfilm copies of historically significant Presidential and personal records contained in a Presidential archival depository.

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'Presidential records' has the same meaning as in section 2201(2) of this title; and

"(ii) the term 'personal records' has the same meaning as in section 2201(3) of this title.".

SEC. 712. Section 2203(c) of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) During his term of office, the President shall substantially complete the disposal of his Presidential records which no longer have administrative, historical, informational, or evidentiary value. Prior to disposing of any such records, the President shall obtain the written views of the Archivist concerning the proposed disposal of such Presidential records and may not dispose of any record with respect to which the Archivist notifies the President that the Archivist intends to take action under subsection (e).".

SEC. 713. The amendments made by this part shall take effect on January 20, 1985 and shall not apply to any President who leaves office on or before such date.

PART C—FORMER PRESIDENTS

SEC. 721. Subsection (e) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide retirement, clerical assistants, and free mailing privileges to former Presidents of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1958 (72 Stat. 838; 3 U.S.C. 102 note) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) The spouse of a deceased former President shall be entitled to receive from the United States a monetary allowance at a rate per annum, payable monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is equal to two-thirds of the rate which is payable under subsection (3) to a former President. The monetary allowance of such spouse—

"(1) commences on the day after the former President dies;

"(2) terminates on the last day of the month before such spouse—

"(A) dies; or

"(B) remarries before becoming sixty years of age; and

"(3) is not payable for any period during which such spouse holds an appointive or elective office or position in or under the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia to which is attached a rate of pay other than a nominal rate.".

SEC. 722. (a) Subsection (b) and (c) of the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide retirement, clerical assistants, and free mailing privileges to former Presidents of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1958 (72 Stat. 838; 3 U.S.C. 102 note) are amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) The Administrator of General Services (hereinafter referred to as the 'Administrator') is authorized to provide to each former President, upon request, necessary services and facilities, including—

"(A) one suitable office, not to exceed four thousand square feet in area, appropriately equipped with furniture, furnishings, office machines and equipment, and office supplies, as determined by the Administrator, after consultation with the former President or his designee provided for in subsection (c), at such place within the United States as the former President shall designate;

"(B) payment of the compensation of members of an office staff designated by the former President at rates determined by the former President which are not in excess of the rate provided for level II of the Executive Schedule under section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, except that notwithstanding any other provision of law, persons, receiving compensation as members of an office staff of a former President under this subsection shall not be considered to be employees of the Federal Government except for purposes of chapters 81, 83, 87, and 89 of title 5, United States Code;

"(C) payment of travel expenses and subsistence allowances, including rental of Government or hired motor vehicles, found necessary by the former President, as authorized for persons employed intermittently or for persons serving without compensation under section 5703 of such title;

"(D) when authorized by the President, the use of Government aircraft or Government chartered aircraft by a former President solely for the purpose of completing the affairs of his office and otherwise as required incidentally for protective purposes. The costs allocable to the use of such aircaft under this Act shall be paid with funds authorized under the Former President's Act and any collections from the Secret Service or others for the use of space on Government aircraft or Government chartered aircraft deposited to the credit of the Former President's Act appropriation;

"(E) communications services found necessary by the former President;

"(F) except as provided in subsection (f) and notwithstanding the provisions of section 501 of title 44, United States Code, payment of expenses for necessary printing and binding;

"(G) movement of the personal effects and household goods of a former President and his family from Executive Residence in Washington, DC., to a location in the United States selected by such former President; and

"(H) movement of the personal effects and household goods of a former Vice-President and his family from their residence at the seat of Government to a location in the United States selected by him.

"(2) Any Federal employee may be detailed to the office staff of a former President on a reimbursable basis with the consent of the head of the agency involved. Any such detail shall not extend beyond the eight months and ten days beginning on the date on which the former President leaves office. An employee detailed to the office of a former President shall be responsible only to the former President for the performance of his duties during the period of such detail. An employee detailed under this subsection is deemed, for the purpose of preserving his allowances, privileges, rights, seniority, and other benefits, an employee of the agency from which detailed, and he is entitled to pay, allowances, and benefits from funds available to that agency. The authorization and payment of such allowances and other benefits from appropriations available therefor is deemed to comply with section 5536 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) Each former President may designate to the Administrator an assistant authorized to make on his behalf such designations or findings of necessity as may be required in connection with the services and facilities to be provided under subsection (b).".

(b)(1) Subsection (f) of such section is redesignated as subsection (1).

(2) Such section is amended by inserting immediately before subsection (1) the following new subsections:

"(f) Funds provided for necessary services and facilities for a former President under this Act shall be used for activities which are the direct result of such former President having held the office of President. Such funds may not be used for partisan political activities or income generating activities, except that a former President may use such funds for the preparation of his memoirs if the former President signs an agreement with the Administrator of General Services which provides that such memoirs will only be printed and distributed by the Public Printer in accordance with section 1345 of title 44, United States Code.

"(g)(1) The Administrator is authorized to provide necessary services and facilities to a former Vice President for use in connection with winding up the affairs of his office. such services and facilities shall be of the same general character as the services and facilities provided to a former President under subsection (b). Each former Vice President shall be entitled to conveyance within the United States and its territories and possessions of all mail matter, including airmail, sent by him under his written autograph signature in connection with his preparations for winding up of his official duties as Vice President.

"(2) No funds for necessary services and facilities provided to a former Vice President under this Act shall be used for partisan political activities or income generating activities, as determined under standards established by the Administrator.

"(h) The Administrator shall expend no funds for the provision of services and facilities under this Act with respect to a former President at any time beyond ninety days after the date on which such former President dies.

"(i) Except for expenditures from an imprest fund consisting of such amounts as the Administrator shall determine any expenditure of funds under this Act may be made only with the prior approval of the Administrator or his designee.

"(j) By March 1 of each year, each former President shall prepare and transmit to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report concerning activities carried out with the assistance of the funds for necessary services and facilities provided under this Act.

"(k)(1) To carry out the provisions of subsections (b) and (g), there are authorized to be appropriated with respect to a former President and former Vice President a total of $750,000 for the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expires, except that no funds appropriated pursuant to this clause shall be available for expenditure until the day on which such term expires.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraphs (3), to carry out the provisions of subsection (b) with respect to each former President, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of General Services—

"(A) $300,000 for each of the first four fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired;

"(B) $250,000 for the fifth and each of the three succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired; and

"(C) $200,000 for the ninth and each of the succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which the term of a former President expired.

"(3) To carry out the provisions of subsection (b) with respect to any individual who is a former President on the date of enactment of this subsection, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of General Services—

"(A) $300,000 for each of the four fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted;

"(B) $250,000 for the fifth and each of the three succeeding fiscal years beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted; and

"(C) $200,000 for the ninth and each succeeding fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year in which this subsection is enacted.

"(4) The provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) shall lapse ten years after the date of enactment of this paragraph.".

(c) Section 4 of the Presidential Transition Act of 1963 (3 U.S.C. 102 note) is repealed.

(d) Section 5 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator such funds as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this Act, except that with respect to any one Presidential transition not more than $2,000,000 may be appropriated for the purposes of providing services and facilities to the President-elect and Vice-President-elect under section 3. The President shall include in the budget transmitted to Congress, for each fiscal year in which his regular term of office will expire, a proposed appropriation for carrying out the purposes of this Act.".

SEC. 723. (a) Chapter 13 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1345. PRESIDENTIAL MEMOIRS

"The Public Printer shall cause to be printed as many copies of the memoirs of a former President who has entered into an agreement with the Administrator of General Services under subsection (f) of the first section of the Act of August 25, 1958 (72 Stat. 838), as may be necessary for the distribution and sale of such memoirs. Such memoirs shall be distributed and sold by the Superintendent of Documents in accordance with chapter 17 of this title.".

(b) The table of sections for such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"1345. Presidential memoirs.".

PART D—PROTECTION OF FORMER PRESIDENTS, FORMER VICE PRESIDENTS, AND THEIR FAMILIES

SEC. 731. (a) On or after the effective date of this part, no Secret Service protection shall be provided to a former President or to the spouse, widow, widower, or minor child of any such former President, unless such protection is authorized by subsection (b) or is extended or reinstated by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President in accordance with section 732.

(b) The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of a former President after the effective date of this part for a period of five years beginning on the effective date of this part or on the date on which such individual becomes a former President, whichever is later, and for such additional periods as the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize under section 732. The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of the spouse or minor child of any former President after the effective date of this part to the extent that such protection is incidental to the protection of such former President or if such protection is authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President under section 732. The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of any individual who becomes a widow or widower of a former President after the effective date of this part for a period of six months after the date on which such former President dies and for such additional periods as the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize under section 732.

SEC. 732. (a)(1) After the expiration or termination of Secret Service protection to a former President or the spouse or minor child of a former President, the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the reinstatement of such protection—

(A) in the case of a former President, for one one-year period; and

(B) in the case of the spouse or minor child of a former President, for one six-month period, upon a finding that a serious threat warranting such protection exists to the individual.

(2) The Secretary may extend Secret Service protection reinstated under paragraph (1) or provided under section 3056 of title 18, United States Code, prior to the effective date of this part or under section 731 after the effective date of this part—

(A) in the case of a former President, for additional consecutive one-year periods; and

(B) in the case of a spouse or minor child of a former President, for additional consecutive six-month periods, upon the written request of the person eligible for such protection.

(b) No extension of Secret Service protection under subsection (a)(2) shall become effective unless the Secretary of the Treasury submits the request for such extension to the Congress and a period of sixty calendar days of continuous session of the Congress has expired after the date on which the request is submitted. For purposes of this subsection, continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment sine die, but the days on which either House is not in session because of adjournment of more than three days to a day certain are excluded.

(c) The President is authorized to direct the United States Secret Service to protect a former President, spouse, widow, widower, or minor child upon a determination that a threat warrants emergency action. The President shall notify Congress of any such action. Such authorization shall not extend beyond sixty calendar days or, in the case of the submission by the Secretary of the Treasury for extension under subsection (b) within such sixty day period, not beyond the time needed for sixty calendar days of continuous session of Congress to expire.

SEC. 733. (a) The Secret Service is authorized to protect the person of a former Vice President if such protection is authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with subsection (b).

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the provision of Secret Service protection to a former Vice President upon the written request of such former Vice President and upon a finding that a threat warranting such protection exists to such former Vice President. The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the provision of such protection for a period beginning on the date on which the Vice Presidential term of such former Vice President expired and ending on the last day of the fiscal year in which such term expired.

SEC. 734. This part shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

CHAFEE AMENDMENT NO. 3401

Mr. CHAFEE proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

On page 36, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

SEC. 406. (a) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act for the operation, maintenance, and protection of presidential archival depositories shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to establish in the National Archives Trust Fund a separate endowment for the maintenance, operation, and protection of each Presidential archival depository, to which shall be credited any gifts or bequests received under section 2108(g) of title 44, United States Code, that are offered for such depository. Income to each such endowment shall be available to cover the cost of maintenance, operation, and protection of such depository, but not the cost of the performance of archival functions under such title.

(b) Funds appropriated by this Act may not be used by the Administrator of General Services to accept or take title to any land, building, or equipment under section 2108(a) of title 44, United States Code, or to make any agreement to use any land, building, or equipment under such section, for the purpose of creating a Presidential archival depository, unless the Administrator determines that there is available, by gift or bequest for deposit under subsection (a) in an endowment with respect to that depository, an amount to cover, or insure sufficient income to cover—

(1) the total cost of acquiring or constructing the buildings and of acquiring and installing the equipment for such depository;

(2)(A) if title to the land is to be vested in the United States, the cost of acquiring the land upon which such buildings are situated, or such other measure of the value of such land as is mutually agreed upon by the Administrator and the donor; or

(B) if title to the land is not to be vested in the United States, the cost to the donor of any improvements (other than such buildings and equipment) to the land upon which such buildings are situated; and

(3) the costs of maintaining, operating, and protecting such depository in each fiscal year, but not of performing the archival functions under title 44, United States Code, for such depository in each fiscal year.

(c) The terms of this amendment shall not apply to the libraries built or to be built by the incumbent or past presidents of the United States.

(d) A portion of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be used by the Administrator of General Services to conduct a study to plan for the establishment, in the General Services Administration, of a National Archival Center for Presidential Papers, in which may be deposited all Presidential records and historical materials of former Presidents who leave office after 1989. The Administrator of General Services shall transmit such study to the Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

LEVIN AMENDMENT NO. 3402

Mr. LEVIN proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

On page 17, after line 12, add the following new section:

REDLINING STUDY

It is the sense of the Congress that the use of the ZIP Code of a person's place of residence or place of work should not be used in the determination of such person's credit worthiness. The Federal Trade Commission, the four Federal financial supervisory agencies specified in section 803 of the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977 (12 U.S.C. 2902), and the United States Postal Service are requested to consider and report to the Congress by March 31, 1985 what statutory and regulatory measures are needed to prohibit such practice.

ABDNOR AMENDMENT NO. 3403

Mr. ABDNOR proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

Strike section 107 and strike section 110 of the bill, renumber the remaining sections as appropriate.

DANFORTH AMENDMENT NO. 3404

Mr. DANFORTH proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5798, supra; as follows:

Strike all of section 106, beginning on page 12, line 10 through page 13, line 8.

SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL ACT AUTHORIZATIONS

BURDICK AMENDMENT NO. 3405

Mr. BURDICK proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 757) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize funds for fiscal years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987, and for other purposes; as follows:

S. 757 is amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. . Section 8002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting after subsection (p) the following new subsection, and redesignating succeeding subsections accordingly:

"(q) EXTENDING LANDFILL LIFE AND REUSING LANDFILLED AREAS.—The Administrator shall conduct detailed, comprehensive studies of methods to extend the useful life of sanitary landfills and to better use sites in which filled or closed landfills are located. Such studies shall address—

"(1) methods to reduce the volume of materials before placement in landfills;

"(2) more efficient systems for depositing waste in landfills;

"(3) methods to enhance the rate of decomposition of solid waste in landfills, in a safe and environmentally acceptable manner;

"(4) methane production from closed landfill units;

"(5) innovative uses of closed landfill sites, including use for energy production such as solar or wind energy and use for metals recovery;

"(6) potential for use of sewage treatment sludge in reclaiming landfilled areas; and

"(7) methods to coordinate use of a landfill owned by one municipality by nearby municipalities, and to establish equitable rates for such use, taking into account the need to provide future landfill capacity to replace that so used.

The Administrator is authorized to conduct demonstrations in the areas of study provided in this subsection. The Administrator shall periodically report on the results of such studies, with the first such report submitted not later than October 1, 1986.".

BRADLEY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3406

Mr. BRADLEY (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. ABDNOR) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

At the end thereof add the following new section:

"STATE-FEDERAL RELATIONS UNDER THE SUPERFUND ACT

"SEC. . (a)(1) Section 104(d)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new sentence: "For the purposes of the last sentence of subsection (c)(3) of this section, the President may enter into a contract or cooperative agreement with a State under this paragraph under which such state will take response actions in connection with releases listed pursuant to section 105(8)(B), using non-Federal funds for such response actions, in advance of and without any obligation by the President of amounts from the Fund for such response actions.".

"(2) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following sentence: "The President shall grant the State a credit against the share of costs for which it is responsible under this paragraph for any reasonable, documented, direct out-of-pocket non-Federal funds expended or obligated by the State under a contract agreement under the last sentence of subsection (d)(1).".

(b) Section 112(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No claim may be presented, nor may an action be commenced, under this title—

"(1) for the costs of response, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of completion of the response action;

"(2) for damages under subparagraph (C) of section 107(a), unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date on which final regulations are promulgated under section 301(c); or

"(3) for any other damages, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of the discovery of the loss or within three years after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later: Provided, however, That the time limitations contained in this paragraph shall not begin to run against a minor until he reaches eighteen years of age or a legal representative is duly appointed for him, nor against an incompetent person until his incompetency ends or a legal representative is duly appointed for him.".

LAUTENBERG (AND BRADLEY) AMENDMENT NO. 3407

Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself and Mr. BRADLEY) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

On page 93, after line 20, add the following new section: CLARIFICATION OF CRIMINAL LIABILITY

SEC. 30. Section 3008(d)(2)(A) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by striking out "having obtained."

DURENBERGER (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3408

Mr. DURENBURGER (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. COHEN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. HEINZ) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

At the end thereof add the following new section: (a) the Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) is amended by adding a new Part F as follows:

"PART F—REGULATION OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS CONTAINING SUBSTANCES OTHER THAN HAZARDOUS WASTE

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1451. For the purposes of this part, the term—

"(1) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(2) 'regulated substance' means (A) any substance defined in section 101(14) of Public Law 96-510, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (but not including substances regulated as hazardous wastes under the Solid Waste Disposal Act), and (B) petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure (60 degrees Fahrenheit and 14.7 pounds per square inch absolute);

"(3) 'owner' means (A) in the case of an underground storage tank in use on the date of enactment of this part or brought into use after that date, any person who owns an underground storage tank used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances, and (B) in the case of any underground storage tank previously in use but no longer in use on the date of enactment of this part, any person who owned such tank immediately prior to discontinuation of use;

"(4) 'operator' means any person in control of or having responsibility for the daily operation of the underground storage tank for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances;

"(5) 'person' means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, trust, consortium, joint venture, commercial entity, United States Government, State, municipality, commission, political subdivision of a State, or any interstate body;

"(6) 'release' means any actual spilling, leaking, emitting, discharging, escaping, leaching, or disposing from an underground storage tank into ground water, surface water or subsurface soils;

"(7) 'underground storage tank' means any tank, including underground pipes connected thereto, which is used to contain an accumulation of regulated substances and which is substantially or totally beneath the surface of the ground. This term does not include (i) aboveground storage tanks which are in compliance with national consensus codes and for which ninety (90%) or more of the tank volume is above the ground surface, (ii) farm or residential underground storage tanks of one thousand one hundred gallons or less capacity used for storing motor fuel for noncommercial purposes; (iii) underground storage tanks used for storing heating oil for consumptive use on the premises where stored, (iv) septic tanks, (v) pipeline facilities regulated under the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1671, et seq.) or the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Act of 1978, as amended (40 U.S.C. 2001, et seq.), (vi) surface impoundments, pits, ponds or lagoons, (vii) storm water and waste water collection systems, or (viii) flow-through process tanks;

"(8) 'nonoperational underground storage tank' means any tank which has been used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances which will not have regulated substances deposited or dispensed from the storage tank after the date of enactment of this part;

"(9) 'national consensus code' means any safety or fire standard or modification thereof which has been adopted and promulgated by a nationally recognized standards-producing organization, including National Fire Protection Association Standard Number 30, "Flammable and Combustible Liquids Code," and Western Fire Chiefs Association Uniform Fire Code Article Number 79, "Flammable and Combustible Liquids".

"NOTIFICATION AND CERTIFICATION

"SEC. 1452. (a)(1) UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—Within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, any owner of an underground storage tank shall notify the State or local agency or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location, and uses of such tank.

"(2) NONOPERATION UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS.—For any underground storage tank taken out of operation after January 1, 1974, the owner of such tank shall, within eighteen months of the date of enactment of this part, notify the State or local agency, or department designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of the existence of such tanks (unless the owner knows the tank subsequently was removed from the ground). Notice under this subsection shall specify to the extent known the date the tank was taken out of operation, the age on the date taken out of operation, the size, type and location of the tank, and the type and quantity of substances left stored in such tank on the date taken out of operation. This subsection shall not apply to tanks for which notice was given pursuant to section 103(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

"(3) Any owner which brings into use an underground storage tank after the initial notification under subsection (a)(1), shall notify the designated State or local agency or department within thirty days of the existence of such tank, specifying the age, size, type, location and uses of such tank.

"(4) Beginning thirty days after the Administrator prescribes the form of notice pursuant to subsection (b)(2) and for eighteen months thereafter, any person who deposits regulated substances in an underground storage tank shall reasonably notify the owner or operator of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(5) Beginning thirty days after the Administrator issues new tank performance standards pursuant to subsection 1453(d) of this part, any person who sells a tank intended to be used for the storage, use, or dispensing of regulated substances shall notify the purchaser of such tank of the owner's notification requirements pursuant to this subsection.

"(b)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of enactment of this part, the Governors of each State shall designate the appropriate State agency or department or local agencies or departments to receive the notifications under subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3).

"(2) Within twelve months of enactment of this part, the Administrator in consultation with State and local officials designated pursuant to subsection (b)(1), and after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall prescribe the form of the notice and the information to be included in the notifications under subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3). In issuing the form of such notice, the Administrator shall take into account the effect on small businesses and other owners and operators.

"RELEASE DETECTION, PREVENTION, AND CORRECTION REGULATIONS

"SEC. 1453. (a) The Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, shall promulgate release detection, prevention and correction regulations applicable to all owners and operators of underground storage tanks used for storing regulated substances, as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment.

"(b) In issuing regulations under this section, the Administrator may distinguish between types, classes, and ages of underground storage tanks. In making such distinctions, the Administrator may take into consideration the following factors, including, but not limited to: location of the tanks, soil and climate conditions, uses of the tanks, history of maintenance, age of the tanks, current industry recommended practices, national consensus codes, hydrogeology, water table, size of the tanks, quantity of regulated substances periodically deposited in or dispensed from the tank, the technical and managerial capability of the owners and operators, and the compatibility of the regulated substance and the materials of which the underground storage tank is fabricated.

"(c) The regulations promulgated pursuant to this section shall include, but need not be limited to, the following requirements respecting all underground storage tanks—

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or maintaining a comparable system or methods of inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing or comparable system;

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(5) taking underground storage tanks out of operation.

"(d) The Administrator shall promulgate regulations for maintaining evidence of financial responsibility as he deems recessing and desirable for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(e) The Administrator shall issue performance standards for underground storage tanks brought into use on or after the effective date of such standards. The performance standards for new underground storage tanks shall include, but need not be limited to, design, construction, installation, notification, compatibility and release detection standards.

"(f) Regulations issued pursuant to subsection (c) of this section and standards issued pursuant to subsection (d) of this section for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) shall be effective not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this part.

"(g) Until the effective date of the standards promulgated by the Administrator under subsection (d) of this section, and after ninety (90) days of enactment of this part, no person shall install an underground storage tank for the purpose of storing regulated substances unless such tank is installed and brought into use in accordance with an enforced national consensus code(s). Not later than six months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States his views on the national consensus code(s).

"APPROVAL OF STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1454. (a) Any State may thirty months after the date of enactment submit an underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction program for review and approval by the Administrator. The State must demonstrate that the State program includes the following elements and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements:

"(1) maintaining a leak detection system or inventory control system and performing tank testing designed to identify releases;

"(2) maintaining records of any monitoring or leak detection system or inventory control system or tank testing system;

"(3) reporting of any releases and corrective action taken in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(4) standards of performance for new underground storage tanks;

"(5) taking corrective action in response to a release from an underground storage tank;

"(6) taking underground storage tanks out of operation; and

"(7) maintaining evidence of financial responsibility for taking corrective action and compensating third parties for bodily injury and property damage caused by sudden and nonsudden accidental releases arising from operating an underground storage tank.

"(b) A State's new tank standards submitted for approval under subsection (a)(4) shall be no less stringent than the performance standards promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to subsection 1453(c).

"(c) Corrective action and compensation programs financed by fees on tank owners and operators and administered by State or local agencies or departments may be submitted for approval under subsection (a)(7) as evidence of financial responsibility.

"(d)(1) Within one hundred and eighty days of the date of receipt of a proposed State program, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, make a determination whether the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements.

"(2) If the Administrator determines that a State program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements, he shall approve the State program in lieu of the Federal program and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with respect to requirements related to control of underground storage tanks used to store regulated substances.

"(3) Any State may submit and the Administrator shall approve an underground storage tank release, detection, prevention, and correction program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451 (2) (B) (petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction thereof which is liquid at standard conditions of temperature and pressure) but does not include tanks containing other regulated substances, if the Administrator, after notice and opportunity for public comment, makes a determination that the State's program includes the requirements identified in subsection (a) and provides for adequate enforcement of compliance with such requirements. If a State program shall be approved under this subsection, the State program shall be in lieu of a Federal program for underground storage tanks containing regulated substances defined in section 1451 (2) (b) and the State shall have primary enforcement responsibility with regard to such tanks.

"(e) Whenever the Administrator determines after public hearing that a State is not administering and enforcing a program authorized under this part in accordance with the requirements of this section, he shall so notify the State, and, if appropriate action is not taken within a reasonable time, not to exceed ninety days, the Administrator shall withdraw authorization of such program and reestablish enforcement of Federal regulations pursuant to this part.

"INSPECTIONS, MONITORING, AND TESTING

"SEC. 1455. (a) For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, any owner or operator of an underground storage tank or any tank subject to study under section 1459 that is used for storing regulated substances shall, upon request of any officer, employee or representative of the Environmental Protection Agency, duly designated by the Administrator, or upon request of any duly designated officer, employee, or representative of a State with an approved program, furnish information relating to such tanks, their associated equipment, their contents, conduct monitoring or testing, and permit such officer at all reasonable times to have access to, and to copy all records relating to such tanks. For the purposes of developing or assisting in the development of any regulation, conducting any study, or enforcing the provisions of this part, such officers, employees, or representatives are authorized—

"(1) to enter at reasonable times any establishment or other place where an underground storage tank is located;

"(2) to inspect and obtain samples from any person of any such regulated substances and conduct monitoring or testing of the tanks, associated equipment, contents, or surrounding soils, air, surface water or ground water. Each such inspection shall be commenced and completed with reasonable promptness.

"(b)(1) Any records, reports, or information obtained from any persons under this section shall be available to the public, except that upon a showing satisfactory to the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) by any person that records, reports, or information, or a particular part thereof, to which the Administrator (or the State, as the case may be) or any officer, employee, or representative thereof has access under this section if made public, would divulge information entitled to protection under section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code, such information or particular portion thereof shall be considered confidential in accordance with the purposes of that section, except that such record, report, document, or information may be disclosed to other officers, employees, or authorized representatives of the United States concerned with carrying out this Act, or when relevant in any proceeding under this Act.

"(2) Any person not subject to the provisions of section 1905 of title 18 of the United States Code who knowingly and willfully divulges or discloses any information entitled to protection under this subsection shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.

"(3) In submitting data under this Act, a person required to provide such data may—

"(A) designate the data which such person believes is entitled to protection under this subsection, and

"(B) submit such designated data separately from other data submitted under this Act.

A designation under this paragraph shall be made in writing and in such manner as the Administrator may prescribe.

"(4) Notwithstanding any limitation contained in this section or any other provision of law, all information reported to, or otherwise obtained, by the Administrator (or any representative of the Administrator) under this Act shall be made available, upon written request of any duly authorized committee of the Congress, to such committee (including records, reports, or information obtained by representatives of the Environmental Protection Agency).

"FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 1456. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever on the basis of any information, the Administrator determines that any person is in violation of any requirement of this part, the Administrator may issue an order requiring compliance with a reasonable specified time period or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in which the violation occurred for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"(2) In the case of a violation of any requirement of this part where such violation occurs in a State with a program approved under section 1454, the Administrator shall give notice to the State in which such violation has occurred prior to issuing an order or commencing a civil action under this section.

"(3) If such violation fails to comply with the order within the time specified in the order, he shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day of continued noncompliance

"(b) Any order shall become final unless, no later than thirty days after the order is served, the person or persons named therein request a public hearing. Upon such request the Administrator shall promptly conduct a public hearing. In connection with any proceeding under this section the Administrator may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of relevant papers, books, and documents, and may promulgate rules for discovery procedures.

"(c) Any order issued under this section shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation, specify a reasonable time for compliance, and assess a penalty, if any, which the Administrator determines is reasonable taking into account the seriousness of the violation and any good faith efforts to comply with the applicable requirements.

"(d) Any owner who knowingly fails to notify or submits false information pursuant to section 1452(a) to a State or local agency or department designated pursuant to section 1452(b)(1) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for which notification is not given or false information is submitted.

"(e) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing a regulated substance who fails to comply with the release detection, prevention, and correction regulations as promulgated by the Administrator or a State program approved pursuant to section 1454, shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank for each day of violation.

"(f) Any owner or operator of an underground storage tank used for storing regulated substances who fails to comply with the provisions of section 1453(g) shall be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each tank and for each day of violation.

"FEDERAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 1457. Each department, agency, and instrumentality of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Federal Government having jurisdiction over any underground storage tank as defined in section 1451(7) and used for the purpose of storing regulated substances as defined in subsection 1451(2), shall be subject to and comply with all Federal, State, interstate, and local requirements, both substantive and procedural in the same manner, and to the same extent, as any person is subject to such requirements, including payment of reasonable service charges. Neither the United States, nor any agent, employee, or officer thereof, shall be immune or exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt from any process or sanction of any State or Federal court with respect to the enforcement of any such injunctive relief. The President may exempt any underground storage tanks of any department, agency, or instrumentality in the executive branch from compliance with such a requirement if he determines it to be in the paramount interest of the United States to do so. No such exemption shall be granted due to lack of appropriation unless the President shall have specifically requested such appropriation as a part of the budgetary process and the Congress shall have failed to make available such requested appropriations. Any exemption shall be for a period not in excess of one year, but additional exemptions may be granted for periods not to exceed one year upon the President's making a new determination. The President shall report each January to the Congress all exemptions from the requirements of this section granted during the preceding calendar year, together with his reason for granting each such exemption.

"STATE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 1458. Nothing in this part shall preclude or deny any right of any State or political subdivision thereof to adopt or enforce any regulation, requirement or standard of performance respecting underground storage tanks that is more stringent than a regulation, requirement, or standard of performance in effect under this part.

"STUDY OF UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS

"SEC. 1459. (a) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall complete a study of underground storage tanks used for the storage of regulated substances defined in section 1451(2)(B). Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment, the Administrator shall complete a study of all other underground storage tanks. Such study shall include an assessment of the ages, types (including methods of manufacture, coatings, protection systems, the compatibility of the construction materials and the installation methods) and locations including the climate of the locations) of such tanks; soil conditions, water tables, and the hydrogeology of tank locations; the relationship between the foregoing factors and the likelihood of releases from underground storage tanks; the effectiveness and costs of inventory systems, tank testing, and leak detection systems; and such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate.

"(b) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of this part, the Administrator shall conduct a study regarding the underground storage tanks exempted in subsection 1451(7) (ii) and (iii). Such study shall include estimates of the number and location of such tanks and an analysis of the extent to which there may be releases or threatened releases from such tanks into the environment.

"(c) Upon completion of the studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall submit 2 reports to the President and to the Congress containing the results of the studies and recommendations respecting whether or not such tanks should be subject to the preceding provisions of this part.

"(d)(1) If any owner or operator (excepting an agency, department, or instrumentality of the United States Government, a State or a political subdivision thereof) shall incur costs, including the loss of business opportunity, due to the closure or interruption of operation of an underground storage tank solely for the purpose of conducting studies authorized by this section, the Administrator shall provide such person fair and equitable reimbursement for such costs.

"(2) All claims for reimbursement shall be filed with the Administrator not later than ninety (90) days after the closure or interruption which gives rise to the claim.

"(3) Reimbursements made under this section shall be from funds appropriated by the Congress pursuant to the authorization continued in subsection 1460(a) of this part.

"(4) For purposes of judicial review, a determination by the Administrator under this subsection shall be considered final agency action.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1460. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this part, $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, 1986, 1987, and 1988 to be used to make grants to the States for purposes of assisting the States in the implementation of approved State underground storage tank release detection, prevention, and correction programs.".

(b) Section 1448(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting after the words "any regulation for State underground injection control programs under section 1421," the following: "any regulation for underground storage tanks under section 1453".

CHAFEE (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3409

Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. RANDOLPH, and Mr. MITCHELL) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra, as follows:

SECTION 5 LAND DISPOSAL LIMITATIONS

1. On page 39, line 11, strike "July 1, 1985" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

2. On page 41, line 11, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four".

3. On page 41, line 18, strike "thirty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-eight".

6. On page 41, line 22, immediately following "enactment." add the following new sentence: "The Administrator shall base the schedule on a ranking of such listed wastes considering their intrinsic hazard and their volume such that decisions whether or not to prohibit the land disposal of high volume hazardous wastes with high intrinsic hazard shall, to the maximum extent possible, be made by the date 42 months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and decisions regarding low volume hazardous wastes with lower intrinsic hazard shall be made by the date 72 months after the date of such enactment.".

7. On page 43, line 23, strike "one year" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen months".

SECTION 8 LISTING/DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

8. On page 51, lines 12 and 13, strike "twelve months after the date such petition is granted or six" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four".

9. On page 51, line 15, strike ", whichever is later".

10. On page 53, line 22, strike "two years" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-eight months".

SECTION 9 BURNING AND BLENDING OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

11. On page 54, line 16, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen".

12. On page 60, line 12, strike "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen".

SECTION 24 AIR EMISSIONS FROM LAND DISPOSAL FACILITIES

13. On page 85, line 22, strike "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-six".

SECTION 28 REPORT TO CONGRESS

14. On page 90, line 24 and 25, strike "March 15, 1984" and insert in lieu thereof "June 15, 1984".

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

SEC. . Section 3005(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by—

(1) Striking "a" immediately after "owning or operating" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "an existing facility or planning to construct a new";

(2) Inserting in the second sentence "and the construction of any new facility for the treatment, storage, or disposal of any such hazardous waste" immediately after "any such hazardous waste"; and

(3) Striking the period after "permit" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "; Provided, however, that no permit shall be required under this section in order to construct a facility if such facility is constructed pursuant to an approval issued by the Administrator under section 6(e) of the Toxic Substances Control Act for the incineration of polychlorinated biphenyls and any person owning or operating such a facility may, at any time after operation or construction of such facility has begun, file an application for a permit pursuant to this section authorizing such facility to incinerate hazardous waste identified or listed under this subtitle.".

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS

"SEC. . (a) Section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"'(h) INTERIM STATUS CORRECTIVE ACTION ORDERS.—(1) Whenever on the basis of any information the Administrator determines that there is or has been a release of hazardous waste into the environment from a facility qualifying for authorization to operate under Section 3005(e) of this subtitle, the Administrator may issue an order requiring corrective action of such other response measure as he deems necessary to protect human health or the environment or the Administrator may commence a civil action in the United States district court in the district in which the facility is located for appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction.

"'(2) Any order issued under this subsection may include a suspension or revocation of authorization to operate under section 3005(e) of this subtitle, shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the required corrective action or other response measure, and shall specify a time for compliance. If the person or persons named in an order fails to comply with the order, the Administrator may assess and such person or persons shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each day of noncompliance with the order.'

"(b) Subsection (b) of section 3008 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting 'issued under this section' immediately after "Any order'.".

Amended S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR CORRECTIVE ACTION

"SEC. . Section 3004(a) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (as redesignated by this Act) is amended by inserting '(including financial responsibility for corrective action)' immediately after 'and financial responsibility' in paragraph (6).".

Amend S. 757 by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

DIRECT ACTION AMENDMENTS

SEC. . (a) Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(m) FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY PROVISIONS.—(1) Financial responsibility required by subsection (a) of this section may be established in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Administrator by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the Administrator is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"(2) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jursidiction in any State court of the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim arising from conduct for which evidence of financial responsibility must be provided under this section may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing such evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(3) The total liability of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim; Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish the liability of any person under sections 107 or 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or other applicable law.

"(4) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'guarantor' means any person, other than the owner or operator, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for an owner or operator under this section.".

(b)(1) Section 108 (c) and (d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim authorized by section 107 or 111 may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(d) The total liability under this Act of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim; Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish the liability of any person under sections 107 or 111 of this Act or other applicable law.".

(2) Section 108(b)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following: "Financial responsibility may be established by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter or credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the President is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.".

On page 73, after line 16, insert the following:

"(d) Section 4008(a)(2) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subparagraph:

"'(D) There are authorized (i) to be made available $15,000,000 out of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and (ii) to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, for grants to States and, where appropriate, to regional, local, and interstate agencies to implement programs requiring compliance by solid waste management facilities with the criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3) and with the provisions of section 4005. To the extent practicable, such programs shall require such compliance no later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984.'."

On page 72, strike lines 1 through 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) Not later than March 31, 1988, the Administrator shall promulgate revisions of the criteria promulgated under paragraph (1) and section 1008(a)(3) for facilities that may receive hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators under section 3002(b). The criteria shall be those necessary to protect human health and the environment and may take into account the practicable capacity of such facilities. At a minimum such revisions for facilities potentially receiving such wastes should require groundwater monitoring as necessary to detect contamination, establish criteria for the acceptable location of new or existing facilities, and provide for corrective action as appropriate.".

On page 72, beginning line 20, strike all through page 73, line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'(c) CONTROL OF HAZARDOUS DISPOSAL.—(1)(A) Not later than thirty-six months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system of prior approval and conditions to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provision of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005) will comply with the applicable criteria promulgated under section 4004(a) and section 1008(a)(3).

"'(B) Not later than eighteen months after the promulgation of revised criteria under subsection 4004(a)(2), each State shall adopt and implement a permit program or other system or prior approval and conditions, to assure that each solid waste management facility within such State which may receive hazardous household waste or hazardous waste due to the provision of section 3002(b) for small quantity generators (otherwise not subject to the requirement for a permit under section 3005) will comply with the criteria revised under section 4004(a)(2).

"'(C) The Administrator shall determine whether each State has developed an adequate program under this paragraph. The Administrator may make such a determination in conjunction with approval, disapproval or partial approval of a State plan under section 4007.

"'(2) In any State that the Administrator determines has not adopted an adequate program for such facilities under paragraph (1)(B) by the date provided in such paragraph, the Administrator may use the authorities available under section 3007 and 3008 of this title to enforce the prohibition in subsection (a) of this section with respect to such facilities. In no event shall the Administrator or any other person be authorized to bring a civil action under paragraph (a) of this section against any person subject to a compliance schedule issued by the State under a program that the Administrator has determined to be adequate under this paragraph. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'requirement of this subtitle' in section 3008 shall be deemed to include criteria promulgated by the Administrator under sections 1008(a)(3) and 4004(a) of this title, and the term "hazardous wastes" in section 3007 shall be deemed to include solid waste at facilities that may handle hazardous household wastes or hazardous wastes from small quantity generators.'."

On page 82, line 25, strike out "and".

On page 83, line 4, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

On page 83, after line 4, insert the following:

"(5) inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractural arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

On page 80, line 10, insert immediately after "(g)." the following:

"A transporter shall not be deemed to have contributed or to be contributing to such handling, storage, treatment, or disposal, taking place after such solid waste or hazardous waste has left the possession or control of such transporter, if the transportation of such waste was under a sole contractural arrangement arising from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by common carrier by rail and such transporter has exercised due care in the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of such waste.".

On page 30, line 18, after "manifest' insert "promulgated under this Act".

On page 31, beginning line 1, strike all through page 32, line 9.

On page 32, line 10, strike "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 32, line 11, strike "(7)" each place it occurs and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 32, line 20, strike "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)" and strike "paragraphs (2) and (3)" and insert in lieu therof "paragraph (2)".

On page 32, line 24, strike "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 33, line 9, strike "(6)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)".

On page 33, line 18, strike "(7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6)".

On page 34, line 10, strike all after "practices." through line 14.

On page 35, line 15, strike "(5)" and insert in lieu thereof "(4)".

On page 35, line 25, strike "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(2)".

On page 44, beginning on line 2, strike "(including the minimization of free liquids by other means than the addition of absorbent material, where technologically feasible),".

On page 44, line 6, insert immediately after "landfills." the following new sentence: "Such regulations shall also prohibit the disposal in landfills of liquids that have been absorbed in materials that biodegrade or that release liquids when compressed as might occur during routine landfill operation.".

On page 44, line 8, strike "of" immediately after "disposal" and insert in lieu thereof "in".

On page 60, lines 4 and 6, strike "used oil" each place it appears and insert in lieu thereof "oily materials".

On page 60, line 4, insert a comma immediately after "refining".

On page 53, strike lines 15 through 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'(D) not later than twenty-eight months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, make.".

On page 43, line 19, strike "(1)" immediately after "3004(f)".

On page 38, line 7, insert "(other than paragraph (7)" immediately after "subsection".

On page 42, line 19, insert "levels or" immediately after "those".

On page 42, lines 19 to 22, strike "are necessary before such method or methods of disposal of such hazardous waste would be protective of human health and the environment" and insert in lieu thereof "substantially diminish the toxicity of the waste or substantially reduce the likelihood of migration of hazardous constituents from the waste so that short-term and long-term threats to human health and the environment are minimized".

On page 42, lines 22 to 25, and on page 43, lines 1 and 2, strike all after "environment." and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If such hazardous waste has been treated to the level or by a method specified in regulations promulgated under this paragraph, such waste or residue thereof shall not be subject to any prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection and may be disposed of in a land disposal facility which meets the requirements of this subtitle. Any regulation promulgated under this paragraph for a particular hazardous waste shall become effective on the same date as any applicable prohibition promulgated under paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

On page 86, line 18, strike the quotation marks and final period, and after line 18 insert the following:

"This subsection shall not be construed to affect other exemptions or waivers from such standards provided in regulations in effect on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 or as may be provided in revisions to those regulations, to the extent consistent with this subsection. The Administrator is authorized on a case-by-case basis to exempt from ground water monitoring requirements under this section (including subsection (f)) any engineered structure which the Administrator finds does not receive or contain liquid waste (nor waste containing free liquids), is designed and operated to exclude liquid from precipitation or other runoff, utilizes multiple leak detection systems within the outer layer of containment, and provides for continuing operation and maintenance of these leak detection systems during the operating period, closure, and the period required for post-closure monitoring and for which the Administrator concludes on the basis of such findings that there is a reasonable certainty hazardous constituents will not migrate beyond the outer layer of containment prior to the end of the period required for post-closure monitoring.".

On page 44, line 23, after "water." insert the following: "This subsection shall not apply to the injection of contaminated ground water into the aquifer from which it was withdrawn, if such injection is a response action taken under section 104 or 106 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 or part of corrective action required under this title intended to clean up such contamination and such contaminated ground water is treated to substantially reduce hazardous constituents prior to such injection.".

On page 48, beginning on line 18, through line 2 on page 49, strike the sentence following "the environment.".

At the end of S. 757, add the following new section:

"SEC. . Section 3004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'( ) If solid waste from the extraction, beneficiation or processing of ores and minerals, includng phosphate rock and overburden from the mining of uranium ore, is subject to regulation under this subtitle, the Administrator is authorized to modify the requirements of subsections (b), (f)(1) (other than the requirement for ground water monitoring), and (g), in the case of landfills or surface inpoundments receiving such solid waste, to take into account the special characteristics of such wastes, the practical difficulties associated with implementation of such requirements, and site-specific characteristics, including but not limited to the climate, geology, hydrology and soil chemistry at the site, so long as such modified requirements assure protection of human health and the environment.'."

Amend S. 757 by adding the following new section:

"URANIUM MILL TAILINGS

"SEC. . Nothing in the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 shall be construed to affect, modify, or amend the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended.".

On page 49, after line 19, insert the following:

(c)(1) Section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "Interim Status.—", by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), each surface impoundment in existence on the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 and qualifying for the authorization to operate under paragraph (1) of this subsection, which—

"(i) does not have at least one liner, for which there is no evidence that such liner is leaking, or

"(ii) is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology as defined in subparagraph (G) or as determined by criteria or guidance for the acceptable location of facilities issued in accordance with section 3004(f), shall not receive, store, or treat hazardous waste after the date four years after such date of enactment unless such surface impoundment is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundment if it were new. For the purposes of clause (i) of this subparagraph, the term "liner" means a liner meeting the requirements of regulations for new surface impoundments in effect as of such date of enactment, and that the surface impoundment is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section.

"(B) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program), after notice and opportunity for comment, may modify the requirements of subparagraph (A) for any surface impoundment if, not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, the owner or operator demonstrates that such surface impoundment is located, designed and operated so as to assure that there will be no migration of any hazardous constituent into ground water or surface water at any time during the period hazardous waste remains in such surface impoundment. Within 12 months after the receipt of evidence submitted under this subparagraph and not later than 36 months after such date of enactment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator as to whether and, if so, how the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall be modified and applied to such surface impoundment.

"(C) Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply to any surface impoundment which (i) contains treated waste water during the secondary or tertiary phase of an aggressive biological treatment facility subject to a permit issued under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (or which holds such treated waste water after treatment and prior to discharge), (ii) is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under subsection (c) of this section, and (iii) is part of a facility in compliance with section 301(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act, or, in the case of a facility for which no effluent guidelines required under section 304(b)(2) of the Clean Water Act are in effect and no permit under section 402(a)(1) of such Act implementing section 301(b)(2) of such Act has been issued, is part of a facility in compliance with a permit under section 402 of the Clean Water Act which is achieving significant degradation of toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents contained in the untreated waste stream and which has identified those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents in the untreated waste stream to the appropriate permitting authority. The Administrator shall study and report to the Congress on the number, range of size, construction, likelihood of hazardous constituents migrating into ground water, and potential threat to human health and the environment of existing surface impoundments excluded by this subparagraph from the requirements of subparagraph (A). Such report shall address the need, feasibility, and estimated costs of subjecting such existing surface impoundments to the requirements of subparagraph (A). In the case of any existing surface impoundment or class of surface impoundments from which the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) determines hazardous constituents are likely to migrate into ground water, the Administrator (or, if appropriate the State) is authorized to impose such requirements as may be necessary to protect human health and the environment, including the requirements of section 3004(f) which would apply to such impoundments if they were new.

"(D) The owner or operator of any surface impoundment potentially subject to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph who has reason to believe that on the basis of subparagraph (A) (i) or (ii) or subparagraph (C) such surface impoundment is not required to comply with the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall apply to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 for a determination of the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment. Such owner or operator shall provide evidence pertinent to such decision, including evidence as to compliance with ground water monitoring requirements and all reasonably ascertainable evidence on whether such surface impoundment is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (A) (i) or (ii) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrology that (i) such surface impoundment is not located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology, (ii) the liner of such surface impoundment is designed, constructed and operated in accordance with the requirements of regulations, and (iii) based on a review of ground water monitoring information and other available information, there is no evidence such liner is leaking. As part of such evidence an owner or operator relying on subparagraph (C) shall provide a certification by a registered professional engineer with academic training and experience in ground water hydrology that such surface impoundment satisfies the conditions set forth in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (C), based on analysis of those toxic pollutants and hazardous constituents that are likely to be present in the untreated waste stream, and that hazardous constituents are not likely to migrate from the impoundment into ground water. Within twelve months after the receipt of such evidence and not later than 36 months after such date of enactment, and after notice and opportunity for comment, the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) shall advise such owner or operator on the applicability of subparagraph (A) to such surface impoundment.

"(E) In any case in which a surface impoundment is initially determined to be excluded from the requirements of subparagraph (A) but due to a change in condition subsequently becomes subject to subparagraph (A), the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be two years after the date of discovery of such change of condition. In any case in which a surface impoundment becomes subject to subparagraph (A) after the date of enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984 due to the promulgation of additional listings or characteristics for the identification of hazardous wastes under section 3001, the period for compliance in subparagraph (A) shall be four years after the date of such promulgation, the period for demonstrations under subparagraph (B) and for submission of evidence under subparagraph (D) shall be not later than 24 months after the date of such promulgation, and the period for the Administrator (or, if appropriate, the State) to advise such owners or operators under subparagraphs (B) and (D) shall be not later than 36 months after the date of promulgation.

"(F) In the case of any surface impoundment in which the liners and leak detection system have been installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph and in good faith compliance with section 3004(f) and the Administrator's regulations and guidance documents governing liners and leak detection systems, no liner or leak detection system which is different from that which was so installed pursuant to this paragraph shall be required for such unit by the Administrator when issuing the first permit under this section to such facility. Nothing in this subparagraph shall preclude the Administrator from requiring installation of a new liner when the Administrator has reason to believe that any liner installed pursuant to the requirements of this paragraph is leaking.

"(G) For the purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), a surface impoundment is located in an area of vulnerable hydrogeology if the impoundment is over or hydrologically connected to—

"(i) a sole source aquifer, or

"(ii) a formation which contains an underground source of drinking water if such formation or the unsaturated soils hydrologically connected to such formation are characterized by high hydraulic conductivity or permeability (including karst formations, medium-to-course-grained materials or fractured rock) or are geologically unstable, and there is no intervening natural barrier formation that would significantly restrict migration of waste constituents.".

On page 49, line 2, before the quotation marks insert the following:

"The Administrator shall promulgate regulations or issue guidance documents implementing the requirements of paragraph (1) within two years after such date of enactment. Until the effective date of such regulations of guidance documents, the requirement for the installation of two or more liners may be satisfied by the installation of a top liner designed, operated, and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into such liner during the period such facility remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period), and a lower liner designed, operated and constructed to prevent the migration of any constituent through such liner during such period. For the purpose of the preceding sentence, a lower liner shall be deemed to satisfy such requirement if it is constructed of at least a three-foot thick layer of recompacted clay or other natural material with a permeability of no more than 1×10^{-7} centimeter per second.".

On page 43, line 7, strike "section" and insert in lieu thereof "subsection".

HUMPHREY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3410

Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. RANDOLPH, and Mr. STAFFORD) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

USE OF FUND FOR HEALTH ASSESSMENTS, REGISTRY OF EXPOSED INDIVIDUALS, AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

SEC. . (a) Section 111(c)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by inserting "in accordance with subsection (m)," after "(4)"; and

(2) by striking "epidemiologic studies" and inserting in lieu thereof "epidemiologic and laboratory studies and health assessments".

(b) Section 111 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m)(1) For fiscal year 1985, not less than $18,000,000 shall be used for the purpose of carrying out activities described in subsection (c)(4), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated, or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(2) The activities described in subsection (c)(4), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, shall be carried out by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i), either directly, or through grants to the State (or political subdivisions thereof) in the case of States (or political subdivisions) which the Administrator of such Agency determines are capable of carrying out such activities. Such activities shall include conducting health assessments, including those required under section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(3) In determining sites at which to conduct health assessments under this subsection, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall give priority to those facilities or sites at which there is documented evidence of release of hazardous constituents, at which the potential risk to human health appears highest, and for which in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency existing health assessment data is inadequate to assess the potential risk to human health as provided in paragraph (5).

"(4) Any State or political subdivision carrying out an assessment shall report the results of the assessment to the Administrator of such Agency, and shall include recommendations with respect to further activities which need to be carried out under this subsection or section 104. The Administrator of such Agency shall include the same recommendations in a report on the results of any assessment carried out directly by the Agency, and shall issue periodic reports which include the results of all the assessments carried out under this paragraph. Such assessments or other activities shall be reported after appropriate peer review.

"(5) For the purposes of this subsection and subsection (c)(4), the term 'health assessments' shall include preliminary assessments of the potential risk to human health posed by individual sites and facilities subject to this subsection, based on such factors as the nature and extent of contamination, the existence of potential for pathways of human exposure (including ground or surface water contamination, air emissions, and food chain contamination), the size and potential susceptibility of the community within the likely pathways of exposure, the comparison of expected human exposure levels to the short-term and long-term health effects associated with identified contaminants and any available recommended exposure or tolerance limits for such contaminants, and the comparison of existing morbidity and mortality data on diseases that may be associated with the observed levels of exposure. The assessment shall include an evaluation of the risks to the potentially affected population from all sources of such contaminants, including known point or nonpoint sources other than the site or facility in question. A purpose of such preliminary assessments shall be to help determine whether full-scale health or epidemiological studies and medical evaluations of exposed populations shall be undertaken.

"(6) In any case in which a health assessment performed under this subsection (including one required by section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) discloses the exposure of a population to the release of a hazardous substance, the costs of such health assessment may be recovered as a cost of response under section 107 of this Act from persons causing or contributing to such release of such hazardous substance or, in the case of multiple releases contributing to such exposure, to all such releases.".

(c) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(j) EXPOSURE INFORMATION AND HEALTH ASSESSMENTS.—(1) Beginning on the date nine months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each completed application for a permit under subsection (c) for a landfill or surface impoundment shall be accompanied by information reasonably ascertainable by the owner or operator on the potential for the public to be exposed to hazardous wastes or hazardous constituents through releases related to the unit. At a minimum, such information must address:

"(A) reasonably foreseeable potential releases from both normal operations and accidents at the unit, including releases associated with transportation to or from the unit;

"(B) the potential pathways of human exposure to hazardous wastes or constituents resulting from the releases described under subparagraph (A); and

"(C) the potential magnitude and nature of the human exposure resulting from such releases.

The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment for which a completed application for a permit under subsection (c) has been submitted prior to such date shall submit the information required by this paragraph to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) no later than the date nine months after such date of enactment.

"(2) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) shall make the information required by paragraph (1), together with other relevant information, available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program), a landfill or a surface impoundment poses a substantial potential risk to human health, due to the existence of releases of hazardous constituents, the magnitude of contamination with hazardous constituents which may be the result of a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed to such release or contamination, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall conduct a health assessment in connection with such facility in accordance with section 111(m) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 and take other appropriate action with respect to such risks as authorized by section 104(b) and (i) of such Act.

"(3) Any member of the public may submit evidence of releases of or exposure to hazardous constituents from such a facility, or as to the risks or health effects associated with such releases or exposure, to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Diseases Registry, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program).".

CRANSTON AMENDMENT NO. 3411

Mr. CRANSTON proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

On page 40, line 3, strike the word "dissolved".

KASTEN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3412

Mr. CHAFEE (for Mr. KASTEN, for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. DECONCINI) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

Redesignate sections 22 through 29 as sections 23 through 30, and insert after section 21 the following new section:

USE OF RECOVERED MATERIALS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 22. (a) Section 6002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(h) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, in the case of paper products, the term 'recovered materials' includes—

"(1) post consumer materials such as—

"(A) paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes from retail stores, office buildings, homes, and similar establishments, after they have passed through their end-usage as a consumer item, including (but not limited to) used corrugated boxes, newspapers, magazines, mixed wastepaper, tabulating cards, and used cordage; and

"(B) all paper, paperboard, and fibrous wastes which enter and are collected from municipal solid waste; and

"(2) manufacturing wastes, forest residues, and other wastes such as—

"(A) dry paper and paperboard waste generated after completion of the papermaking process (that is, those manufacturing operations up to and including the cutting and trimming of the paper machine reel into smaller rolls or rough sheets) including—

"(i) envelope cuttings, bindery trimmings, and other paper and paperboard waste, resulting from printing, cutting, forming, and other converting operations;

"(ii) bag, box, and carton manufacturing wastes; and

"(iii) butt rolls, mill wrappers, and rejected unused stock;

"(B) finished paper and paperboard from obsolete inventories of paper and paperboard manufacturers, merchants, wholesalers, dealers, printers, converters, or others;

"(C) fibrous byproducts of harvesting, manufacturing, extractive, or wood-cutting processes, flax, straw, linters, bagasse, slash, and other forest residues;

"(D) wastes generated by the conversion of goods made from fibrous material (that is, waste rope from cordage manufacture, textile mill waste, and cuttings); and

"(E) fibers recovered from waste water which otherwise would enter the waste stream.

"(i) PROCUREMENT PROGRAM.—(1) Within one year after the date of publication of applicable guidelines under subsection (e), each procuring agency shall develop an affirmative procurement program which will assure that items composed of recovered materials will be purchased to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with applicable provisions of Federal procurement law.

"(2) Each affirmative procurement program required under this subsection shall, at a minimum, contain—

"(A) a recovered materials preference program;

"(B) an agency promotion program to promote the preference program adopted under subparagraph (A);

"(C) a program for requiring (i) estimates of the total percentage of recovered material utilized in the performance of a contract, (ii) certification of minimum recovered material content actually utilized, where appropriate, and (iii) reasonable verification procedures for estimates and certifications; and

"(D) annual review and monitoring of the effectiveness of an agency's affirmative procurement program.

In the case of paper, the recovered materials preference program required under subparagraph (A) shall provide for the maximum use of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1).

"(3) In developing the preference program, the following options shall be considered for adoption:

"(A) CASE-BY-CASE POLICY DEVELOPMENT.—Subject to the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1), a policy may be established for awarding contracts to the vendor offering an item composed of the highest percentage of recovered materials practicable (and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)). Subject to such limitations, agencies may make an award to a vendor offering items with less than the maximum recovered materials content.

"(B) MINIMUM CONTENT STANDARDS.—Minimum recovered materials content specifications may be set in such a way as to assure that the recovered materials content (and in the case of paper, the content of post consumer materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)) required is the maximum available without jeopardizing the intended end use of the item, or violating the limitations of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of subsection (c)(1).

Procuring agencies shall adopt one of the options set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B), or a substantially equivalent alternative, for inclusion in the affirmative procurement program.".

(b) Section 6002(c)(1) of such Act is amended by inserting after "highest percentage of recovered materials practicable" the following: "(and in the case of paper, the highest percentage of the post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1) practicable)".

(c) Section 6002(d)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "five years after the date of enactment of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "18 months after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984".

(d) Section 6002(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting after "section" the following: ", and in the case of paper, provide for maximizing the use of post consumer recovered materials referred to in subsection (h)(1)"; and

(2) in the matter following paragraph (2), by striking out "for at least three product categories" and all that follows through "1982", and inserting in lieu thereof "for paper within 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, and for three additional product categories (including tires) by October 1, 1985".

(e) Section 6002(g) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "the policy expressed in" and inserting in lieu thereof "the requirements of"; and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and to report to the Congress every two years, beginning in 1984, on actions taken by Federal agencies and the progress made in the implementation of this section, including agency compliance with subsection (d)".

(f)(1) Section 4003(d) of such Act (as added by section 21(b) of this Act) is amended by inserting ", including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002(h)," after "adequate provision shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs".

(2) Section 1006(b) of such Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b) Integration With Other Acts.—" and by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in developing solid waste plans, it is the intention of this Act that in determining the size of a waste-to-energy facility, adequate provisions shall be given to the present and reasonably anticipated future needs, including those needs created by thorough implementation of section 6002 (h), of the recycling and resource recovery interests within the area encompassed by the solid waste plan.".

SPECTER AMENDMENT NO. 3413

Mr. CHAFEE (for Mr. SPECTER) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra, as follows:

SEC. 8. LISTING/DELISTING MODIFICATIONS

On page 50, line 23, insert "information that provides" immediately before "a reasonable basis".

On page 51, line 3, immediately after "hearing." add the following new sentence: "To the maximum extent practicable, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a proposal to grant or deny such a petition within twelve months after receiving a complete application to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility from being regulated as a hazardous waste and shall grant or deny such a petition within twenty-four months after receiving a complete application.".

On page 51, line 3, strike "hearing" and insert in lieu thereof "comment".

On page 51, line 6, insert, "after notice and opportunity for public comment," immediately after "shall".

LUGAR (AND BRADLEY) AMENDMENT NO. 3414

Mr. CHAFEE (for Mr. LUGAR, for himself and Mr. BRADLEY) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

FUNDING OF REMEDIAL ACTION AT FACILITY OWNED BY A STATE OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISION BUT OPERATED PRIVATELY

SEC. 30. Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—(1) by amending section 104(c)(3)(C)(ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) 50 per centum (or such greater amount as the President may determine appropriate, taking into account the degree of responsibility of the State or political subdivision for the release) of the capital, future operation, and future maintenance costs of the response action relating to a release at a facility, primarily used for treatment, storage, or disposal, that was owned and operated by the State or a political subdivision thereof at the time of any disposal of hazardous substances in such facility. For the purpose of subparagraph (c)(ii) of this paragraph, the term "facility" does not include navigable waters or the beds underlying those waters.", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of any State which has paid, at any time after the date of the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1983, in excess of 10 percent of the costs of remedial action at a facility owned but not operated by such State or by a political subdivision thereof, the President shall use money in the Fund to provide reimbursement to such State for the amount of such excess.".

JOHNSTON AMENDMENT NO. 3415

Mr. CHAFEE (for Mr. JOHNSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra; as follows:

On page 43, line 12, strike "If" and insert in lieu thereof "Except as provided in paragraph (10), if";

On page 43, line 20, insert "and paragraph (10)" immediately after "This paragraph"; and

On page 43, following line 22, insert the following new paragraph:

"(10) If the Administrator fails to promulgate regulations under paragraph (1) with respect to non-liquid hazardous wastes containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration greater than or equal to 1,000 mg/kg by the date thirty-two months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, effective twenty-four months after such date, and until the Administrator promulgates such regulations under paragraph (1), such wastes from the refurbishment of textiles and apparel containing halogenated organic compounds in total concentration less than 28,000 mg/kg may be disposed of in a landfill or surface impoundment only if such facility is in compliance with the requirements of section 3004(f) of this Act. All other such wastes shall be subject to the provisions of paragraph (9).".

HEFLIN (AND DENTON) AMENDMENT NO. 3416

Mr. HEFLIN (for himself and Mr. DENTON) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra, as follows:

On page 49, after line 2, add the following: "Any permit under this subsection which is issued for a landfill located within the State of Alabama shall require the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above and between such liners, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act".

ABDNOR (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3417

Mr. ABDNOR (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. DURENBERGER, and Mr. MITCHELL) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 757, supra, as follows:

On page 93, after line 20, add the following new section:

SEC. 30. Study of the problems associated with disposal of hazardous wastes generated by educational institutions.

(a) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, the States, and appropriate educational associations, conduct a comprehensive study of problems associated with the accumulation, storage and disposal of hazardous wastes from educational institutions. The study shall include an investigation of the feasibility and availability of environmentally sound methods for the treatment, storage or disposal of hazardous waste from such institutions, taking into account the types and quantities of such waste which are generated by these institutions, and the non-profit nature of these institutions.

(b) Not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Congress containing the findings of the study carried out under subsection (a).

(c) For purposes of this section—

(1) the term "hazardous waste" means hazardous waste which is listed or identified under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act;

(2) the term "educational institution" includes, but shall not be limited to,

(A) secondary schools as defined in Section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(B) institutions of higher education as defined in Section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, the Committee on Environment and Public Works has scheduled a hearing on the nomination of John B. Waters to be a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority Board of Directors for Tuesday, July 31, at 2 p.m.

Because of the importance of TVA as a national leader in many areas of energy, environment, agriculture, and economic development, we consider this nomination to be of great significance not only to the Tennessee Valley region but also to the whole Nation.

I would, therefore, urge any of my colleagues who are interested to provide the committee with their views in the form of oral and/or written testimony. Those interested should contact me directly or the staff of the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, 1984, in order to receive testimony concerning the following nominations:

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

Harold J. Lezar, Jr., of Texas, to be an Assistant Attorney General, vice Jonathan C. Rose, resigned.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Anthony J. Scirica, of Pennsylvania, to be United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, at 9:30 a.m., to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of Paul Gardner, to be Ambassador to Papua, New Guinea, and to be Ambassador, simultaneously, to the Solomon Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, at 2 p.m., to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of Robert J. Ryan, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Mali; and Alan Wood Lukens, to be Ambassador to the Peoples Republic of the Congo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, at 10:30 a.m., to consider the nomination of Jorge L. Mas, to be a Member of the Advisory Board for Radio Broadcasting to Cuba; Diana Lady Dougan, to be Coordinator for International Communications and Information Policy with rank of Ambassador; and Maynard W. Glitman, to be Representative of the United States of America for Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions Negotiations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, to hold a hearing on relations between the Congress and the Executive and Foreign Relations and Implementation of Foreign Policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, and the House Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations and Human Resources of the House Committee on Government Operations, be authorized to hold a joint hearing during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, to discuss the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relation's 25th anniversary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION, FORESTRY, AND ENVIRONMENT

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Soil and Water Conservation, Forestry, and Environment, of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, July 25, at 10 a.m., to hold a hearing to receive testimony on S. 2773, the Georgia Wilderness Act of 1984; S. 2805/H.R. 5121, the Virginia Wilderness Act of 1984; and S. 2808, the Mississippi National Forest Wilderness Act of 1984.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CREAM OF THE CROP

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as a member of the Congressional Board of the Office of Technology Assessment, I was pleased to see several of OTA's recent reports acclaimed in Energy Users News as among the "cream of the crop" of "top-notch Government reports".

OTA has served the Congress most effectively in its brief but productive 11-year history. It has established a record of producing authoritative, evenhanded assessments on the social, environmental, economic and political impact of technological innovation and application. These reports are receiving increasingly favorable attention, not only from Members of Congress, but also from other Government and nongovernment organizations, private enterprise, the press and foreign countries.

I would like to draw to the attention of my colleagues Mitch Betts' article, "Cream of the Crop" and ask that it be reprinted in its entirety.

CREAM OF THE CROP

(By Mitch Betts)

WASHINGTON.—Have I got a deal for you: nine top-notch government reports on conservation, nuclear, natural gas and cogeneration issues, all for a grand total of $55.50. These are publications I've collected and judged to be the best government energy reports published in the past two years. They are useful, comprehensive, readable and objective.

It is my strongest hope that this concise listing will help you to fill your bookshelf with the best of the government reports at a modest cost, and at the same time help you to battle that affliction commonly called "information overload."

I maintain that the information in these reports will help you not only in a general, educational sense, but also in your day-to-day operations. For example, the "Energy Efficiency of Buildings in Cities" report contains pages of conservation ideas and financing strategies. In any case, this information belongs in your hands as a U.S. citizen, not in some dusty warehouse. The research and publishing costs were financed by your tax dollars.

GENERAL

Energy Information Directory. This is a valuable telephone directory of state and federal energy experts, fully indexed, in a slim, 68-page report. You can locate Energy Department personnel as well as state energy officials—including the very helpful state Energy Extension Service agents. It's free from the Energy Information Administration. (Published semi-annually as EIA-0205. Telephone the National Energy Information Center, 202-252-8800.)

CONSERVATION

Energy Efficiency of Buildings in Cities. This is an excellent primer on building energy conservation—the cost-effective technologies and financing. Published by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment, it explores decisions about conservation measures. (This report can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402, for $9, as stock number 052-003-00871-8.)

Industrial Energy Use. This is a primer on industrial energy consumption and conservation efforts, with special attention given to investment behavior in the energy-intensive industrial sectors: paper, oil-refining, chemicals and steel.

It, too, is published by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment. (This report can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402, for $6 as stock number 052-003-00915-3.)

NATURAL GAS

If you're trying to follow and understand this complex natural gas market, but can't find objective analysis, try these reports from the U.S. Energy Information Administration:

Natural Gas: Use and Expenditures. Read this report first for a basic understanding of the natural gas market, including commercial and industrial consumption patterns. (This is EIA-0382, which costs $5.50.)

Structure and Trends in Natural Gas Wellhead Contracts. Take-or-pay contracts, price escalator clauses, market-out clauses and the like are all explained in this volume. (This is EIA-0419, which costs $5.)

Recent Market Activities of Major Interstate Pipeline Companies. As the title says, the report describes pipeline actions that attempt to deal with the present gas "surplus" and marketing difficulties, including industrial discounts. (This is EIA-0440, which costs $6.)

COGENERATION

Industrial and Commercial Cogeneration. This is a comprehensive and objective look at the technical, financial and political issues surrounding cogeneration, published by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment. (This report can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, for $8.50, as stock number 052-003-00899-8.)

NUCLEAR

Nuclear Power in an Age of Uncertainty. A tough, objective report on the present state and future of nuclear power has been published by Congress' Office of Technology Assessment. It rates utilities, discloses their construction costs and charts a reasonable path for the future. (This report can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402, for $10, as stock number 052-003-00941-2.)●

DC ASSOCIATION FOR RETARDED CITIZENS ESSAY CONTEST

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, in June of this year the District of Columbia Association for Retarded Citizens, in collaboration with the Riggs National Bank, sponsored the fourth annual DC/ARC Scholarship Program. This program consists of an essay competition with this year's topic being the right of mentally retarded persons to live in the community. The two recipients of this year's award for outstanding essays on this subject were John Shea of Gonzaga High School and second place winner, Geoffery Nwachukwu of Macklin Catholic High School. Each essay stresses the importance of public understanding of mentally retarded persons, and both articulate genuine respect for the mentally retarded. In addition, each essay accounts actual observations of successful integration of retarded individuals in the community, and expresses hope for future acceptance of retarded citizens across the country. As Geoffery so eloquently stated: "We all have some mountain to climb. One thing is certain, we can't climb it alone." The words of these youths are both inspiring and encouraging and hopefully a reflection of a growing awareness of mentally retarded persons in today's society. Only through such endeavors as John's and Geoffery's can widespread realization of intended community placement of mentally retarded persons and their aspirations for independent living materialize.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to read these two outstanding essays which I ask to be printed in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks. The words are important for all of us, most particularly for disabled persons themselves who can only benefit from a community setting as stated by John Shea:

Mentally retarded persons in small family-like groups and under the caring supervision of the house counselors, can enjoy their lives to the fullest—a far cry from the stagnant and isolated atmosphere of institutions which, for too many years housed mentally retarded.

The essays follow:

(First Place Winner: John Shea, Gonzaga College High School)

NEIGHBORHOODS ARE FOR EVERYONE

The beautiful old house stood stately in the Long Island moonlight, looking over the wooded yard that would soon echo with happy sounds. Within a few days the now empty house would be home to several mentally retarded persons, most of whom had spent years living in dreary institutions.

Suddenly a spark, and before long tongues of fire, fed by trails of an arsonist's gasoline, were racing through the newly decorated rooms. Soon the proud home was reduced to ruins and with it, seemingly, the hope for a better life of my uncle and several others who were scheduled to enter the home.

In defiance of the arsonists, a new home for the retarded has now risen from the ashes of the old. After almost two years in operation there is now greater community acceptance of, and even a slowly growing appreciation for, the mentally retarded in their midst.

While, fortunately, this is an extreme example of community opposition to group residences for the mentally retarded, the fears and hostilities it illustrates are present in varying degrees whenever such residences are proposed. I have seen it even in my own neighborhood when a proposal for a group home for the retarded aroused fierce opposition several years ago. Much of this melted away when the nearby residents found that these were harmless, loving people whose presence was not endangering them or their property values. Hostility turned to resigned acceptance and finally, for some, a genuine appreciation for these fine human beings who are limited only in their ability to learn.

I believe mentally retarded persons belong in the community. Here they can reach their fullest potential by learning to care for themselves, to behave in socially acceptable ways, to help others, and to develop the skills that may enable some to become self-sufficient and make greater contributions to the community. Here, in small family-like groups and under the caring supervision of the house counselors, they can enjoy their lives to the fullest—a far cry from the stagnant and isolated atmosphere of the institutions which for too many years housed many mentally retarded.

From an economic standpoint the costs of maintaining a retarded person in a community setting are also significantly lower than in an institution. But the greatly improved quality of life for them, and the inspiration they provide to their "normal" neighbors who are able to witness what the retarded can do when given a chance, are probably the most important reasons of all why our mentally retarded friends belong with us here in the community.

With greater help from our community and church leaders and the understanding and assistance of all citizens, hopefully community residences will soon be available to all who need them.

(Second Place Winner: Geoffery Nwachukwu, Macklin Catholic High School)

I believe that mentally retarded people belong in the community because that could be the one step that leads them to a full productive life, one all human beings are entitled to live.

When the words mentally retarded are spoken people get a certain chill through their body. The first thing that they think of is a useless individual who is a threat and a disgrace. They invision someone who does nothing for themselves or society, and is incapable of doing anything constructive or productive. To say this concept is wrong would be putting it mildly. Nothing could be further from the truth. Not only can these people learn to do for themselves and others but they can and are capable of becoming very productive members of society. Through Supervised homes, Specialized Foster Care, Intermediate Care facilities, and public awareness and concern mentally retarded persons can become the best they can be. The true handicap is the apathy and ignorance of people.

It's one thing to say, "Hey why don't I help" and quite another to actually get up and make a difference, to actually give a damn. But it can and is being done.

There is no way that I can know how it feels or what it is like to be mentally retarded because I'm not. I can only have sympathy for the mentally retarded, never empathy. My sympathy, however, runs a little deeper than others because I have a brother whom I love very much who is mentally retarded. When I look at my brother I don't see "mentally retarded." I see a six year old boy who laughs and plays and cries like any normal six year old. He may have to try a little harder to do and understand things but he gets by just the same.

The dictionary defines mental retardation as abnormally slow physical, intellectual, and emotional development. In that sense we all have something that retards us. We all have some mountain to climb. One thing is certain, we can't climb them alone.

Help someone climb their mountain, help someone reach their peek. The trip up is a lot easier when there's somebody to hold on to.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notifications which have been received. Any portion which is classified information has been deleted for publication, but is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The notifications follow:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, July 23, 1984.

In reply refer to: I-03259/84ct.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 84-54, concerning the Department of the Air Force's proposed Letter of Offer to Kuwait for defense articles and services estimated to cost $78 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Lieutenant General, USAF, Director.

[Transmittal No. 84-54]

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Kuwait.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: Major Defense Equipment,[1] $0 million; Other, $78 million; Total, $78 million.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: English language training, undergraduate pilot training, and advanced flying training for 150 trainees.

(iv) Military Department: Air Force (TBL).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: None.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Case not included in Section 28 report.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: July 23, 1984.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

KUWAIT—PILOT TRAINING

The Government of Kuwait has requested the purchase of English language training, undergraduate pilot training (UPT), and advanced flying training for 150 trainees at an estimated cost of $78 million.

This sale is consistent with the stated U.S. policy of assisting other nations to provide for their own self-defense by allowing the transfer of reasonable amounts of defense articles and services. It will demonstrate the continuing willingness of the United States to support the Kuwaiti effort to improve the security of the country and thereby increase the stability of the Persian Gulf region.

Currently the Kuwait Air Force is unable to provide UPT to a large cadre of students.

[1] As defined in Section 47(6) of the Arms Export Control Act.

This has resulted in a shortfall of qualified pilots for operational units. Through the USAF UPT program Kuwait expects to relieve the pilot shortfall and provide a better balance in its pilot-to-aircraft ratio for operational units.

The sale of this support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

There will be no prime contractor for this sale since the USAF will provide the majority of the requested training. However, the USAF contractor for the flight screening portion of the UPT is Doss Aviation, Incorporated of Livingston, Texas.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives to Kuwait.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, July 23, 1984.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Jordan.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: Major Defense Equipment,[1] $0 million; Other, $70 million; Total, $70 million.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Product Improvement Program (PIP) modification kits to include hardware for the Improved (I)-HAWK missile system with installation, technical and logistical engineering assistance, concurrent spare parts, related support equipment, support, publications, and training.

(iv) Military Department: Army (VIP).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: None.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Case not included in Section 28 report.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: July 23, 1984.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

JORDAN—I-HAWK PRODUCT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM MODIFICATION KITS

The Government of Jordan has requested the purchase of Product Improvement Program (PIP) modification kits to include hardware for the Improved (I)-HAWK missile system with installation, technical and logistical engineering assistance, concurrent spare parts, related support equipment, support, publications, and training at an estimated cost of $70 million.

This sale is consistent with the stated U.S. policy of assisting other nations to provide for their own self-defense by allowing the transfer of reasonable amounts of defense articles and services. It will demonstrate the continuing willingness of the United States to support the Jordanian effort to improve the security of the country and thereby increase the stability of the region.

The articles and services being offered are a continuation of support which has been provided to the Government of Jordan since its acquisition of its fixed-site HAWK air defense system in 1971. The I-HAWK PIP modification kits will be used to provide follow-on support in upgrading the HAWK air defense system employed by the Government of Jordan. Acquisition of the PIP is essential to maintaining configuration commonality with I-HAWK systems employed by U.S. forces, thereby permitting continued logistical support. These PIP modifications will not provide the Jordanian I-HAWK systems with a mobility capability.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The principal contractors will be the Raytheon Company of Andover, Massachusetts, and the Northrop Corporation of Anaheim, California.

Implementation of this sale is expected to require the assignment of 12 additional U.S. Government personnel for 40 days and 29 contractor representatives for 16 months to Jordan.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

KOREA—AN/TPQ-36 MORTAR LOCATING RADARS

The Government of Korea has requested the purchase of a quantity of 12 AN/TPQ-36 mortar locating radar systems with ancillary equipment, field replacement spares, and support at an estimated cost of $58 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy objectives of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly country which has been and continues to be an important force for modernization and progress in eastern Asia. The sale of this equipment and support will enhance deterrence and contribute to the preservation of peace and stability on the Korean peninsula.

The purchase of the radars and support will provide the Korean Army an automated capability for locating hostile mortars. As such, it will enhance the effectiveness of Korean counter-mortar fire. Korean military personnel have the technical capability to operate these systems.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the Hughes Aircraft Corporation of Fullerton, California.

Implementation of this sale will require the following additional assignments to Korea: four additional U.S. Government personnel, two for 20 days and two for four months; and one additional contractor representative for four months.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

DEAR MR. NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Thailand.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: Major Defense Equipment,[1] $0 million; Other, $207 million; Total, $207 million.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Equipment and Services required for the modernization and upgrade of the Royal Thai Air Force (RTAF) Central Air Defense Sector Command, Control, and Communications System; replacement of the existing Air Operations Center and the collocated Sector Operations Center; modification of the radar equipment located at five radar posts; and provision of up to 11 radar extractors, a data link capability for interoperability with U.S. forces, spare parts, support equipment, support, tools, test equipment, technical data, and training.

(iv) Military Department: Air Force (DEH).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: None.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Included in report for quarter ending December 31, 1983.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: July 23, 1984.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

THAILAND—MODERNIZATION OF AIR DEFENSE COMMAND, CONTROL, AND COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS

The Government of Thailand has requested the purchase of equipment and services required for the modernization and upgrade of the Royal Thai Air Force (RTAF) Central Air Defense Sector Command, Control, and Communications System; replacement of the existing Air Operations Center and the collocated Sector Operations Center; modification of the radar equipment located at five radar posts; and provision of up to 11 radar extractors, a data link capability for interoperability with U.S. forces, spare parts, support equipment, support, tools, test equipment, technical data, and training at an estimated cost of $207 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly, moderate nation which is an important force for peace and regional stability in Southeast Asia. Recent events have underscored the need for the Thai armed forces to maintain well-equipped military units to deter hostile forces operating from neighboring countries.

Sale of the equipment and services for modernizing and upgrading the RTAF air defense system will strengthen Thai air defenses and thereby reduce the possibility of armed aggression against Thailand. Much of the equipment in the Thai air defense system is reaching the end of its useful life and is no longer maintainable. The supporting communications network also contains equipment which is obsolete and many of the communications links perform marginally.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be determined at a later date on a competitive basis through standard procurement procedures. The MITRE Corporation of Bedford, Massachusetts, will provide system engineering support.

Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of four additional U.S. Government personnel for two and one-half years and 17 contractor representatives for up to seven years to Thailand.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

THE AMERICAN STEEL INDUSTRY: MYTH VERSUS REALITY: IX

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am presenting my ninth in a series of brief statements that will appear periodically in an effort to elevate the level of debate on the crisis in the American steel debate.

I would like to discuss the major findings of a preliminary "Survey of Likely Voters in Nine Industrial States on Trade Issues" as prepared by Fingerhut/Granados Opinion Research for the United Steelworkers of America. Between June 22 and 26, 1984, 524 likely voters in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Texas, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, and Missouri were surveyed; States able to provide 162 of the 270 electoral votes needed by a winning Presidential candidate. Currently, Fingerhut/Granados is working on a more in-depth survey with State by State results forthcoming. The preliminary survey demonstrates the support of a strong majority for more aggressive U.S. trade policies limiting steel imports. Lynn Williams, president of the United Steelworkers of America stated that—

The poll confirms that the general public shares the opinions I hear our own union members express every day. The problem of jobs and the issue of trade are inseparable.

These findings have become increasingly important now that the President has received a positive injury finding and remedy recommendations of a combination of tariffs and quotas for the U.S. steel industry from the ITC. As both the administration and Congress consider steel import quotas for this beleaguered American industry, it is important that the views of the American public also be considered.

MYTH

Most Americans oppose more aggressive U.S. trade policies, including limits on steel imports.

REALITY

According to the Fingerhut/Granados opinion survey, of likely voters asked their views on Government policies toward foreign imports, 76 percent felt they should be tougher, that is, that tighter controls of foreign imports into this country should be instituted. Only 13 percent favored allowing more foreign products into our country. Sixty-five percent of the same voters favored quotas or tariffs on steel imports while only 20 percent opposed such measures. The majority of Democrats, Republicans, and Independents voted with the majority.

MYTH

The recent economic recovery and falling national unemployment rate has lessened the average worker's concern about the security of his job.

REALITY

Despite a falling unemployment rate, jobs continue to be a priority concern for workers. In the Fingerhut/Granados survey, 29 percent of likely voters in the selected States are somewhat concerned that a member of their family may lose their job during the next year or so. Another 29 percent of likely voters are very concerned. As a result, 78 percent of all voters and 90 percent of those supporting import limits believe that a lot of American workers are losing their jobs from imports and it's time to put a stop to that.

MYTH

The American people have not tied their support of steel import limits to job-creating reinvestment within the industry.

REALITY

The survey shows a large majority of those questioned favor import limits on steel to promote job-creating investment within the industry. Seventy-seven percent of surveyed voters support requiring American steel companies to reinvest profits in modernization of their plants. Eighty-eight percent of the same voters see subsidized imports as being unfair to American workers who lose their jobs because of it. In the voter's minds, steel import relief is tied directly to job-creating reinvestment in the basic steel industry. The ITC also tied import relief to job-creating reinvestment in its recent recommendation.

MYTH

Unfair trade practices in foreign countries are not a major cause of the U.S. steel industry's problems.

REALITY

Almost 9 out of 10 surveyed agreed that it was unfair for American workers to lose their jobs because of subsidized foreign imports. Foreign competitors who bar U.S. products, use cheap labor, and subsidize exports are of particular concern to over 75 percent of those questioned. In fact, 86 percent of those surveyed felt "it's wrong to allow foreign products into the United States from a country which doesn't allow equal entrance of U.S. product into their country. That's just not fair and we should not allow it." Most voters correctly link unfair trade practices with the negative effects registered in the steel industry's performance.

MYTH

The Reagan administration will continue to enjoy the support of voters regardless of how it handles the trade issue generally and steel import limits specifically.

REALITY

Although personally popular and leading former Vice President Mondale by 44 to 37 percent in the surveyed States at the time of the poll, President Reagan remains vulnerable on both jobs and trade issues. With 58 percent of surveyed voters fearing unemployment in their families within the near future, the President is rated negatively on keeping unemployment down by a 65- to 34-percent margin.

As far as trade policy, Mondale led Reagan by 39 to 35 percent as being more likely to support trade policies good for people like you. Sixty-three percent of all voters said that if Reagan fails to limit imports on foreign steel it'll show he cares more about corporate profits than working people's jobs. Voters also were concerned about possible administration actions which would weaken proposals to limit imports or allow the Japanese and other importers to enter the American market at will.

Mr. President, I ask that the complete text of the Fingerhut/Granados Opinion Research poll of "Major Findings of Survey of Likely Voters in Nine Industrial States on Trade Issues" be printed in the RECORD.

The text follows:

UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA, AFL-CIO-CLC,
Washington, DC, July 18, 1984.

WASHINGTON.—In a recent survey of likely voters in nine key industrial states, a strong majority has expressed support for more aggressive U.S. trade policies limiting steel imports.

Almost nine out of ten surveyed agreed that it was unfair for American workers to lose their jobs because of subsidized foreign imports.

The survey by Fingerhut/Granados Opinion Research of Washington, D.C., an independent polling firm, was conducted late last month among likely voters in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Texas, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama and Missouri.

Of those taking part in the survey, 76 percent said government policies toward foreign imports should be "tougher," while only 13 percent said the government should allow more foreign products into this country.

Jobs continue to be the primary concern among voters. Some 78 percent of those responding—including 90 percent of those expressing support for import limits—expressed a belief that "a lot of American workers are losing their jobs from imports and it's time to put a stop to that."

By a margin of 65 percent to 20 percent, voters endorsed restraints on steel imports, with the majority opinion shared by Democrats, Republicans and Independents.

The nine states in which the survey was conducted account for far more than half of the 270 electoral votes required to elect a U.S. president.

Generally, three reasons were cited for voter support of steel import limits:

To protect workers' jobs.

Job-creating reinvestment in the (domestic) steel industry.

Opposition to unfair trade practices by foreign countries.

The same survey showed that a heavy majority of those questioned favor import limits to promote job-creating investment in the American steel industry. For example, 77 percent expressed support for requiring American steel companies to reinvest profits in modernization of their plants.

Lynn Williams, President of the United Steelworkers of America, stated: "The poll confirms that the general public shares the opinions I hear our own union members express every day. The problem of jobs and the issue of trade are inseparable."

[NOTE.—The survey was commissioned by the United Steelworkers of America.]

MAJOR FINDINGS OF SURVEY OF LIKELY VOTERS IN NINE INDUSTRIAL STATES ON TRADE ISSUES

BACKGROUND

Between June 22 and 26, 1984, Fingerhut/Granados Opinion Research surveyed 524 likely voters in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Texas, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, and Missouri. These states provide 162 of the 270 electoral votes needed by a winning presidential candidate. The interviews were conducted by telephone. The margin of error for the full sample is ±4-6%.

MAJOR FINDINGS

1. A strong majority of likely voters support more aggressive U.S. trade policies, including limits on steel imports.

Asked their views on government policies toward foreign imports, 76% of all likely voters say they should be "tougher," that is keeping tighter control over foreign goods coming into our country. Only 13% say the government should allow "more foreign products into our country." By 65% to 20%, voters endorse "quotas or tariffs" on steel imports. While opposition is somewhat stronger among high income households (26% among $30,000 + households), majorities of a demographic groups endorse steel import limits. Supporters include majorities of Democrats, Republicans, and Independents.

2. The major reasons for voter support of steel import limits are:

Concern to protect workers' jobs;

Concern for job-creating reinvestment in the steel industry;

Opposition to unfair trade practices by foreign countries.

Despite the falling national unemployment rate, 58% of all likely voters in these states say they are at least "somewhat concerned" that a member of their family may "lose their job during the next year or so." 29% of all likely voters are "very concerned." Among those in their 40's and 50's, two age groups that vote in heavy numbers, 43% and 36%, respectively are "very concerned" about family unemployment.

As a result, saving jobs and helping working people are the major reasons cited by supporters of steel import limits. Likewise, 78% of all voters, including 90% of supporters of import limits, believe "a lot of American workers are losing their jobs from imports and it's time to put a stop to that."

Beyond that, heavy majorities favor action to promote job-creating investment in the steel industry. For example, 77% of all voters support "requiring American steel companies to reinvest profits in modernization of their plants." 88% of all voters agree that:

"Foreign governments are destroying American industry by subsidizing the costs of manufacturing with government funding—and that's not fair to American industry or to American workers who lose their jobs because of it."

These results underline the importance voters attach to tying import limits to job-creating investment in basic industry.

Finally, voters are particularly concerned about unfair foreign competitors that bar U.S. products, use cheap labor, and subsidize exports. Here are the percentages of all voters who agree with the following statements regarding competitive practices:

Statement	Percent of voters agreeing
It's wrong to allow foreign products into the U.S. from a country which doesn't allow equal entrance of U.S. products into their country. That's just not fair and we should not allow it	86
Foreign countries are taking advantage of America; they flood us with cheap products which cost American jobs, and then they do everything they can to keep American made products out of their markets	77
In contrast, only 40 percent of voters agree that: The reason that foreign products are doing so well in the American market is that they are less expensive and a better value, so it's wrong to control or limit foreign imports

3. The trade issue in general and steel import limits specifically pose political dangers for the Reagan Administration.

While President Reagan remains personally popular and leads Mondale by 44–37% in these states, he is vulnerable on both the jobs and trade issues. With 58% fearing unemployment in their families in the next year or so, he is rated negatively overall on "keeping unemployment down" by a 65–34% margin. Among undecided voters, his rating on this issue is 72% negative and among "soft" Reagan supporters it is 54% negative.

The President's vulnerability is even more pronounced when the jobs issue is given a regional and class spin. For example, 69% of all voters in these states say he has done "only fair" or "poor" in "looking out for the economic well-being of this part of the country." 64% give him a similar negative rating on "representing you and people like you." Consider these figures for "soft" Reagan voters:

How good a job is Reagan doing:	Percent [1]
As President	41
Handling the economy	26
Keeping unemployment down	54
Representing you and people like you	59
Looking out for the economic well-being of this part of the country	61

[1] Percent of "soft" Reagan voters saying "only fair" or "poor."

On trade issues specifically, which, as noted above, voters see largely in terms of jobs, Reagan is just as vulnerable if he is perceived as being weak in his response to foreign imports. When this survey was conducted, Mondale led him modestly (39–35%) as "more likely to support trade policies good for people like you." Significantly, 26% were not sure which candidate was better on this issue. Asked to predict how Reagan would respond, 48% said he "cares about working people and that's why he'll limit imports on foreign steel." But if he fails to do so, 63% of all voters said "it'll show he cares more about corporate profits than working people's jobs." Among "soft" Reagan supporters, that number rises to 68%.

Asked how they would react if Reagan "weakened" proposals to limit imports, 31% of undecided voters and 39% of "soft" supporters said they would be less inclined to support him. 47% of undecideds and 53% of "soft" Reagan voters said the same about their reaction if Reagan supported "allowing the Japanese and other importers to enter the American market at will."

APPENDIX C.—A WORD OF EXPLANATION ON THE "STRENGTH OF ARGUMENTS INDEX"

We tested a series of questions in which we asked respondents to tell us whether they strongly agreed, agreed, disagreed, or strongly disagreed with some statements about the imports issue. Then, we created an "index" which allows us to calculate relatively how persuasive these test arguments, or themes, are. Using this methodology, we can then determine exactly which arguments are most persuasive to certain key subgroups—like union members, Democrats, undecided voters, age groups, and so on.

In the "Strength of Arguments Index" below, the most persuasive arguments are those which stress reinvestment of profits into the steel industry, fairness, and employment arguments. And, it is also important to note that all of the pro-quota arguments we tested show some degree of persuasiveness (the lowest with an index of +42).

The real problem is that the steel companies should invest more in the steel business. Limits on imports are a good idea if the companies are required to reinvest in creating jobs for working people	+112	30	58	1	4
It's wrong to allow foreign products into the United States from a country which doesn't allow equal entrance of American products into their country. That's just not fair and we should not allow it	+111	38	48	2	9
If we allow foreign imports to destroy an industry in our state or local community even if some member of our family is not employed in that industry, it is still dangerous, because sooner or later many of the rest of us will be affected by it	+102	30	55	2	9
One reason foreign goods can undersell American products is that cheap labor is used; and that's not fair to America or the American worker	+86	24	55	1	15

THE EQUAL ACCESS TO JUSTICE ACT

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, there is an old adage which states, "you can't fight city hall." Through the years a courageous few have taken up the battle, and ultimately prevailed, but at what cost? The Equal Access to Justice Act, which has provided individuals and small businesses an opportunity to "fight city hall," will expire on September 30 of this year. This measure states that in those instances where an individual prevails against the Federal Government, that citizen is entitled to recover all legal expenses incurred as a result of the proceedings, providing the Government cannot substantially justify its purpose in persuing the litigation. I strongly support S. 919, the bill which reauthorizes this important piece of legislation.

Prior to the enactment of the Equal Access to Justice Act, individuals who brought suit against Government agencies often negotiated inequitable settlements out of court. Such action was deemed the only practical solution for those who were without the substantial resources necessary for extended, expensive litigation. The Equal Access to Justice Act has given the average American citizen not only the encouragement to fight against arbitrary regulation, but also satisfaction in the knowledge that if the battle is won it will be at no cost.

This measure makes it clear that Government agencies should be certain their cases are justified, or, as this bill mandates, be held responsible for the costs of the proceedings on both sides. As a result, Government agencies have adopted a much more cautious attitude toward litigation involving average citizens.

As the September 30 expiration date draws nearer, I ask that my colleagues join with me in supporting S. 919, the reauthorization of the Equal Access to Justice Act. Immediate consideration is necessary for this crucial and time-sensitive piece of legislation.●

ALPHA KAPPA ALPHA SORORITY CELEBRATES 75TH ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, 2 years ago the members of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority came to Boston for their biannual covention. This year they have come to the place of their birth, Washington, DC, to celebrate their 75th anniversary and I would like to welcome them to the Nation's Capital.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., was found in 1908 at Howard University, Washington, DC. More than 10,000 women of Alpha Kappa Alpha and their families are visiting the Nation's Capital of their diamond jubilee boule.

The Mayor has proclaimed July 22-29, 1984, as Alpha Kappa Alpha week.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., is a service-oriented organization of college women working in education, the arts, sciences, the media, and homemaking.

Currently, the national programs for Alpha Kappa Alpha focus on programs of service, organizational impact and collaboration, women involved in global concerns, economic development and renewal. Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority provides scholarships to undergraduate members who will take their place among tomorrow's leaders. The scholarship program includes: The domestic travel grants, foreign travel tour, and the Hanes/Barbara K. Phillips Scholarship.

The service record of Alpha Kappa Alpha chapters across the country includes programs for the aged, Job Corps for young women, academic support for high school students and health care for preschool children. Locally, chapters support Washington area commitments to community service.

One of the major activities of the sorority is the Alpha Kappa Alpha connection, a mechanism which is designed to mobilize the membership in an effective manner to influence political, social, and economic changes in the 1980's.

Throughout its long and productive history, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority has recognized and responded to the needs of institutions and organizations designed to protect and improve the quality of life among black people.

Alpha Kappa Alpha has a continuing involvement with, and support of, such organizations as the United Negro College Fund; the NAACP; the National Urban League; National Pan-Hellenic Council; Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Push; Leadership Conference on Civil Rights; Black Women's Agenda; Operation Big Vote; and the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc.

Many local chapters and/or members contribute to groups that address the problems and issues within their communities. Twelve chapters in Washington, Maryland, and Virginia, representing nearly 2,000 active members have united to plan the 1984 boule. Mrs. Carolyn H. Troupe, a retired principal of the DC public schools and well-known reading specialist and training workshop consultant, is boule chairman.

The hostess chapters are Xi Omega, Washington, DC; Zeta Chi Omega, Alexandria and Arlington, VA; Theta Omega Omega, Montgomery County, MD; Iota Gamma Omega, Prince Georges County, MD; Xi Zeta Omega, Washington, DC; Lambda Kappa Omega, Fairfax, VA; Alpha, Howard University; Eta, Bowie State College; Beta Lambda, University of the District of Columbia; Theta Nu, University of Maryland; Lambda Zeta, American University; and Mu Delta, George Washington University.

Again, Mr. President, we welcome them.●

NEW VIEW OF OFFSHORE DRILLING

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I would like to submit for the record an editorial which appeared in the July 8, 1984, Arizona Republic. During fiscal years 1982 through 1984, the amount of acreage in the Outer Continental Shelf [OCS] placed in moratoria by the Congress and therefore prohibited from being included in the Department of the Interior's oil and gas leasing program, increased from 736,000 acres to 52 million acres. This has been an alarming trend, particularly in the face of continued instability in the Middle East. The United States must move forward to lease, develop and produce its vast resources offshore in an orderly and systematic manner. As the editorial points out, Congress appears to be slowly recognizing this need. In recent action, the House Appropriations Committee, while not eliminating moratoria language entirely from Interior's fiscal year 1985 appropriations bill, did not increase the amount and allowed a ban off the Florida gulf coast to lapse. However, I believe we must act decisively and I urge each member of this legislative body to join with me in opposing any attempt to restrict or prohibit activity on the OCS this year.

The editorial follows:

[From the Arizona Republic, July 8, 1984]

NEW VIEW OF OFFSHORE DRILLING

Although the process has been slow, Congress seems to have been gradually changing its attitude toward offshore oil drilling.

However, a general ban on offshore drilling will probably not be lifted until a new Congress convenes next year, since the months ahead will be devoted to political conventions and then the fall election.

There are reasons for the change of attitude:

The nation's vulnerability to oil-import disruptions, particularly increasing risks caused by the Iran-Iraq war.

The patient work of Interior Secretary William Clark who has made domestic energy development a top priority.

The United States has reduced its dependence on Persian Gulf imports. But the possibility of American military intervention in the area remains because U.S. allies in Western Europe and Japan are still highly dependent on Arab oil.

Americans spent $52 billion on imported oil last year. That was three-fourths of the nation's total trade deficit in 1983. The total deficit may soar to $130 billion this year.

This should not be. The federal government has 4 billion acres available for leasing where oil might be located. Only 20 million acres has been leased.

Moreover, Congress ordered the interior secretary in both 1953 and 1978 to make such offshore oil and gas deposits productive. However, in the past two years, Congress reversed itself and prohibited production on 52 million acres containing an estimated 2.2 billion barrels of oil.

The House Appropriations Committee recently approved renewed drilling bans off both Massachusetts and California. But it allowed a ban off the Florida Gulf Coast to lapse and decided not to prohibit drilling off Alaska's Bristol Bay.

Clark, who believes the attitude in Congress is starting to swing his way, argues that after more than two decades of talk about producing offshore oil, the country still does not have a producing oil or gas well in federal waters off Alaska or the Atlantic Coast.

He also cites how Interior consults far more with state and local governments in choosing or rejecting development and production sites, and Clark says no environmentally sensitive areas will be leased.

Congress has been talking one way and acting another for more than 20 years. It has ordered Interior to produce more domestic energy while placing one barrier after another in its way.

A reversal of this attitude cannot come too soon.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this notice of a Senate employee who proposes to participate in a program, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Ann McKinney, of the staff of Senator RICHARD LUGAR, to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by the Tunghai University, from July 16-24, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. McKinney in the conference in Taipei, Taiwan, at the expense of Tunghai University, is in the interests of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Margaret Webber of the staff of Senator ARMSTRONG, to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Tunghai University, from July 15-24, 1984.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Webber in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of Tunghai University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

IN COMMEMORATION OF THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION ACT

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, 10 years ago today, the Legal Services Corporation Act was enacted into law marking the new beginning of poor people's rights and access to justice. In spite of the difficulties, attacks, and funding cuts which have confronted the program in the past 3½ years, I am happy to pronounce that the legal services movement is strong, healthy, and successful in its mission to help poor people redress their legal problems in civil matters. This is possible thanks to the extreme dedication of a corps of legal services staff who are willing to serve their indigent clients under trying circumstances, at below-average wages, and often with very little recognition. Yet, these are the people who, in hundreds of storefront offices in neighborhoods around the country, work daily to reduce the suffering of poor people's loss of shelter, loss of jobs, loss of health, loss of possessions, loss of income, loss of children, loss of an education, loss of civil rights, loss of their dignity and self-respect at the hands of people, institutions, and government agencies in violation of the law.

Even while we are praising the high-quality work and immense contributions of the attorneys, paralegals, and support staff in local legal services programs, what we are truly praising and want to reiterate is the notion of equal justice for all.

Twenty years ago, Lewis Powell, now Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, gave substance to the meaning of equal justice when, as president of the American Bar Association, he said:

> Equal justice under law is not merely a caption on the facade of the Supreme Court building. It is perhaps the most inspiring ideal of our society. It is one of the ends for which our entire legal system exists. It is fundamental that justice should be the same, in substance and availability, without regard to economic status.

Ten years ago, with the passage of the Legal Services Corporation Act, that idea was embodied in our laws. Today, commemorating the first decade of the LSC Act, let us renew our commitment to that notion, and pledge that the burning light of justice will never dim in the lives of our countrymen and countrywomen regardless of their status, income, race, and beliefs.●

10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TURKISH INVASION OF CYPRUS

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, July 20 marked the 10th anniversary of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus. Yet in those 10 years, through the placing and lifting of a United States embargo on Turkey, through diplomatic negotiations, through meeting after meeting between the Greek and Cypriot negotiators, no settlement of the Cyprus problem has been reached. In fact, progress has taken a step backward due to the November 1983 action of the Turkish Cypriot community, which issued a universal declaration of independence.

Obviously, the Turkish Government was totally secure in participating in the decision as well as recognizing the new government, as they were the only country in the world to do so.

This administration has continually fostered the notion that Turkey, by accident of geography, is of paramount importance to the United States. Meanwhile, the unstable situation in Cyprus continues to jeopardize our security interests in the Eastern Mediterranean and is a major impediment to restoring friendly relations between our NATO allies Greece and Turkey.

I urge my colleagues to support the Senate Foreign Relations action which will place conditions on military aid to Turkey, thus reducing tensions and insuring the return of stability in the region.

We must send a clear message to both Turkey and our own administration—that Cyprus will not and cannot be forgotten. A settlement on Cyprus is essential to its humanitarian and economic goals, as well as to United States foreign policy objectives in the Aegean. I remain committed to working for a peaceful resolution to this tragic problem.●

"SAFE RIDES" PROGRAM IN DARIEN, CT

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, in their eagerness to attack the problem of alcohol-related traffic deaths, many individuals and organizations are treating the proposed 21 drinking age as a solution in itself. A 21 drinking age should help to reduce these tragic fatalities, but it will not attack the full dimensions of what in reality is a much more complex problem. What congressional legislators on down to community leaders must do is begin to educate the population and provide disincentives, both moral and legal, to driving under the influence of alcohol. The measure we passed here a few weeks ago makes a strong move in that direction, but, at the same time, we should be encouraging other means of combating drunk driving.

A town in my State of Connecticut experienced a series of fatal teenage accidents between 1978 and 1981 as a result of drunk driving. However, in the town of Darien today there is a preventive program called Safe Rides. During the 3 years of its existence, it has cut the number of deaths to zero. Parents, high school students, and school officials took the lead in doing something about the problem. They came up with this completely volunteer-run organization where anyone may call in if they, or someone they are out with, is too drunk to drive. They receive a free ride home, no questions asked. Using largely donated radio equipment and a small office space, the program has achieved such success that it has been copied in 130 other communities nationwide. Recently, Safe Rides in Darien also benefited from corporate interest in the form of a $1,000 donation from the Exxon Corp. for a new radio system to enable more efficient service.

This preventive program in Darien is but one community-based way of dealing effectively with the problem of drunk driving. It did not require any outside money. It required only caring, and cooperation, and involvement by the teenagers themselves, who donate their time as drivers on Friday and Saturday nights.

My fear is that in our current attempt to encourage States to enact a 21 drinking age, we will become complacent and assume that we have made a good-faith effort. Lack of alcohol education, lack of community involvement, and simply lack of an alternative to driving oneself home after a night of overconsumption will continue to cause these preventable deaths. Our goal as legislators should not be to grab for quick, stopgap measures, but instead to support programs which will provide realistic, workable solutions.

With model programs like Safe Rides in Darien, I think that communities can begin to come to grips with drunk driving at a direct level—where they can be effective. State-mandated drinking laws should always be enforced to the best of the abilities of local police, but we should not kid ourselves that the 21 drinking age by itself is going to stop drunk driving.

At best, programs like Safe Rides can stop teenagers from drinking and driving. At the very least, they can serve as a constant reminder that alcohol should be consumed only in moderation; and that when it is abused, there is an alternative to staggering to one's car, turning the key, and jeopardizing one's own life and the lives of others.

Mr. President, I ask that articles from the Darien News-Review and the New York Daily News describing the Safe Rides Program be printed in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

SAFE RIDES: KIDS HELPING KIDS MAKE IT BACK HOME

(By Chris Elsberry)

Friday night, 10 p.m.

In a back room in the shadowy recesses of the Union Trust Bank Building, five teenagers and an adult advisor sit by a telephone, waiting . . . hoping for a call that might save someone's life.

For nearly four months now, Safe Rides—a student-organized and operated program designed and developed by young people who care about the health and safety of their peers—has been providing rides for anyone who is under the influence of alcohol or drugs and cannot drive safely, or for any one who does not want to ride with a driver in that condition.

Safe Rides was created from the continuing concern of Students, parents and school personnel over an increasing number of senseless teenage deaths. During the past three years, seven Darien High School students have been killed in automobile accidents; and in every case, the person or persons involved were either drunk or had been drinking.

"Kids drink," says current president Doug Cavett, "They are going to drink whether we (Safe Rides) are out there or not. We're not condoning drinking, but we recognize that it's a reality. People seem to think that since we're out there, they can drink; no way. We'll continue to pick them up and take them home and if we save one kid, then the whole project's worthwhile."

If saving one kid is Safe Rides' goal, the fledgling project must be worth its own weight in gold. Excluding August, Safe Rides has given rides to 188 people, answered 95 calls—for an average of three-and-a-half calls a night—over a 29-night period since the program was initiated.

Currently there are about 60 people involved in the Safe Rides project that operates from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays (and Thursday during August).

"We have plenty of volunteers right now," says Cavett. "Individuals are on duty only once a month. We don't want to hamper that by adding more kids to the group; we'll just wait and see what happens."

During its first few weeks, Safe Rides was an enigma to most people; even Cavett admits to calling the number while at parties simply to draw attention to the project.

"I did that in the beginning," says Cavett slyly. "People would come up to me and say, 'You're calling Safe Rides?' and would look shocked. But now we don't have to do that anymore. Since Safe Rides started, there are a lot more people taking the keys away from drivers at parties . . . they may not call Safe Rides but they are becoming more aware of the possible dangers and are thinking about safety."

According to an adult advisor, Sue Geery, it's not just intoxicated kids who need rides, but the "innocent victims" (as Geery calls them). "They're people who can't rely on their parents for a ride home. It doesn't matter if they are drunk or not. Safe Rides will take care of those people as well," she says.

TEENS FINDING ROAD TO SAFETY

(By Clint Roswell)

Most authorities concede that not even raising the drinking age to 19, a law which took effect in Connecticut last Thursday and is slated for New York in 1983, can stop underage teens from drinking.

Many believe that law enforcement loses its cutting edge when it attempts to counteract a problem which is more social than legal in nature. Teenage drinking, say the reports, is more than a localized or regional problem, but a cultural malaise that in many circles raises as many eyebrows as jaywalking.

The question of how society can protect itself and its young from the perilous extensions of drinking—namely drunken driving which often results in death, destruction of property and the infliction of harm on innocent people—has been examined without much success by government, police and community organizations.

While tougher state laws, such as raising the drinking age, are considered by many to be the best overall deterrent to teenage drinking, the intangible social aspects are more local in nature since every community has its own set of economic and cultural conditions.

The Town of Darien, an affluent municipality in Fairfield County, plagued with a chronic teenage drinking problem, has developed a plan which it hopes will put to rest an endless nightmare of drunken-driving incidents.

What makes the Darien program unique, and effective, is that high school students conceptualized, organized and run the program. But most of all, they accept the program.

Less than two months old, the program has attracted the attention of other towns in Fairfield County, Westchester County, television documentary producers, and has brought inquiries from as far away as Ohio and California.

The program is called "Safe Rides" and it has the entire town of Darien thinking something can be done to prevent the senseless destruction due to drunken driving.

It works this simply: two boys and two girls form coed teams of drivers in cars outfitted with CB radios and are stationed from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. on weekend nights at the Union Trust Bank, right across the street from the Darien train station.

A parent advisor is also stationed at the bank along with a dispatcher.

Someone calls. "Hi, I'm a little drunk, can you help me?" The caller might say, or "I'm afraid to drive with this guy/girl who's drunk, can you give me a lift home?"

The answer most often is yes. Armed with training from the police department and the Greenwich Alcoholism Council, the coed teams ask several questions to make certain the caller is legit.

"We've only had two prank phone calls out of about 150," said Doug Cavett, the 16-year-old student president of Safe Rides. "The kids realize this is something for them, to help them avoid a potential disaster, and they accept it."

The 35 members of Safe Rides don't preach or lecture to the kids who often are their friends or neighbors. They keep each ride home confidential so neither the teenager nor his parents are subject to gossip or reprisal.

"We keep it confidential so no one will be afraid to call, but all the kids talked about it in school anyway," said Cavett, who says Safe Rides is averaging about 30 calls a weekend since it began in May.

"We wouldn't be doing this if the kids reacted negatively to it. We all realize there's been too much tragedy in the town of Darien," Cavett explained.

It was a near-tragic driving incident involving Cavett that inspired him to take a leading role in formulating Safe Rides. He admits to driving with a few drinks in him on a dark and winding road in Darien when the headlights of an oncoming car blinded him.

He swerved, his car ran off the road and rolled over two times before it stopped. He needed medical attention to stitch the wound in his head but the haunting memory of the incident stayed with him well after the wound healed.

"I was lucky," said Cavett, "but I realized how close to death I was and that thought scared me enough to stop me from drinking and driving. I knew a lot of my friends who had been less lucky, two of them died in car accidents in Darien in the last year. It was time to do something."

It was Darien High principal Donald Robbins who set the ball into motion when he organized a town committee on drugs and alcohol.

One of the parents, Jane Handley, a member of the committee, at a meeting last winter suggested that some sort of escort service be created for kids.

The students on the committee responded by formulating a questionnaire that all 1,100 Darien High students answered about their thoughts on the Safe Rides matter. They responded overwhelmingly in the positive.

"I got involved because I have four teenage daughters who go to Darien High," Handley, the group's advisor said, "I've been very encouraged by the positive nature and impact it's had on everyone involved and it is a new rallying point to combat this problem.

"For some reason, Darien is more susceptible to the teenage drinking problem because there's little to do in town and the kids are very socially oriented. Their parents, too, do a lot of drinking and the kids have just grown up in this kind of environment.

"They all have cars and drinking is accepted social behavior. But the whole community has been saddened by all the accidents and deaths over the years and pitched in the best way they knew."

The Safe Rides group is sponsored by the local Boy Scouts Explorer Post 655 which has assumed insurance coverage for the group. They are assisted by the Post 53 Emergency Ambulance Corps who are available in case of medical emergencies.

"The program has gone so far without a hitch," said Handley. "We're really pleased because we feel we're dealing with a problem that was seemingly unresolvable."

The Safe Rides program now is in the process of training another set of 35 students who will be ready to join the group within two weeks. The possibility of extending the venture to six nights a week during the summer months is being discussed, but manpower, finances and insurance liability may be too big a barrier for the volunteer group.

"Even if it stays at the current two days a week, I think we proved the point that something can be done," said Cavett. "Drinking is a problem, it always will be, but maybe we have found a way to make it less dangerous by keeping the kids who drink out of the car and more aware that they don't have to risk their lives."

DARIEN SAFE RIDES SPAWNS NATIONWIDE GROUPS

(By Mark Seavy)

Since Darien Safe Rides began operation nine months ago as the only program of its kind in the country, similar organizations have sprung up nationwide.

"I have had 200 letters from 35 states asking about the program," said Jane Handley, advisor for Darien Safe Rides. "Last week I had a call from a man in Davidsonville, Maryland who was beginning a program December 17 and had asked President Reagan to come for the opening ceremonies."

Safe Rides, which offers transportation to students or adults who have drunk or smoked too much, has begun or will begin in nine towns in Fairfield County, according to Handley. The towns include: Trumbull, Ridgefield, New Canaan, Greenwich, Stamford, Wilton, Weston and Westport.

Greenwich Safe Rides, which has been operating out of its office in the Red Cross building on East Putnam Avenue since December 17, is in service Friday and Saturday nights from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m., according to Cathy Strachan, adult coordinator and advisor for the program.

Strachan says the Greenwich organization, which is cosponsored by the Red Cross and Putnam Bank and Trust, involves 120 students from the town's five high schools and 60 adult advisers.

"There is a drinking problem in Greenwich and not all parents are willing to acknowledge it," Strachan says. "When we began thinking about having this program last April, we weren't aware of the one in Darien. I became involved this summer through my work at St. Catherine's High School."

The use of Greenwich Safe Rides has been increasing slowly. The organization received two calls the first night and six December 31, but Strachan recalls one which pretty much sums up the group's efforts.

"A girl called up because she wasn't sure whether the person she would be riding with had been drinking or not," Strachan recalls. "This is the type of call we want."

In Weston, 50 students and 30 adults are beginning their third of four training sessions this week and hope to begin service, January 15, according to Adviser Marilyn Kirchner.

Similar to the Darien program in format, with five students and one adult adviser on duty for each shift, the Weston program received many ideas from Darien Adviser Jane Handley, according to Kirchner.

"Handley has helped us a great deal," Kirchner says. "She told us how the Darien program was set-up and how it got started."

Sponsored by the Kiwanis Club and housed in the Weston Recreation Commission office, the program will be in service from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights. Kirchner says it has been well received in Weston.

"There has been an excellent response," Kirchner says. "The only problem that I can see is communication because of the size of the town."

New Canaan, like Weston, is still in the organizational stages, but hopes to begin operations January 21, according to Adviser Peter Deane. He added that unlike Darien, the New Canaan program will have seven students and one adult advisor for each shift.

"Several of the officers from Darien Safe Rides have come and talked with us," Deane says. "We are using more people because New Canaan is larger than Darien."

Deane says 84 students and 26 adults will be involved, which he hopes will represent a broad cross-section of the community.

"We want to have a broad base and avoid cliques," Deane says. "There won't be any freshmen involved mainly because they are unable to drive. The breakdown will be 35 seniors, 29 juniors and 20 sophomores."

Sponsored by the Red Cross, Alcohol Awareness Community Telephone (TACT) and the New Canaan Parents for Drug Awareness (NCPDA), New Canaan Safe Rides will be located on Main Street.

Designated Explorer Post 966, the New Canaan program is currently under the direction of a 12-person board of directors, but will soon elect permanent officers, Deane says.

Ultimately, Deane sees the Darien and New Canaan organizations working in conjunction rather than opposition.

"There are parties which Darien kids attend in New Canaan," Deane says. "Thus if a Darien kid needs a ride, we can give the person a ride to the Darien/New Canaan border and Darien Safe Rides can take it from there. This is done for insurance purposes."

Darien Adviser Handley expresses one fear about the expansion of Safe Rides.

"I worry about the people who will be running the programs," Handley says. "The Greenwich kids have been very enthusiastic, although some adults seem to be dragging their feet. The only problem I can see is the students involved will be from several schools not just one like in Darien."

Darien Safe Rides was busy over the holidays, providing transportation for 50 students New Year's Eve. Yet, while this is impressive, Weston Adviser Kirchner has another view.

"I hope we go out of business, because nobody will need us," Kirchner says. "Because then kids won't be driving after they've been drinking."●

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 11 A.M.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, after the time for the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that there be special orders for Senators PROXMIRE and LEAHY for a period not to exceed 15 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER DESIGNATING A PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, following the special orders, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business during which Senators may speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each, the period not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, following that time at 12 noon, the Senate will turn to the consideration of either the Wilkinson nomination, S. 1003, which is the child abuse bill, or S. 268, the hydroelectric powerplants bill, which is at the desk with a House message.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 11 A.M.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, may I inquire of my good friend from West Virginia if he has any further business he wishes to bring before the Senate?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the assistant Republican leader. I have none.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, and I hear none, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate now stand in recess until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, at 6:43 p.m., recessed until Thursday, July 26, 1984, at 11 a.m.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Robert A. Rowland, of Texas, to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor, vice Thorne G. Auchter, resigned, to which position he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, July 25, 1984

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

It is good to give thanks to the Lord, to sing praises to Thy name, O most High.—Psalm 92:1.

We laud Your name, O God, for all the treasures of Your creation that we have been given for our enjoyment. We offer praise for family and friends, for food and sustenance, for labor and leisure, for challenges and opportunities. Above all else, we thank You for the gifts of love and life, for each new day of grace. In all we do help us, O God, to use our time and talents in ways that glorify You and serve those about us. In Your name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 332. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics should provide the signatories of the Helsinki Final Act with specific information as to the whereabouts, health, and legal status of Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner.

MIDDLE-INCOME PEOPLE, GRAB YOUR WALLETS

(Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, last night in his Presidential press conference, the President was unusually halting and surprisingly difficult to understand. I expect it is because he wanted the real meaning of his words to be hidden behind what he was actually saying.

For example, he quickly noted that there will not be a tax increase next year but then he launched into an almost impossible explanation about gross national product and how that compares to revenue and expenditures, indicated he might raise taxes.

What it really means is there is going to be a tax increase next year. The President is going to call it tax reform. And translated, that means: Middle-income people, grab your wallets.

The President said in a rather halting manner that he thought that the current recovery was because of his tax cut for the rich of 3 years ago. He actually said that last night. Translated, that means that he still believes that trickle-down economics works. Middle-income folks, grab your wallets.

The President went on to say that he was going to try to buy some votes from the Social Security recipients, whom he has scared half to death in the last 3½ years, by changing the law to get them a cost-of-living increase even if inflation does not rise 3 percent. He did not say how he was going to pay for it. I assume he is going to borrow the money, the way he has done with all of the other expenditures.

Somebody has to pay for it. Middle-income people, grab your wallets.

THE FISCAL MESS

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the President for conducting his 26th news conference last evening and encourage him to conduct more news conferences before the November election. The American people need to see our President attempting to explain the fiscal mess in which our Nation is involved because of Reaganomics.

While the President was unable to explain his own budget dilemma, U.S. News & World Report, in its February issue, does a good job. On the front cover it says: "Drowning in debt, the impact of another $180 billion deficit."

The fact remains that Government costs $2 billion a day to operate, while revenues received are $1.5 billion a day. Even the first grade students living near Carson Lake, AR, understand that means a deficit, Mr. President.

PRESIDENT URGED TO WITHDRAW NOMINATION OF ANNE BURFORD AS CHAIRMAN OF NACOA

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, today, with Representatives UDALL, FLORIO, WAXMAN, D'AMOURS, WIRTH, and GORE, I have introduced a resolution which urges President Reagan to withdraw the appointment of Anne M. Burford to be the chairperson of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA]. The resolution expresses the strong disapproval of the House of Representatives of this highly inappropriate appointment.

For over a decade, Presidential appointments have respected NACOA's nonpartisan and independent nature. Each of the five prior chairpersons have had distinguished academic careers and doctoral degrees in their fields. Among them, they have belonged to more than 20 professional and scientific associations and served on more than 60 governmental and scientific bodies. NACOA has carried out its duties and provided advice on sensitive environmental issues in a professional and nonpartisan manner.

Unfortunately, the appointment of Mrs. Burford to chair NACOA is not subject to confirmation by the Senate. That fact, however, should not prevent Congress from expressing its sincere opposition to this unfortunate appointment, and to express our deep concern for the President's disregard of the clear congressional intent to keep NACOA an independent and nonpartisan body of expertise on marine and atmospheric issues.

Yesterday, the Senate approved by a lopsided 74-to-19 vote the identical resolution introduced by Senator KENNEDY. I urge my colleagues to join with us and the Senate in disapproving the Burford nomination and requesting that the President withdraw the nomination before Mrs. Burford takes office on August 2, 1984.

EDUCATION: AMERICA'S BEST DEFENSE FOR THE FUTURE

(Mr. KLECZKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, H.G. Wells observed that human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe. If we are to hold off catastrophe, we must take steps to see that education wins the race.

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Today the House can give American education a boost by approving H.R. 11, which would extend 10 important education programs, including bilingual education, women's educational equity, and adult education. Last year, the House passed the emergency math and science bill, and the American Defense Education Act has just been reported out of committee; both of these pieces of legislation will contribute greatly to the education of our young people.

America's best defense for the future is education. It is time that we stop throwing dollars at defense and instead spend wisely on textbooks and teachers. The security and future of the United States lie in well-educated young people, not with MX missiles.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to continue to aid education as an essential component of our national defense.

LET US DEFEAT THE RULE ON INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS

(Mr. WOLPE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to strongly urge my colleagues to defeat the rule that will be offered later today for the consideration of the Interior appropriations bill. I do not make this recommendation lightly, but unfortunately, this may be the only way that the House will be able to express itself on the most blatant example of nonmilitary waste in the Federal budget. I am speaking of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

There is not a Member of this House that is not aware of the enormous mismanagment, the incompetence, the absolute lack of performance that has characterized the operation of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We want the opportunity to offer amendments that will provide for substantial reductions in the Corporation's appropriation, so that we might both make a contribution to the reduction of the Federal deficit, and put our energy policy into some kind of rational form.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on the rule on the Interior appropriations bill so that this House can express itself on what has been the most publicized example of nonmilitary waste in the Federal budget. It may be our only opportunity to do so.

INTELLECTUAL DISHONESTY

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it is sad when the President of the United States seeks deliberately to mislead the American people, as he did last night, into the expectation that we can have increases in military spending of the degree that he asks and balance the budget without some additional revenues. Now, everyone familiar with the budget knows that is not possible. The President knows that is not possible.

The President indicates that he has some secret plan that will be divulged in December. It reminds me of the secret plan which Richard Nixon announced while he was running for President in 1968. After the election, he promised, he would announce his secret plan to end the war in Vietnam. That war continued throughout his term of office.

The President knows that it is not possible to spend $1 trillion in the next 3 years on military spending, as he demands, and to achieve any substantial reduction in these enormous budget deficits that are increasing interest rates to an unlivable level, without some additional revenues. He knows that is true.

For a long while, I tried very hard to believe that the President was being honestly unintellectual about this subject. Now, the facts disclose without per adventure that he is being intellectually dishonest.

DECEMBER SURPRISE

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, for years in politics, people have talked about "October surprises"—last minute tricks to win elections. But now President Reagan is planning a "December surprise"—a postelection surprise in the form of a secret plan to reduce the deficit.

Last night, Ronald Reagan refused to disclose his deficit plan. And he promised to reduce the deficit without a tax increase, unless of course he changes his mind and decides that a tax increase is needed.

So what will it be, Mr. President? Social Security cuts? Fewer school lunches? Less health care for the elderly? More taxes for working people? Higher and higher interest rates to choke off the American economy? We know that you have refused cuts in your bloated Defense budget, and you resisted our Democratic proposal to limit the tax giveaway for those making more than $50,000.

So how will you do it? And will you tell us before the election, or will you hide your December surprise in the Rose Garden until it is too late for the American people to have their say?

Mr. President, it is time to reveal your secret deficit reduction plan. It is time to be honest about your program for after the election. It is time to show your true colors as they have always been and always will be: more budget cuts for working people, and more tax cuts for the wealthy.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD SUPPORT HOUSE-PASSED DISABILITY LEGISLATION

(Mr. PICKLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, last night, President Reagan in his press conference again spoke about his plans for Social Security, and I find his remarks confusing. For the past several months the President has repeatedly said that we will have to reexamine all our entitlement programs, and that the Social Security trust funds may not be adequate to pay benefits to the young people entering the workforce today. Yet last night without even mentioning how we are to pay for such an increase, President Reagan supported paying new Social Security benefits which amount to nearly $6 billion next year alone. This means the wage tax base will be raised.

At the same time, this administration still refuses to support legislation which will allow disabled American workers to receive the disability benefits which they have already earned. I find it ironic that the administration, using its own budget numbers, would argue that we don't have enough money for the totally disabled, but at the same time we can spend additional billions in new and unplanned benefits.

I would hope that the President could find it in himself to change his position on disability legislation and support the House-passed disability legislation which protects the benefits and rights of the least among us.

GOOD LUCK, GERRY

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, first, my congratulations to our colleague, Representative FERRARO, and some sympathy for the hectic pace she will endure for the next 3 months. She has rescued the Democratic ticket from what looked like terminal blandness.

But there is one more thing she, all women, and indeed all Americans deserve, and that is respect—respect for the office the nominee seeks. It may be true, as she says, were her name Gerald Ferraro, she would not have been considered for the job. But she was and now is no longer just GERALDINE FERRARO, but the candidate. And when the enjoyable and expected 2-week canonization passes, legitimate questions must be asked. To do less would be both patronizing and wrong.

For instance, it is not immoral to be a big-city Democrat, but it may not be what America had in mind. It is not immoral to favor bigger spending, bigger deficits, and bigger taxes, but it may be wrong for Americans. It is not immoral to have a spouse in business, but ethical questions are not just legitimate but an absolute necessity for a Vice Presidential candidate.

I like GERALDINE FERRARO; I also think that the tired, liberal economic philosophy of the Democratic ticket would be a disaster for America. To not challenge, to not correct, to not contend—because she is a woman—would debase the goal of true equality we both share.

So good luck, GERRY; I hope you are a front runner for the Presidential nomination of your party in 1988—after the reelection of President Reagan.

THE SPOUSAL IRA

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the President's news conference last night. I thought his comments to the country and to the press assembled were pensive and thoughtful. I was particularly taken by his comments with respect to the spousal IRA. It is a classic Ways and Means problem that I think he seeks to address, and I think his leadership ought to be respected by the House and the Senate.

The means or objectives are four: Financing on a long-term basis at more stable and lower interest rates; financing growth from savings and equity, rather than from debt; creating long-term thrifty incentives; and allowing the possibility for workers to save so that they are less reliant in the long term at their point of retirement on public assistance.

The classic solution, the way, is the doubling of the spousal IRA, which the President has proposed. It is fair, it reverses an unintended amount of discrimination when we passed the first spousal legislation in 1981, because we do not otherwise treat that housewife who works and washes and cooks and cleans and cares for the family in the conventional ways like giving a W-2 or Social Security credits for their hard work.

It is a small amount of short-term Treasury loss for a long-term policy that will save billions of dollars in public assistance in the long term. I ask my colleagues to consider sponsoring H.R. 5940 to that end.

REPUBLICANS' PARTY OF WORKING MEN AND WOMEN

(Mr. COUGHLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the thunder of the Democrat Convention, I was struck by the awesome silence about one indispensable group in the Nation. The Democrats reached into their political grab bag and promised something for almost every conceivable constituency it is attempting to woo. Yet, to me and millions of others watching, there was one glaring omission. The Democrats never promised anything to the working men and women of the country.

If the thought, in fact, is the mother of the deed, then the workers of America have been shamefully neglected by the Democrats in convention. And they will continue to be ignored. Indeed, as President Reagan emphasized last night, it is the Republican Party that cares about the working men and women of America—and the retired working men and women of America.

I am reminded of the interesting and analytical speech by a Democrat Member of the other body who said the problem with Democrats is that they spend all their time worrying about how to distribute the golden eggs without concerning themselves about the health of the goose.

It is the Republican Party that cares about the health of the goose that dispenses the golden eggs—the economy of the Nation. It is a healthy economy that provides jobs for working men and women and security for retired working men and women.

It is a healthy economy that provides the jobs and the jobs that provide the taxes to aid the poor and elderly.

It is the Republican Party that cares about taxes and inflation. The Democrats in San Francisco did not have much to say about these issues except that they would increase taxes. Time sure does not change much about the Democrats.

Yet, it is the working men and women of America and the retired working men and women who care about taxes and inflation. They know from experience how much both taxes and inflation can hurt.

By their own rhetoric, the Democrats have demonstrated their insensitivity to the working men and women, who pay more than their fair share of taxes. That they have so obviously ignored these millions of Americans speaks volumes about their preoccupation with gathering in all their diverse and contradictory constituencies and their preoccupation with the distribution of the golden eggs flowing out of Washington.

The Republican Party has demonstrated—by far more than mere rhetoric—that it does care for the working men and women of America and the retired working men and women of America—the latter who serve as targets of Democrat scare tactics.

Unlike the hyperbole bouncing off the walls of the Moscone Center, rank-and-file Republicans were not born with silver spoons in their mouths. I used to work on a production line hustling auto bodies. I spent some time in the Marine Corps and went to law school at night.

I learned that Republicans do not come automatically endowed with a stock portfolio or a grant from the Federal Government. President Reagan comes from a working class family. As he has remarked, the Reagan family was poor but the Government just didn't let them know about it.

President Reagan was a Democrat and a union leader, but he came to believe that it was, in fact, the Republican Party that understood the hopes and aspirations of working men and women throughout the country.

This is the strength of the Republican Party. So long as it remains true to the constituency of the working men and women, and the retired workers, then the Republican Party will retain its inherent appeal. While we must take care of the less fortunate and more needy, to neglect the working men and women of our country would, in the end, betray the best interests of all Americans.

A SMALL, BUT IMPORTANT, STEP

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, last week while the Democrats were in San Francisco blasting away at what they perceive to be President Reagan's intransigence on arms discussions with the Soviet Union, a small but very important first step was taken right here in Washington.

On July 17 the United States initialed an agreement with the Soviet Union to update and modernize our hotline communications system. This agreement will allow for a facsimile transmission capability to be added to the current 67-word-per-minute teletype. This will allow the transmission of full texts or maps and graphs.

Last year the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] and I introduced legislation which called on the President to seek negotiations with the Soviet to modernize our communications. The Soviets rejected American proposals to link our embassies and military commands, but I am still hopeful that future progress can be made on the establishment of a joint center to house the newly updated system. In the meantime a positive step has been taken.

FEMA REGULATIONS SHOULD BE MORE FLEXIBLE

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, on April 27 a northern Wisconsin area was devastated by fierce tornadoes, and after literally months of examination, the Federal Emergency Management, [FEMA], granted disaster aid.

Although I am very pleased that aid was granted, I am equally appalled at the lack of organization which surrounded FEMA's decisionmaking process. FEMA failed to consider the unique characteristics germane to the area; that is, our travel and tourism industry, as well as our logging business.

The fact is that FEMA regulations should be more flexible to deal with extenuating and unique situations. After all, no disaster is usual, and FEMA and this Congress, I feel, should recognize this fact.

Today I am contacting the appropriate committees here in Congress and FEMA itself to review several concerns expressed by my constituents and I hope that we can make FEMA more responsive to disasters.

HYPOCRISY FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan has indicated he may recommend a COLA for seniors on Social Security. I agree with this, but senior citizens will not be fooled. This is too little, too late.

I believe honestly it is a subtle form of hypocrisy when the President has done more to clobber senior citizens. Let us look at the record.

In his first budget, he recommended cutting Social Security by $29 billion, and who was most affected? Elderly women between 75 and 90 years old. He has had more cuts in medicare than any other President, which meant not cost containment but more out-of-pocket expenses for the elderly. He has gutted the housing program for the elderly, cuts in nutrition programs, and recommended the only jobs program for the elderly, title V, under the Older Americans Act.

I think it is hypocrisy and I do not think senior citizens will be fooled.

WALTER MONDALE, SEND US A MESSAGE

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, Walter Mondale, in his acceptance speech, made reference to a challenge to Congress, and I quote: "We must cut spending and pay as we go."

This is what Walter Mondale said. We have been saying this at least since the first day that I came to the Congress. As a matter of fact, this Member has introduced on several different occasions a pay-as-you-go amendment on new spending programs, only to have those plans beaten down by Walter Mondale's fellow Democrats on the floor of the House.

I would ask Walter Mondale today to issue a statement to tell us how he plans, and not to keep it secret any longer, to pay as you go on the various spending concepts that are presented on the floor of this House.

He further stated, "If you do not hold the line," he said to the Congress, "I will. That is what the veto is for."

To me, that sounds like the possibility that he is advocating the line-item veto. If that is so, let us make it clear. Do not keep it secret, Mr. Mondale. Send us a message. Tell us how you would ask your fellow Democrats on the floor of the House to support a line-item veto or something akin to it. Do not keep these messages secret, these plans secret. We want to know now, because we have plenty of time between now and October 1 to implement cuts and plans for a line-item veto.

SYNFUELS CORPORATION FUNDING SHOULD BE CUT

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to alert my colleagues about an opportunity that we were denied yesterday to reduce Federal spending. Yesterday, I and several other Members asked the Rules Committee for permission to offer several amendments to the fiscal year 1985 Interior and Related Agencies appropriations bill to rescind $9 billion from the Synfuels Corporation. The Rules Committee denied our request. In this time of $200 billion deficits, we should not leave the Synfuels Corporation with excess levels of funding when they have shown us to be less prudent in spending hard-earned taxpayers' dollars.

A GAO study was released yesterday which concludes that Union Oil Co. will be paid up to $1 million a day in price subsidies between 1989 and 1995 for price supports for synfuels produced at their Parachute, CO, plant. This multimillion dollar subsidy is in addition to an estimated $3.4 billion in tax breaks Union will receive for plant construction.

Now we all know that Union Oil is not on the brink of bankruptcy, and it is crazy to pay $92 for a barrel of oil that sells for less than $30 on the open market.

Several bills have been introduced which would modify, cut back, or abolish the Synfuels Corporation. A majority of our colleagues have cosponsored one or another of these bills. Therefore, I am going to fight this rule later today. I urge my colleagues to support my efforts to allow the full House of Representatives the opportunity to express its will on this matter.

It was said at the Democratic Convention in San Francisco that the Republican Party is a party of the Cadillacs and the private airplanes. If you vote for that rule today, you are voting for the big limousines, the big Cadillacs, and the private planes. This is a chance for you to put or shut up.

CIVILITY, COMITY AND RHETORIC

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the distinguished majority leader referred to the President as "intellectually dishonest."

Mr. Speaker, on July 19, 1984, United Press International reported that the Speaker of the House said the following things about the President of the United States—and I quote:

> The evil is in the White House at the present time * * * and that evil is a man who has no care and no concern for the working class * * * He's cold. He's mean. He's got ice water for blood.

In almost 30 years in the House, I have never heard such abusive language used by a Speaker of the House about the President of the United States.

To refer to the President in such terms is to deliberately step outside the bounds of civility and comity.

This is not the first time the Speaker has spoken of the President in personal terms. It is only the most disturbing such incident.

There are precedents in our House rules forbidding personal abuse of a President on the floor of the House.

Surely the spirit of these rules ought to be adhered to by the Speaker off the floor as well as on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, as a long-time friend and colleague and one who reveres your high office, I implore you to stop this continuing personal abuse of the President of the United States. It is beneath the dignity of your office and is causing many of your friends to worry and wonder why you are acting this way.

A REPORT TO CRITICISM OF STATEMENTS MADE BY THE SPEAKER

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I had not come here intending to do this, but I am very disturbed by the implications of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois when he suggests that we should be bound by the rules of the House off the floor of the House.

I would find it very awkward to walk around addressing my friends as "the gentleman from" such-and-such and the "gentlewomen from" so-and-so. I would find it very awkward to always be talking in the third person. I would find it kind of a deprivation off the floor not to be able to refer to the other body in any terms other than "the other body."

I find it hard to believe that my friend, the gentleman from Illinois, really thinks that the rules of the House which are set up to conduct business here in the House ought to carry afterwards, and the notion that the Speaker is somehow always carrying the floor around with him and is to be bound always by those rules cannot be meant seriously, and I think it is just a sign that the election is approaching.

A "NEW REALISM" VERSUS "OLD FANTASIES"

(Mrs. KENNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, while some are talking about a "New Realism" in American politics, our President demonstrated last night that the fiscal policies of his administration would continue to be guided by "old fantasies."

The President stated flatly that he has no plans to raise taxes on the wealthy. He also made it abundantly clear that he has no plans for lowering the skyrocketing deficits his tax-and-borrow policies have produced. The President said these policies will lead to long-term economic growth. The reality is that these policies are only leading to long-term high interest rates and a staggering national debt which has doubled during his 4 years in office. The President said that the solution to the deficit question is for Congress to pass a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. The reality is that Mr. Reagan could have submitted a balanced budget to the Congress anytime during the past 4 years and we would have done all we could to enact it into law.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the Presidential role model is Calvin Coolidge, who is reported to have slept through most of his administration. Last night Mr. Reagan must have been sleepwalking through his news conference. Unfortunately, the deficits he is talking about are not a dream—they are a nightmare.

AN EASY CHOICE—REELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. MACK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MACK. Well, the race is on, Mr. Speaker. The stage is set. The campaign is going forward. The Democrats are going to resort to their old policies of name-calling, character assassination, fear-mongering, and, yes, more taxes and more spending.

The choice is clear. You can choose the Democrats, more Government, more taxes, more fear, or you can choose the Republicans, more growth, more jobs, more opportunity. The American people believe that America is back, so the choice will be easy. President Reagan will return for another 4 years.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON SCIENCE, RESEARCH AND TECHNOLOGY OF COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO SIT TODAY AND TOMORROW DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology of the Committee on Science and Technology be permitted to sit today and tomorrow, July 25 and July 26, 1984, while the House is in session under the 5-minute rule for the markup of two bills: specifically, H.R. 5503 and S. 1286.

This request has been cleared with minority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1310, EMERGENCY MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE EDUCATION AND JOBS ACT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of Tuesday, July 24, 1984, the first order of business is the unfinished business on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] to suspend the rules and agree to House Resolution 554.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has 20 minutes of debate remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has 20 minutes of debate remaining.

The Chair recognizing the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on the resolution pending at the desk, I yield back the 20 minutes, the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 554.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TITLE VIII OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1310, EMERGENCY MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE AND EDUCATION AND JOBS ACT

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the resolution just adopted, I have a motion at the desk which I offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PERKINS moves to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill, H.R. 1310, and to concur in title VIII of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 554, a second is not required on this motion.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] will be recognized for 30 minutes and a Member who is opposed to the legislation will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Is there any gentleman on the Republican side who is opposed to the resolution?

Hearing none, the Chair will inquire, is there a Member on the Democratic side who is opposed to the legislation?

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I opposed the last version of the equal access bill, I spoke against it, and I voted against it. I intend to vote in favor of the motion the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has offered today.

The bill as it initially came before us had some flaws. Those flaws that bothered me have been corrected. The bill that we have before us now does not discriminate among different types of groups. It offers protection for the right of students to have meetings of their own choice open to religious, political and philosophical groups, all groups.

The original bill would have given the force of law to the right of students to meet during the school day. The bill we have before us now deals with before school and after school. As to during the school day, that is left up to the local schools to do as they wish.

The bill also has some guarantees for minorities. In other words, all of the specific defects people had problems with in the original bill have been cleared up, and we are left with the basic point.

There are friends of mine whom I respect greatly who say that somehow we ought never to allow religious-oriented activities to take place on public property, particularly with regard to the schools. I think that is in error. I think that the coercive aspect of school prayers led by teachers is wrong, undercuts fundamental freedoms, and ought not to be allowed, but wholly voluntary activities where outsiders can be prevented from coming in, as under this bill, after school, initiated by the students themselves, whether for religious, political, or philosophical purposes, seems to me legitimate.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I regard this as a very auspicious day in many ways in regard to those of us who think we ought not infantilize teenagers. This is a bill which recognizes the rights of teenagers in the high schools to say that if any group is allowed to meet, then all groups, as long as they do not break either the laws or the furniture, should be allowed to meet in the school buildings. It is an empowerment in my judgment of teenagers so that the school boards and the school authorities can no longer pick and choose for these teenagers. They can no longer say,"If you have a meeting of this club, you can't have a meeting of that one."

It is a piece of legislation which says, if we are going to allow access to the schools for the young Republicans and the young Democrats, then all political opinions are going to be in and all social opinions are going to be in. If you are going to have this group in, you can have that group in. I do not see the objection. It is noncoercive, and it keeps out outsiders. It is not during the school day.

I do not see any damage that comes to the fabric of this society from the fact that some teenagers might decide to have a meeting of a radical political group while others might decide to have a meeting of a particular religious society. I think those of us who think teenagers ought to be treated with some respect for their individuality ought to welcome this bill, and I commend the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Washington. They have done a great deal of work on this bill. They have accommodated the wishes of the House. They had a version that did not pass. They sat with people and they met with people, they have negotiated, and I think they have done a good job.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding.

I have listened with great interest to the gentleman's remarks. He has expressed more articulately than I could my feelings about the bill in its present form. I commend the gentleman for his statement, I associate myself with his remarks, and I urge adoption of the legislation.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Georgia, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

□ 1040

Mr. Speaker, I think that certainly as the gentleman from Massachusetts has stated, this bill is an improvement over the previous bill that was before us; but nonetheless, this bill creates major, major problems, and reverses a 200-year tradition in this country that many of our forefathers died for, and that is the separation of church and state and no state establishment of a religion.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes, we will add a fourth "R" to the curriculum of our schools. There will be reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic and religion, because there is nothing, not even in this new improved version of the bill, that prevents religious services in the schools before and after classes.

There are two major arguments against this bill and I would ask my colleagues to listen to them carefully, because they represent major issues and major changes in our governmental view. It is unfortunate that we have so little time to debate them.

The first is the establishment clause. Should school property be used to foster or aid religion in any way? The supporters of the bill, for instance, ask what is wrong with two students while on a schoolbus on its way to school discussing the Bible? Nothing, and our Constitution protects that kind of speech today without any legislation. We need no new legislation to ensure that. But let us say that at a student's request the back half of the bus was reserved for a Bible discussion. That is wrong, and would probably most certainly be allowed under this bill.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said there is no coercion in this bill. Would an 11-year-old—and some 11-year-olds are covered by this bill—feel coercion if three-quarters of the students sitting in the back of the bus discussed the Bible, one particular version of the Bible, and that student had to sit somewhere else? I submit that that student would indeed feel coerced.

The second point is that this bill requires school administrators to decide what is religion and what is not. School officials will have to spend innumerable hours determining whether or not various groups represent legitimate religions, because if they are, this bill allows them to meet. School administrators will also have to decide what is conducting a meeting, because there is a provision in the bill to prevent outsiders from conducting meetings. But is giving a sermon conducting? I submit it is not. Should the school administrator have to decide?

Could a different outsider come in each week to school and participate in a prayer service or class sermon? Yes, by this bill, he indeed could.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, nothing in this bill prohibits a student-initiated catechism or baptism or other religious services from occurring in our classrooms.

Is that what we want? Is that what the Founding Fathers died for when they were seeking freedom of religion?

I share the anguish of many of my colleagues who have firm religious beliefs and do not want to see students prohibited from discussing religion among themselves in the lunchroom or on the bus or during recess. I submit that our Constitution already protects them; but this bill goes much further in terms of the establishment clause by allowing religious services in the school.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHUMER. I will yield when I am finished.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move a call of the House?

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall, 374 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

Under the rule, further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

TITLE VIII OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1310, EMERGENCY MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE EDUCATION AND JOBS ACT

The SPEAKER. For the Members who were not present, the Chair will state that the time has been equally divided between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

When the call of the House was moved, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] was at the microphone.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Speaker.

As I was arguing before the quorum call, the first major argument against this piece of legislation is that it may indeed allow, and it certainly does not explicitly prohibit, prayer services, baptisms, catechisms, on school property.

The second argument is a different argument. And I would ask my colleagues once again to pay attention to it. It is not what the bill purports to do but what it might do.

Neither under this legislation nor under our Constitution can we say that certain religions that we like can have time in school buildings and other religions cannot. Under this legislation, any number of students could get together and ask that a school classroom be used for a religion that they were interested in. That does not just mean Christianity, Judaism, Islam, the major religions; it means any religion or any cult could be allowed into our schools.

People in our schools could be invited in to address students on such things as the Neo-American Church, one of the religions in the American Encyclopedia of Religion.

The Neo-American Church, reading from the Encyclopedia, was formed in 1964 by Arthur Kelps, the son of a Lutheran minister. One of his supporters, Timothy Leary, called him an authentic American anarchist conformist itinerant preacher.

The target of this diatribe and praise, Arthur Kleps, calls himself Chief Boo Hoo, primate of the East and proponent extraordinaire of the sacramental use of psychedelic substances.

That gentleman, Chief Boo Hoo, could be invited by an unwitting group of students into any school in America after this legislation passes and lead discussions, conduct meetings, teach the use of psychedelics, et cetera.

I believe in the first amendment, my colleagues. But we have a question to ask ourselves here: Do we believe that 11-, 12-, 13-, and 14-year-olds should have complete first amendment rights to do whatever they wish in school buildings?

Mr. HYDE. Would the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SCHUMER. I will yield at the end of my time or yield later to the gentleman on his time.

This is a question that is before us. Once again, ladies and gentlemen, once again any religion or anything that calls itself a religion will be in our classrooms if this legislation passes.

I daresay that the proponents of this bill will rue the day they pushed it through the House, given the consequences of this legislation. So, my colleagues, in conclusion, I ask you to think twice about this bill.

Mr. HYDE. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHUMER. I will not yield.

First, you should reject this bill on the basis of the establishment clause. It was said by none other than Jerry Falwell why "our supporters" are backing this bill. Mr. Falwell said the real reason is to get prayer back into the schools, but he said, "We knew we couldn't win on school prayer but equal access gets us what we wanted all along."

The second reason to oppose this bill is that it would allow any group of students—two or more—to invite anything that calls itself a religion, a cult, or whatever, into the classroom to use school facilities. This would give implicit sanction to that religion in that the use of those school facilities means that this religion is OK.

Yes, we want to end certain abuses; no, we do not need an overly widely drawn equal access bill that will do far more than its proponents say it will.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the author of the bill the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman approaches the well, would he consider yielding to me?

Mr. BONKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say I cannot believe that I have heard what I have just heard. I take it that the gentleman would accept an approved list of religions that we could properly call religions, the rest we would call cults. We would accept Christianity, Judaism, and Islam and then any others would be a cult and as those who oppose this bill would have it, we are not to have freedom for everybody, especially students; there is a certain age they must attain when they are entitled to exercise freedom.

I thought one of the remarkable things about the past week was there was such diversity of expression on the streets of San Francisco. If Sister Boom-boom wants to head a religion, she, he/she ought to be tolerated as someone who can exercise free speech. It ought to apply for those you disagree with as well as those you agree with.

I am concerned that the gentleman has a diminished understanding of what free speech and the free exercise thereof means. These expressions of intolerance are both surprising and sad.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be wise to remind Members of the status of this legislation. The House deliberated the equal access bill last month under suspension and it lost by 11 votes, 11 votes short of the two-thirds required.

Meanwhile, the Senate has added an equal access to the math and science bill as an amendment which passed by a vote, I believe, of 88 to 11. The proposal has now come back over here, and we are taking up the issue under suspension.

I would remind my colleagues that the bill has been greatly modified in the Senate. There have been adopted a number of changes which have now made this proposal more acceptable to many Members who previously had concerns.

□ 1110

In fact, many of the questions which were raised in the earlier debate are now accommodated by the Senate passed amendment.

The ACLU and the NEA, which strongly opposed the measure in the last round of debate, now officially are neutral on the equal access bill that is before us.

I would personally say that the new proposal is not what I would like to see. I think the changes in the Senate have greatly watered down our original intent. It is a compromise, but I think it is an acceptable compromise.

I would urge the Members to join the chairman and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] and myself in supporting the equal access amendment to the math and science bill.

Let me make a few points about the original bill which are still valid today.

Constitutional rights are being denied students who want any kind of religious activity. Lawrence Tribe, the nationally acknowledged constitutional attorney, has said to deny these students an opportunity to meet on school premises either before school hours or after school hours is to deny them their constitutional rights.

The gentleman from New York raised the issue of the establishment clause. Let me read what the first amendment says. It states:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

There is nothing in this bill that has Congress establishing a religion. Indeed, what we are trying to do is to address the other two clauses in the first amendment; that we do not prohibit the free exercise of religion, nor are we abridging the freedom of speech. That is precisely the point Lawrence Tribe makes, that we are denying people an opportunity to exercise their freedom of speech.

The 1962 court ruling on school prayer did not address their particular issue. This has resulted in a great deal of confusion in the school districts and among the various courts that have ruled on the matter.

The 1981 Widmar decision in Missouri is an important case to remember. That court had found that equal access was being denied college students because they were disallowed from meeting on the campus.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER] has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER].

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman.

Let us keep in mind that this proposal will maintain Government neutrality. Government cannot mandate or prescribe prayer, but it also must not ban voluntary assembly of individuals for religious reasons.

My colleagues will hear a lot of farfetched tales from the other side. Let me say that we have accommodated all the concerns that were raised earlier. They have now come back with a whole new set of concerns.

If you are for the freedoms that are prescribed in the Constitution, if you want to allow students an opportunity to meet for religious purposes outside the classroom, if you want to make sure that everybody receives their constitutional rights, please vote for this amendment.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1310, the Education for Economic Security Act, and urge my colleagues to vote aye on both motions before the House.

H.R. 1310, as passed by the Senate, addresses two problems which have been near the top of the agenda during this Congress. First, it authorizes $425 million in fiscal year 1984 and $540 million in fiscal year 1985 to address our alarming shortage of qualified math and science teachers at a time when the international marketplace demands that our students be highly skilled in these areas. The number of unqualified math and science teachers in secondary school classrooms has been estimated as high as 50 percent and this bill, combined with the necessary State and local efforts will help reduce that percentage.

The other important reason to pass this bill is because it contains the Equal Access Act, which makes it unlawful for a high school to deny use of its buildings to religious, political and other student groups while granting access to other student-initiated groups.

I wish to commend the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. PERKINS, for literally moving mountains in bringing this bill to the House floor today. In addition, my colleague and good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING, has brought to this issue the commonsense and sound judgment that always characterize his leadership on education issues.

This bill is needed to end the confusion surrounding the free speech and assembly rights of students and to end the costly legal battles and needless confrontation between parents, students, and local school officials.

To understand the need for this legislation, consider the following recent situation: In 1981, Lisa Bender and some of her classmates at Williamsport High School in Pennsylvania decided to form a club which would meet during the school's activity period. That's not unusual because Williamsport High School, like many high schools, permitted students to organize clubs and informal meetings as their interests developed. This would include, for example, a group to raise money for a local charity or maybe a Young Republicans or Young Democrats Club.

Lisa's group, however, differed from the others because it was to be a nondenominational prayer fellowship. The group was entirely student-inspired and was to involve no school officials or faculty members, except for purposes of supervision.

After first allowing the group to meet, the school board later reversed its decision—after considerable review and discussion with its lawyers—for fear of violating the first amendment's prohibition against the establishment of an official religion. (The "Establishment Clause.") As a result, Lisa and her friends could not meet during activity periods while other student groups could.

This ruling by the school board occurred 1 month after the Supreme Court had ruled in another case that a university's refusal to allow such student groups was a violation of the "fundamental principle that a State regulation of speech should be content-neutral." In other words, the university could allow student groups to meet on their premises, whether they were religion oriented or not.

Although the rationale behind that decision appeared equally applicable to secondary school situation, the Williamsport School Board took what it believed to be the safe course by refusing permission for Lisa's group.

Over the next 2 years, Lisa Bender and her classmates, and the taxpayers of Williamsport spent a considerable amount of money fighting this matter in the courts—only to have the U.S. district court confirm what already seemed apparent: that the Constitution did not merely allow the school district to let Lisa's group meet, it required it.

If this were an isolated case, there would probably be no need for the Congress to become involved. Unfortunately, this is happening in school districts throughout the country, resulting in considerable expenditures of legal fees and, more unfortunately, a denial of constitutional rights.

Some have claimed that allowing religious groups to meet in the school under any circumstances will have the effect of advancing religion because of the impressionability of high school students. This assumption ignores studies of adolescent psychology which have shown that it is a time of increased cognitive capacity, marked by an ability of the adolescent to differentiate himself from authority figures he depended upon as a younger child. Adolescence, almost by definition, is a crucial stage of development where it is important that one be exposed to different viewpoints and become aware of the variety of ideas which characterize our society.

The Supreme Court has been aware of this need for many years, as it formed the crucial underpinning of the landmark 1969 ruling which held that the first amendment's free speech guarantee extends to public school students. That decision, roundly applauded by civil libertarians, assumed a degree by maturity on the part of students that is clearly recognized by this bill.

In closing, I would like to quote from Prof. Laurence Tribe, who stated in his landmark treatise on American constitutional law that the establishment clause entails "a notion of accommodation—recognizing that there are necessary relationships between government and religion; that government cannot be indifferent to religion in American life; and that, far from being hostile or even truly indifferent, it may, and sometimes must, accommodate its institutions and programs to the religious interests of the people."

Mr. Speaker, this bill, contrary to what some critics have said, is not a back door way of getting prayer into the schools. It is a law which permits freedom of speech and expression to students like Lisa Bender who want to use their activity time for religious meetings or political debates or aerobics or whatever. The bill does nothing more than this and is therefore both legally acceptable and necessary in a free society under our Constitution.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], one of my distinguished leaders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a proud and happy day for me, and I am sure that President Reagan shares my joy. Early last year, I introduced the original equal access bill into this House. The administration stood foursquare behind the proposal. Chairman PERKINS was kind enough to hold a hearing on that bill almost exactly 1 year ago. The serious need for equal access legislation first became apparent at that hearing. Since that time, the equal access legislation has gone through many versions, received much press, and been vigorously debated in both Houses of Congress.

Throughout this process, the underlying principle has remained cleared and unchanged. High school student groups wishing to meet together for religious purposes have been denied the equal opportunity afforded for other student groups. This denial has often been based on misunderstanding and confusion rather than malice on the part of school administrators. Nonetheless, it is wrong, and should be corrected by congressional action. Congress is charged by the 14th amendment with protecting constitutional liberties, and that is precisely what this equal access legislation does.

President Reagan has recognized the need for equal access legislation. He has spoken out on this issue several times, bringing attention to the abridgment of individual religious freedom in many public schools. Just yesterday, the President publicly reaffirmed his support for this measure. The Presidency is indeed a "bully pulpit," as Theodore Roosevelt once noted, and President Reagan has used his bully pulpit to arouse the conscience of this country about the need to protect religious liberty. Freedom of religion is indeed the foundation of all our other rights.

Many Members of Congress also deserve credit for promoting this legislation. Congressmen BONKER, GOODLING, and CHANDLER stand out as fellow cosponsors in the House; Senators DENTON, LEAHY, and HATFIELD as cosponsors in the Senate; and, most of all, Mr. PERKINS as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee. This has truly been a bipartisan effort, but then the protection of constitutional freedom knows no partisan lines.

I urge all my fellow Members of Congress to vote for this bill. Our children and America's high school students need this protection of their freedom of speech and religion.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the unique feature of the legislation that is before us here today is that it was not born of an initiative of us adults who purportedly know best how to help our youngsters. This idea came from the youngsters themselves.

□ 1120

We are not forcing anything upon these young people. In Williamsport, PA, a group of youngsters demanded equal access to form a Bible study club and were refused that opportunity by the school district officials. It is these youngsters who took the matter to court; they are the ones who have come to us public officials and have said, "Give us equal access, or whatever amounts to equal access."

It is one principle and one principle alone: The freedom of speech that these youngsters want to exercise.

That does not collide with the freedom of religion or the establishment of religion clause in the other part of the freedoms that we enjoy in this country.

I urge support of the amendment.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the history of this equal access bill is that it passed the other body as an amendment to a House-passed math and science bill on June 27. The science and math bill is a good bill. But the Senate had no hearings, none whatsoever on the equal access amendment. The bill was written entirely on the floor. It came to the House shortly before our July recess. This equal access bill, written on the floor of the other body, came to the House shortly before the recess attached to the math/science bill and was appropriately referred both to the Judiciary Committee and to the Education and Labor Committee, pursuant to the rules of the House.

No committee has had any opportunity to have hearings or any kind of study on this bill written on the floor of the other body, and yet there are important constitutional questions involved. The Judiciary Subcommittee that I chair had planned 2 weeks of in-depth hearings but we found out, on our return from the recess, that the bill was scheduled today under the seldom used Calendar Wednesday procedure.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The staff persons on the floor are here by courtesy, and they will take seats.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. There were no hearings in the Committee on Education and Labor, no hearings in the Committee on the Judiciary. Take it or leave it; take the other body's bill written on the floor of the Senate, passed with no hearings over there, or leave it. And your Judiciary Committee has had no opportunity to report to you in a careful and orderly manner.

Member after Member has come up to me and said, "What is in this Senate bill? What is it all about?"

Well, we have studied it, we have read it carefully and have studied the debate in the other body and have solicited opinions from constitutional scholars. And here is what the bill is all about, here is what you are going to be voting on today:

First of all—and this is the heart of the bill—for the first time in our history Federal law will license, indeed encourage, religious services in your public high schools. Under any definition, this is Government sponsorhip of religion. Students who want to hold religious services, or prayer meetings, on public school property are guaranteed the right to do this. And I might point out, under this bill, one of the authors of the bill in the other body has said, a sealed door has had its seal broken, we can probably get it in to grade schools.

If a principal says no to these student groups wanting to hold religious services in the public high schools, it is a violation of Federal law, subject to costly litigation and all the power of the Federal Government. And this, Mr. Speaker, at a time when our public high schools are in such trouble: The San Jose Union School District, San Jose, that I represent, is in bankruptcy. We are going to Germany to get math and science teachers, and here we are considering this bill.

I have a letter from a New York school superintendent. He said: "This will open a Pandora's box of explosive emotionally charged or potentially destructive forces likely to inflict critical damage on public education in this Nation."

Mr. Speaker, the school districts themselves are going to be inundated by demands from students for religious meetings of various types of cults, fringe groups, and allegedly religious movements. The school administrators are going to have to spend innumerable hours determining whether or not various groups represent legitimate religious, political, or philosophical interests and are therefore eligible to use the school property. Schools will spend taxpayers' funds to pay teachers to perform the so-called custodial task of attending these meetings. And as outside groups multiply, this new cost to the taxpayer will escalate.

Now, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that just because a student must initiate the request, this is not going to hinder many religious cults and organizations whose aggressive proselytizing of children is a major objective of their existence. They will simply make one of their student members request the use of the school facility.

Administrators and teachers whose chief charge is to give learning and achievement the highest priority will be asked to divert their time and energy from this goal in order to spend hours reviewing, monitoring, patrolling and refereeing relationships between the groups the Senate bill would bring into the schools.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Subcommittee I chair has joint jurisdiction over the Senate bill until August 6. We need until that date to study the Senate bill, to hold public hearings, to learn more about the grave constitutional implications of this bill sent to us by the other body as a nongermane attachment to a splended education bill, and I request respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a responsible course of action by this body and I urge a no vote.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention today's editorials in the New York Times and the Washington Post which reinforce my view that this bill is both unwise and unconstitutional.

The editorials follow:

[From the Washington Post, July 25, 1984]

EQUAL ACCESS REVISED

Today the House is due to consider the so-called equal access legislation passed by the Senate last month. The bill is admittedly a great improvement over a similar measure considered by the House last spring. That proposal would have cut off funds to all secondary schools that refused to allow student religious groups to meet on school time and on school property. It would have allowed visiting adults to conduct and control the meetings and would have given school officials power to deny meeting rooms to religious groups that didn't have a large number of members. The House refused to suspend the rules to consider that bill, and it was withdrawn. The Senate version, which is now up for a vote, does not contain these objectionable features of the earlier proposal, but the basic purpose of the bill remains the same: to require schools to allow youngsters to hold religious meetings in public school facilities.

Why is the concept of keeping public schools completely separate from sectarian religious activity so hard for some legislators to accept? Having lost the battle for formal prayer in the classroom, many of the supporters of this equal access bill see student religious meetings as the next best alternative. But it is bad policy. Public schools have enough to do without providing space, teacher supervision and general approval for religious meetings involving children in the 7th grade and older. State schools should be a unifying force, emphasizing the characteristics that our children have in common rather than those by which they are separated.

Prayer groups, worship services and religious instruction belong in the home and in churches where complete religious freedom—including the freedom to belong to unpopular cults and socially controversial groups—is protected. It would be an unfortunate precedent for Congress to require that they be conducted and sanctioned under the auspices of the public schools.

[From the New York Times, July 25, 1984]

SCHOOLHOUSE FREE-FOR-ALL

Bending itself out of shape to accommodate the pressure for prayer in schools, the Senate has now acted to admit a little prayer before or after classes, but in a perversely liberal way: it would also admit some atheism, politics and perhaps even homosexual agitation on an equal basis. And in thus maneuvering around the constitutional issues raised by prayer in schools, the Senate exposes the underlying question of whether Congress has any business defining the rights of high school students.

The Senate bill, which passed by a lopsided vote of 88 to 11, sought to meet constitutional objections to the Religious Speech Protection Act that failed to carry in the House in May. The House bill would have denied Federal funds for school districts that refuse to let high school students hold extracurricular meetings "on the basis of the religious content of the speech at such meetings."

The new Senate bill proposes instead to forbid any district to prevent school gatherings on the basis of "the religious, political, philosophical or other content of the speech at such meetings." The few extra words make a big difference. But like the old bill, the new one would authorize an unprecedented Federal invasion of local control over education policies.

Congress has never before written a High School Student Equal Rights Act or Bill of Extracurricular Rights.

Under the Senate bill, a school system that uniformly provides for voluntary, student-initiated meetings before or after the school day would be staging a "limited public forum" open to any religious or nonreligious group, whatever its size.

This would surely permit some forms of prayer in some public school buildings if students choose the prayers and religious readings. Ministers could not "direct, conduct, control or regularly attend"—but they could attend.

Senator Jeremiah Denton of Alabama has reason to rejoice at this religious foot in the door. "A sealed door has had its seal broken," he said. "We can probably get it to grade schools."

Yet Senator Denton and his allies should ask themselves whether they really want equal access for all types of meetings. They may think they're putting God in the classroom, but atheists, too, would have their hour. So would socialists, homosexuals and vegetarians.

Thus legislating for the schoolhouse from Washington is a clear case of a cure that is more dangerous than the disease. It is the Federal foot that's really in the door, and it will next step on the curriculum itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has 17 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has 11 minutes, and he yielded time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] who has 4½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], a distinguished member of the subcommittee.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the equal access proposal before us today is a significant improvement over a similar proposal defeated by this body on May 15. I would like to commend Senator HATFIELD and others who labored to produce a piece of legislation that better expresses the noble purposes of its sponsors. They accomplished this by curing many of the problems of the earlier bill, including unlimited access by outsiders and the exclusion of students belonging to religious minorities unable to meet a numerical minimum.

Despite these laudable efforts, however, I believe that several important problems are still outstanding. First, although both the House and Senate sponsors of this legislation have stated that their amendment does not sanction religious services or similar activities in the schools, the language itself remains somewhat ambiguous, open to interpretation and, I fear, misinterpretation.

Also unclear in the matter of when the activities authorized by the legislation may take place. In both the House and Senate, colloquy has suggested that these activities are not to take place during the school day, but before and after school only. Again, this meaning may be clear to some legislators, but not to the thousands of school administrators who will be trying to interpret the law and to others who may mean to challenge it.

A third area for disagreement is over that kind of groups may meet. School administrators have traditionally had authority to "maintain order and discipline on school premises," as stated in this bill. But groups that may not be physically violent or disruptive may be clearly antisocial in nature. I—and school administrators—are concerned that groups such as the Ku Klux Klan or the Nazis may for the first time be able to claim access to secondary schools.

Although I strongly support free speech, courts have properly distinguished between audiences of adults and children. I fear that the authority of school administrators to restrict access may be vitiated under this bill.

I am convinced that this legislation will mean enormous problems for school administrators. I know that the sponsors want to be helpful, and would prefer to minimize the meddling of the Federal Government in local school affairs. Nevertheless, I believe this legislation will end up adding to the burdens of school administrators, who already have to contend with Federal case law and State statutes on this subject. We would be better off not adding another layer of Federal law that can only complicate the duties of school administrators.

Rather than clarifying the law, this legislation, with all it ambiguities, is likely to create more litigation. The meaning of every word in this bill will be contested. While I know that is not the intention of the sponsors, nevertheless, I fear that will be the result.

These reservations lead me to once again vote no on equal access, notwithstanding the improvements in this version. While I applaud the efforts of the sponsors in trying to fine-tune their proposal, their inability to resolve these important questions convinces me that this may be an area in which we would do best not to legislate.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I would like to respond to a comment made by the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] has expired.

□ 1130

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, as someone who opposed the earlier version of this bill, I stand here today and say that what we now are offered deserves our support. This bill is distinguished dramatically from the legislation which we were called upon to consider earlier this year.

First of all, it limits activities to before and after school hours, and we do not get into the very gray question of what is noninstructional time. Second, and importantly, it clearly keeps out nonschool personnel. I know there was great concern about who would come into the schools, and who would conduct the meetings. Third, also very important, it clearly allows the school personnel to maintain discipline. There was a great concern for order and the possibility of violence; that is resolved by the language of the bill.

Fourth, finally, and very important, there is no attempt to tie this bill to the cutoff of Federal funds. I was deeply concerned that any form of religious issue would be tied to the potential cutoff of Federal funds. This bill responds to the criticism; it formalizes the current process in most school districts; and it deserves our support.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this motion. The end result of this bill is simply to circumvent the Constitution and reinterpret it in such a manner as would permit so-called religious groups to use school facilities. If the sponsors and those concerned about this issue would simply let the Constitution work, we would be better served by the policy that would flow from it rather than a policy which tries to flow around and compromise the Constitution.

After all, what we are doing with this legislation is mandating that school districts across America must provide the use of their facilities for religious meetings. Congress sitting in Washington is pretending to know better than all the school districts and school boards that are elected to deal with the activities and policy fundamental to public schools operation. The argument here is not over freedom of religion or diversity; we all believe in that and in fact the free pursuit of these beliefs is a tenet of the Constitution. The argument that we now are coming to grips with is the utilization of locally controlled public school physical facilities.

Congress would be pulling the rug out from under school administrators and school boards across the country with the proposed policy action before this House. That is really what the argument and debate is about. Congress is proposing that local school districts provide facilities, buildings, staffing—the entire framework dedicated for public education, would be stood on its head and devoted to religious use and without reservation to any group of students.

Who has the liability? Well, the public school district, of course, will retain the liability, and we in Washington are shoving this policy down their throats. This proposal mandates that, and if the local school district doesn't follow this policy, the Department of Education must withdraw all Federal aid.

This policy is trying to circumvent, simply, the meaning of the Constitution. This is a rather transparent effort to superimpose our views without qualification, without guidance, or limitations on school boards the use of their physical facilities. Congress will not be present to take the flak when the community descends on the school boards, and indeed they will because as certain as the sun rises in the morning, religious differences in our society and throughout human history have engendered controversy. Certainly that is why the success of the public school system in this Nation has attempted to proscribe a separation from religious activities.

Indeed, this model may not be perfect, but this policy will simply embroil our Nation's public schools in yet another controversy which is not necessary. Clearly, most organized religious groups have physical facilities; is it asking too much that they be utilized.

Some that pursue this policy clearly have a different agenda, that of forcing a specific theological point of view, of engendering controversy, dissension, and acrimony into the educational process of our Nation's public schools. This Congress should not be a sounding board for such purposes and defeat this motion now before the House.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I support this bill. First, I am a strong proponent of the constitutional status quo. The Constitution was drafted during a period of extreme religious fervor. The drafters correctly concluded that the Government should not actively work to pick or establish a religion. This has been correctly interpreted to include either direct or official, yet subtle, peer pressure methods.

Yet, the founders were fundamentally religious. There was no intent to discriminate against religious groups in the context we are discussing here today. I was attorney general of Vermont at the end of the 1960's. This was a time when efforts were being made to try to help parochial schools to stay open, to meet rising costs, to the rental of public buildings, et cetera. Thus, I am aware of the maze of confusing and conflicting opinions in this area.

I have studied this bill; it is narrowly drafted. All this bill attempts to do is to give constitutional guidance in this confusing area to prevent essentially reverse discrimination. I urge the Members to support this bill.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, on every dollar bill are inscribed the words "In God We Trust." Every newly elected President ends his sacred oath of office with the words "so help me God." Schoolchildren learn the Pledge of Allegiance which includes the words "One nation under God." Even our House proceedings begin with a prayer. Religion does prevail in every aspect of our Nation, even in the Federal Government.

Where then lies the separation of church and state? If we as elected officials may pray before our sessions, cannot young men and women hold religious meetings in public schools after the schoolday has ended? If the President, resting his hand on the Bible, may utter the profound words "so help me God," cannot responsible high school students be allowed to study their Bibles on public premises? And ladies and gentlemen, if all American currency is inscribed with the words "In God We Trust," then must we unconstitutionally deny the rights of adolescents to express their beliefs in the same buildings that permit French and photography clubs?

We must strive to keep these facts in mind. Religion and the belief in God helped to shape and mold our great Nation. The proof is in our art, our literature, and in our Government institutions. Must we now, as political descendants of our devoutly religious Founding Fathers, ignore the rights of individuals to religious freedom?

Please, I strongly urge you to vote for the equal assess resolution today. If you may have trouble deciding, reach into your pockets and grab a coin, for on that coin are four simple words which tell the whole story of our proud Nation. Those are the words "In God We Trust." If this Nation truly believes that, then surely in God we Americans do trust.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the equal access amendment does not give new or additional rights to anyone or any group. It would merely clarify the situation in which some religious student clubs across the country are being told they cannot meet on the same basis as other student clubs.

Some examples of the problem are as follows:

The county counsel for Los Angeles has concluded that a school district may not allow any group of students to use facilities during the schoolday for the purpose of reading and discussing the Bible.

A Youth for Christ group in Clayton, GA, was told that it could not hold an Easter egg hunt for handicapped children.

Students have been told that they cannot write compositions with religious content in English class.

Students have been told they could not carry their own Bibles on school grounds.

These are but some of the examples of confusion.

Groups supporting the bill include: United States Catholic Conference, National Council of Churches, Americans United for Separation of Church & State, the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, the Christian Legal Society.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I have always had my children in public schools. I am a total believer in public schools. Let me bring some practical observations to this debate. I want the public schools to focus on basic educational skills. I want my children to be well grounded in math, science, English, history, and foreign languages. There are only so many teaching hours in a day and only so many teaching days in a year.

Every year more good ideas surface to include in the school curriculum than there are hours to accommodate them all. Let's review some of the additions over the years to the public school curriculum. We have added physical fitness, nutrition courses, swimming proficiency, music, art and drama appreciation, first aid information, personal hygiene, sex education, vocational education, typing, driver education, cultural programs, patriotism, computers, breakfast programs, lunch programs, drug and alcohol abuse information programs. All of these are great ideas but again there are now more ideas then time. We all know how hard it is for public schools to keep their score up in national tests and part of the reason is they have less and less time to focus on the basics.

Here we have a math and science bill that is so needed but we are trying to shoe horn in even more things into the school day.

I also must remind people that the age group we are talking about is so vulnerable to peer pressure. Being popular is an all powerful goal; as the mother of teenagers I deal with that pressure every day.

My great grandfather came from Ireland. He was a Protestant and couldn't stand the religious stuff in Ireland 1 more minute. He went to Philadelphia planning to settle. He was turned off by the use of public schools in Philadelphia to convert poor Catholic Irish children who couldn't afford parochial school to Protestantism. He felt that was the same situation he was fleeing and moved west. So I was raised to keep religion out of the schools, period. Schools should educate. We should have a moratorium on adding anything to school curriculum until national scores go back up. Taxpayers should get full value for their tax dollars collected for public schools. They pay for education and that's what they should get.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BURTON].

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that when the schools have problems with disciplining children, the schools have problems with teaching the three R's, the schools have problems, as Mrs. SCHROEDER said, teaching children, we want to add another burden, to have religion in the schools.

As a parent and grandparent, let me tell you, religion belongs in the home. It is the parents and grandparents who ought to take care of religion.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BURTON of California. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to commend the gentlewoman in the well and to say as, not only a Member of Congress, but as a United Methodist minister, and someone who has served 11 years in local churches, I strongly believe that this is the wrong direction for us to go, and that we should defeat this particular bill at this time.

I think that it is unequal access to our schools, and I think our churches and our families and our homes, our synagogues, our pastors, our rabbis ought to take responsibility for the moral teaching of our children. We ought to go back to the schools with a strong commitment toward education. I hope that we will reject this amendment.

Mrs. BURTON of California. I urge defeat of the bill.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS] is recognized for 30 seconds.

There was no objection.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, Members were handed a handout as they entered the floor quoting the New York Times editorial against this bill. It says the proponents of this say they are putting God in the classroom, but atheists too, would have their hour. So would socialists, homosexuals, and vegetarians. That is the issue. Socialists, homosexuals, and vegetarians already have their hour under the court interpretation. We are simply trying to add the right of students after hours to meet for religious purposes as these others have the right.

If they cannot meet, religious people cannot meet. If they can, they ought to be able to do it. It is a matter of equity and fairness and I urge support for the bill.

□ 1140

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I voted against the original equal access bill for several reasons.

First, it required a cutoff of Federal funds for any school district that violated the act. It is important to know this bill does not do that.

The objectionable bill protected only the freedom of religious speech. This bill does not do that. It applies to all forms of speech.

The original bill allowed a gathering for religious purposes during the school day. This bill does not do that. It does not allow interruption of the schoolday.

The early bill allowed outsiders to direct the religious meetings. This bill does not.

Finally, the bill which I voted against and which was defeated provided no control to the school administrators to determine time, place or manner of the religious meeting. This bill does not do that.

This equal access legislation is an appropriate attempt to place parameters, with a minimum of interference by the State, around the right of students to discuss religion while on public school property.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, serving in this body has taught me the efficacy of prayer and to respect it even more. I would support this piece of legislation save for one thing. It opens it up to so-called philosophical discussions.

In a major urban area some years ago there was a group that conducted philosophical discussions and they used young people to proselytize those philosophical discussions. The result of those philosophical discussions happened to be the celebrated Zebra murder cases in which some 13 or 14 people were killed because of the indoctrination that they had received in terms of these philosophical discussions.

Insofar as I can determine, there is nothing in this legislation to have prevented one of those young people who were so indoctrinated to request of a school to have a meeting to conduct the campaign of hatred that resulted in the Zebra killings.

In addition to that, if a school personel is there to supervise and "the students" are denied the right to discuss their kind of philosophical orientation, those students then have the right to say, "You are denying me freedom of speech."

I would go along with the bill except for that wide-open area of philosophical discussion. Let us defeat it.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I only have three more speakers left. I believe the gentleman from Kentucky has many more.

The Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, first we had a bad bill. Now we have a better bill. But the best bill is no bill at all.

Will someone tell me how we improve the education of our children by this bill? If we allow the Moonies into school, if we allow the Ku Klux Klan into school, if we allow a Nazi club into school, if we let fanatics into the school in the name of religion, how does this improve the education of your children and mine?

My good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] says this bill is good because it will not make infants of our children. I am a mother of two teenage children and they are far from infants. They already have to deal with many, many choices and many responsibilities.

So I say to my colleagues, let kids be kids. Let schools be schools. Let churches and synagogues teach prayer. That is where it belongs. It does not belong in our schools. Let us look at the Constitution and let us let it stand strong, and let us let our Founding Fathers rest in peace.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, let us not get this bill all mixed up with the education of our young children, because what this bill does is allow access to basically a community facility. We passed a Community Facility Schools Act at one point to open up the schools after school and before school to all kinds of organizations.

I want to see programs for latch-key children after school. Other people want to see the YWCA, the YMCA, religious organizations. We are not talking about interfering here. That is the difference between this bill and the past bill. We are talking about before school and after school.

Probably one of the tragic effects of this bill will be that school boards will decide that nobody will use these facilities, but the fact of the matter is, as the bill is now designed, it is not to engage, interrupt, or determine the educational portion of the day under control by the school board.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] now has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for yielding me this additional time.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentlewoman from Tennessee.

Mrs. LLOYD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Equal Access Act.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of the original House version of the equal access bill, I'm glad we have the opportunity again today to consider the rights of students to voluntary participate in extracurricular religious activity. And I'm heartened by the support which is being expressed for the Senate language. Like the House bill the Senate amendment requires that meetings be voluntary and student initiated, not sponsored by the school. It extends to students interested in religious study or activities the same privileges accorded to those interested in debate, for example. Supporters of this legislation seek an opportunity for any and all religions and in no way attempt to deny any religious group access to school facilities. The Senate amendment clarifies this intent by specifying that small groups of students cannot be discriminated, that all groups should have the same privileges of meeting voluntarily.

I am hopeful that our efforts today will be successful and that the House will approve the Senate language on equal access.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, let me quickly respond to some of the comments that were made, since most were emotional and not very factual.

First of all, to assure the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL] that that cannot happen in his school, "Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the authority of the school, its agents or employees to maintain order and discipline on school premises to protect the well-being of students and faculty, and to assure that attendance of students at meetings is voluntary," which will take all the hate groups out. They are not allowed to participate under this act.

This bill does not reverse a tradition in this great country. It continues a great tradition, and that tradition protects all types of speech. It does not reverse a tradition. It continues a tradition of allowing students to organize and run activities in public schools. One of the areas that students truly need more experience in is in the area of free speech, this bill facilitates giving that experience.

This bill is to help local administrators by clarifying some of the conflicting lower court decisions. As has been mentioned, Harvard law professor Lawrence Tribe pointed out that only religious speech has sometimes been singled out for undue restrictions. This bill corrects that abuse.

There are some who say the bill makes school administrators decide what is religion. That is totally wrong. This bill does not create such entanglement with religion. This bill applies to all noncurricula meetings, regardless of whether religious or not. So there is no entanglement with religion because school administrators will make their decisions governing such meetings for all noncurricula-related activities and meetings, religious or otherwise.

So I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will eliminate all the emotion that has been thrown into something that is really not an emotional issue. If we carefully study the legislation, it is carefully crafted to make sure that each youngster has equal access to freedom of speech. I cannot think of any group, any organization, more than the Congress of the United States that should be concerned with the fact that we allow equal speech, equal opportunity for speech, in this great Nation. That is what it is all about.

This bill, some critic here today said, licenses religious services in public high schools for the first time. That is totally false. The bill only provides equal access to all groups, not special treatment for religion. The bill only applies if the school voluntarily creates a limited open forum. Everything is left to the local option. Everything is left to the local administrators and the local school board.

So I ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

□ 1150

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly tell me whether the student groups that may have this access are limited to the students of the particular school, or may students come in from other schools?

Mr. GOODLING. It is very definitely limited to the students in the school. The administration determines that. They do not allow students to come in from other schools.

Mr. PEPPER. The language of the legislation does not say that.

Mr. GOODLING. I am sorry. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. PEPPER. The language of the legislation does not say that.

Mr. GOODLING. The language of the legislation says that all these decisions are local school board decisions. I do not know of any board that says that anybody who wants to come in from all over the world can just come in. We do not do that. We say that the local school district makes that decision and that determination, and that is protected.

If we had had the time, for a further colloquy, Mr. BONKER was going to ask me the following question: One of the terms in the equal access amendment which needs clarification is "noncurriculum-related student groups," which would trigger the equal access policy of this legislation. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], as a former teacher and school administrator and principal cosponsor of the legislation how he would define "noncurriculum-related student groups" for purposes of this measure.

In answer to that question, I would say as follows: I would interpret "noncurriculum related" to encompass those student activities which are either of a type which schools usually do not sponsor or those activities which the school might sponsor but has not. Thus, there would be a two-step inquiry to determine whether a meeting is noncurriculum related.

First, is the subject matter of the meeting of a type which a public school could sponsor? In other words, the meeting must be academic, athletic, or musical to be curriculum related. A Latin club, a soccer team, and a school band would all clearly fall within this category. A young Democrat or Republican Club, private social organizations, or religious groups would not be of the type which a school could sponsor.

Second, does the school or a schoolteacher require or directly encourage student participation in such group in connection with curriculum course work?

If both elements of this two-part analysis are satisified, the meeting would be considered curriculum related and the equal access policy would not be triggered.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I am delighted to yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today we have before us legislation which has come to be known as the Equal Access Act. I am certain that the authors and supporters of this legislation are well-meaning and have at heart, as I do, the interests of our children and their religious formation. However, I am fearful that in attempting to give equal access to religious groups, we would be allowing an open forum for self-styled religions such as the cults which serve to transform negatively the minds of our young people. Many of these groups are known to practice mind control and practices aimed at converting the very young and impressionable. Is this what we want for our children?

Mr. Speaker, I must point out that I take great offense at the consideration of this legislation under suspension thereby denying the Members of this body the opportunity of amending the language of the bill. This is the second time that this Chamber has considered the issue of equal access under suspension.

Supporters of this legislation state that the revised version of the bill will provide access to school facilities before and after school. The legislation permits use of school buildings during noninstructional hours which I interpret to mean nonclass periods. This does not limit these relgious meetings to before and after school but to periods when actual instruction is not taking place.

Also, the bill misleads us to believe that religious groups will not have the rights equal to those now given to other nonreligious groups. This is not the case. The bill gives preferred status of religious groups.

The number of issues in the legislation which are unclear goes on and on. I would, however, like to focus my attention on the one concern which I find to be the most distressing.

As I mentioned before, it is my contention that in passing this legislation we would be providing an open forum for self-styled religions as well. I don't think any one of us wants to be held accountable for the infiltration of so-called religious cults into our schools. It was only 6 short years ago that we, as Members of Congress, experienced firsthand what the infiltration of cults can do to a family. Have we already forgotten the devastation that the so-called Rev. Jim Jones brought to the Ryan family and to the Members of this body?

Those of us who concern ourselves with the elimination of child abuse and child pornography and the pernicious mind control cults are aware that there are cults in existence today that use the name of God in their titles and at the same time are notorious for the distribution of pornographic literature. These same "religions" are guilty of urging their female converts to prostitute themselves to encourage young male converts. Is this what we want for our children?

Let's take a closer look at this legislation before we cast our votes. There are appropriate forums for our children to learn about religion—to give a blanket invitation to anyone to preach anything to our youth—particularly during the formative teen and preteen years is unconscionable. I urge my colleages to vote "no" on this legislation.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, first we had the school prayer amendment. When those who would destroy the wall between church and state found they could not blatantly force organized prayer into the classroom, we thought the measure had died. But it was born again in the equal access bill known as the son of school prayer.

That effort, too, died, but it was reincarnated with this new, supposedly softer measure, a sort of "godson of school prayer." But to paraphrase the words of the very perceptive child who refused to eat his sugar-coated vegetables, this bill looks like school prayer, it tastes like school prayer, and it smells like school prayer.

To those of my colleagues who see this bill as a way to infuse morality into the public schools, they are missing the point of my opposition to this very dangerous legislation. God does not need a two-thirds vote of this Congress to go into our schools. It has lately become politically very chic to flaunt one's religion. Everyone from Jesse Jackson to Ronald Reagan speaks of bringing Christian values and traditions to Government. As a Member of Congress who is not a Christian but who is nonetheless very proud of his religion, this troubles me. As a person whose grandparents and ancestors were persecuted throughout recorded history because their religious beliefs did not jibe with the mainstream, this trend frightens me. As a citizen of the greatest country in the world that was founded by the religious rejects of every country on this planet, the flotsam and jetsam that was not accepted anywhere because they were religious minorities, this trend greatly troubles me.

This is not some knee jerk, archtypical liberal cause that I plead. This Member of Congress is deeply troubled by this movement in American society to shove religion down the throats of everyone, true believers and infidels alike.

A scant few days ago we as a body declared that we no longer trust 18- and 19-year-olds or even 20-year-olds to exercise a rational and careful judgment not to drive after they drink. The peer pressure would be too strong, we said. Yet today we are on the verge of declaring that young children, some as young as 11 and 12 and 13 years, in our junior high schools have the courage and the wisdom and the maturity to stand up to the peer pressure that would be exerted on them to practice and participate in the religious beliefs of their friends in their own public school building.

Is that the type of people we have become—one Nation under God, as long as it is my God and not yours? I pray not.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, for the record I would like to engage the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER], the sponsor of the legislation, in a colloquy.

I understand the gentleman is not here at the moment, so may I ask the committee chairman if I could engage him in a colloquy?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, of course, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, section (d) (1) and (2) says that:

> Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof to influence the form or content of any prayer or other religious activity;
> (2) to require any person to participate in prayer or other religious activity;

Does this not presume that we are then allowing prayer and religious activity in the schools?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman was talking yesterday so long about religious services that I intended to ask the gentleman what his idea was of religious services. But by no means does this coerce. Everything is voluntary.

Mr. ACKERMAN. But this would permit religious services in the schools?

Mr. PERKINS. What is the gentleman's definition of "religious services?"

Mr. ACKERMAN. Something that should take place in a religious institution.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman consider, if two or three students gathered together for the purpose of sharing Bible verses, that that constitutes a religious service in his definition?

Mr. ACKERMAN. If they wanted to have a discussion for educational purposes, it does not. There is a difference between preaching and teaching.

Mr. BONKER. I am asking the gentleman, if two or three students get together for the purpose of praying together or to share Bible verses, does he consider that a religious service?

Mr. ACKERMAN. If they are conducting an actual prayer service, yes. If they are reading the Bible or discussing the Bible, then I do not.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, does the gentleman consider that when the Chaplain is reciting a prayer at the beginning of the session of Congress, that is a religious service?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN] has expired.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask for an additional minute?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] desire to yield time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN]?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not have the time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does have time.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues, in the interest of fairness and justice and what the American Constitution really stands for, to defeat this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has 7½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has 4 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has no time remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PENNY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Nebraska.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I supported Mr. BONKER's equal access bill when it was considered by this House on May 15, and I rise in even stronger support of the improved equal access provisions we have before us today as title VIII of H.R. 1310, the important Mathematics and Science Education Act.

We in Congress took an oath to uphold the Constitution, and with this bill we are simply saying to the students in our secondary public schools that, yes, you have a constitutional right to freely speak your thoughts on religion, just as you voice your thoughts on politics, civic responsibilities, the recent football game, next week's dance, or other currently popular subjects. I cannot understand how opponents of equal access can argue that it is permissible for a school to allow a chess club to meet in a classroom after the schoolday and deny that right to students wanting to study the Bible.

When this body first debated the principle of equal access nearly 2 months ago, opponents focused their objections and criticism on what they considered to be loopholes in the language of the Bonker's bill—loopholes that they thought elevated religious speech above all other forms of speech by cloaking religion, and religion alone, in the protective mantle of Federal fund termination—loopholes they thought would result in discrimination against religious minorities because the bill allowed minimum attendance levels to be set before a group qualified for equal access—loopholes they thought would allow crazies and fanatics into the schools to convert our sons and daughters—loopholes they thought would allow the normal schoolday to be disrupted with club meetings and activities—and loopholes they thought would end local control of the public schools.

So, what are the arguments against the equal access provisions before us today? The objections and criticism of the original bill, H.R. 5345, have been met and this bill now deserves the support of the entire House.

The Senate version of equal access actually only resembles the original House bill in principle and intent to make it unlawful for a high school receiving Federal funds to deny use of its facilities to any extracurricular group while granting such access to other extracurricular groups.

We have before us a bill that no longer can be charged with giving special preference to religious speech, for it applies to "religious, political, philosophical, or other speech." And there are no provisions for terminating Federal financial assistance to any schools.

This improved equal access language places no minimum limit on the size of student groups ensured equal access; it specifies that outsiders may not "direct, conduct, control, or regularly attend activities of student groups"; and it applies only to groups meeting before or after school.

And most importantly, we are voting on an equal access bill that will preserve local control. School principals and administrators and local school boards will retain their right to "maintain order and discipline on school premises, to protect the well-being of students and faculty, and to assure that attendance of students at meeting is voluntary."

There is clearly overwhelming support in my district for this constitutionally sound and evenhanded means of protecting the first amendment rights of students. I have no doubts that nationwide there is the same degree of support, and I urge my colleagues to listen to their constituents, to put aside the emotional and incorrect arguments that this is a school prayer bill, and to join me in supporting the principle of equal access. Vote yes on accepting title VIII of H.R. 1310, vote yes to approve titles I through VII to improve math and science education, and let's get this important education bill to the President's desk.

Thank you.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask, what is wrong with the equal access proposal? Nothing. Equal access simply means that if other student groups are allowed access to public school buildings, then so must we allow that access to student religious groups.

Equal access protects our constitutional freedoms of speech and religion. What, then, is wrong with this specific equal access proposal? Again, nothing.

All of the objections and criticisms that were leveled against the equal access bill brought to the House floor a few weeks back have been resolved by the current version before us today.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for equal access. It is a vote for our constitutional freedoms.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ECKART].

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKART. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the equal access substitute to H.R. 5345, which would allow public secondary school students the simple freedom to meet and express their faith on school premises, outside of school hours.

Equal access legislation will protect the first amendment rights of student groups and restore fairness in our public schools. Our Nation's students should be permitted to meet voluntarily for religious expression in the same way that they are currently allowed to meet for other purposes.

Not only is equal access legislation a question of fundamental fairness, but it is a matter of upholding the basic human liberties guaranteed by our Constitution. Freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of assembly are rights which must be preserved. These are the ideals on which our great Nation was founded and which are the unique trademark of our free society.

Let us not forget for a moment how vital to our Nation freedom of expression is and this includes freedom of religious expression as well.

As it stands now, the rights of our students are being flagrantly violated. Examples abound: In Boulder, CO, a group of two or more students may not sit together for the purpose of spiritual or religious discussion. In Philadelphia, several students were reprimanded because they discussed their faith and shared a booklet with Bible verses in it with other students. In Minnesota, a fourth grade student was reprimanded by her supervisor for bowing her head to pray before her meal.

These violations of student rights must be stopped. Examples such as these are un-American and more akin to an authoritarian system rather than a free society such as ours.

Our students should not grow up learning religious intolerance. To exclude or prohibit one form of expression over another is unconstitutional and unworthy of our public institutions. American students must be taught tolerance and respect for other beliefs and opinions. This is as important a part of their education as is grammar and arithmetic.

Equal access legislation will ensure that free speech is protected, not just selected free speech. I urge my colleagues to uphold our Nation's basic human liberties and vote for passage of the equal access substitute.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ECKART. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in strong support of the equal access legislation which we are today considering. We have here yet another opportunity to make a significant stride toward protecting the religious freedoms of our secondary school students. If we fail to pass this legislation, we will have again neglected our responsibility to ensure our students' constitutionally guaranteed right to freedom of speech.

I am deeply concerned that the right to express religious beliefs has been totally removed from our public schools over the years. I am equally distressed that mature, young adults in my congressional district of Kentucky are unable to participate in certain extracurricular activities solely because school administrators may fear that those meetings violate our constitutional doctrine of separation of church and state. Equal access, however, is not an issue of Government-sponsored religion. The issue at hand is nondiscrimination, and the equal access concept resolves that issue. This equal access legislation simply ensures that schools which permit student-initiated groups to meet and use school facilities during noninstructional periods cannot deny student-initiated religious groups the right to meet on the same basis.

We are not talking about granting special treatment to religious groups; we are not talking about allowing schools to sponsor religious activities; and we certainly are not talking about imposing upon our school systems by requiring that they allow any extracurricular activities at all. We are stating the clear intent of our Founding Fathers by clarifying what is already in our Constitution—the right to freely express religious beliefs in an open, non-Government-sponsored forum.

So far, our courts have been unable to allay the fears of local school boards with regard to the constitutionality of religious meetings in our schools. By enacting this legislation, we are once and for all letting our schools know that they can grant the same treatment to the Bible club that they have long afforded all other student organized groups.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation has long awaited this kind of action by the Congress. The vast majority of Americans recognize the importance of religion in all our daily lives. Our children are taught from early on that they enjoy the freedoms of speech and religious expression. Yet over the years that lesson has been contradicted by court decisions which have served to undermine free religious expression in the name of preserving constitutional liberties.

The only way we can fully preserve and protect the constitutional freedoms which are so vital to the well-being of our children is to ensure that our constitutional doctrines are construed in ways which will not discourage the expression of religious beliefs.

Mr. Speaker, the equal access legislation before us does not alter our Constitution; it carries on the traditions of free expression which are intrinsic to that document, and so very important for the proper development of our youth.

Many of the people of my Fifth District of Kentucky have let me know that they want equal access to our public schools. The preservation of the values they hold so dearly—family, faith, morality—depend on our commitment to guarantee freedom of religious expression for our children. This equal access legislation will carry out that commitment, and I strongly urge its passage on behalf of the rights of all our children.

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, I say to the Members of the House that this issue is the most serious student free speech initiative to come before this Congress in many years. By extending the equal access principle to meet the serious and well-taken objections of the opponents the first time around, we have extended to all voluntary student groups, political, philosophical, and other nonreligious groups in their orientation, the free-speech opportunity for young adults, people who we all hope to see mature and to become viable parts of our society.

□ 1200

As much as the three "R's" are part of growing up in our society, so is the appreciation of divergent viewpoints in our society as well, and to raise the artificial bogeyman about what schools are capable or incapable of doing today by further excluding the free and open discussion of alternative views in our society hampers a real true diverse education.

We need freedom. We need diversity. We need an opportunity for our young people to grow and appreciate every educational opportunity. This legislation will grant that.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation.

I certainly strongly support this equal access bill.

We let other groups be invited on the public school grounds and talk about any subject they like. Yet those who want to come on the grounds to talk about religion during noninstructional hours are handicapped and encouraged not to come on the premises because it could be violating the no prayer in public schools Supreme Court ruling.

I hope my colleagues would support this bill and not punish those who would like to have religious discussions at noninstructional times. The great majority of the people of this country want this legislation and let's let them have their wish.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend, the gentleman from the State of Washington.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. GOODLING was going to ask the following question:

One of the things I have been concerned about is the right of student groups to meet during the schoolday as part of an activities period. Many schools currently permit student-initiated, noncurriculum-related groups to meet during the schoolday—whether these groups are religious, political, philosophical, or affiliated with some outside group like the Key Club or the Hi-Y. It is certainly not my intention, in cosponsoring this substitute, to prohibit such groups from meeting during the schoolday if it is the policy of the school to permit noncurriculum-related student meetings during noninstructional time.

My interpretation of the legislation is that the equal access policy is required before and after the schoolday, but not during the schoolday—that it is up to the school and the courts to determine what activities may take place during the schoolday in terms of student meetings. Is that correct?

My answer to this question is as follows:

That is exactly right. The Senate compromise on this point is that the measure is silent with respect to student meetings during the schoolday. It is within the discretion of the school administration, in keeping with district and circuit court opinions, as to whether noncurriculum related student groups may meet in noninstructional time during the schoolday.

It is also up to the school to define the regular "school day" and what constitutes "noninstructional time," so long as the school does not define "school day" in such a way as to intentionally defeat the purpose of this legislation.

This legislation is not a step backward in terms of the local school district's authority to permit student groups to meet during the schoolday. It would merely mandate that before and after school, the equal access policy would be required.

For example, in your State of Pennsylvania, a U.S. district recently ruled, in the Bender against Williamsport case, that a school may not deny equal access to a student Bible club which wishes to meet during an activities period on the same terms as other student groups. In that district, the school would have the choice of granting all legitimate student groups the right to meet during the activities period, or the school could do away with the activities period for noncurriculum-related student groups.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the confusion in the debate illustrates the confusion as to what is a religious service and what is not.

The issues that have been raised in this debate as to what is a religious service and what is not, what is a prayer service and what is not, underscores the confusion that has arisen out of the Supreme Court decision of 22 years ago. The Supreme Court said that there is a constitutional right to separation of church and state, but the Supreme Court did not say that there should be the separation of the state and of God. That is an inherent part of our constitutional right of religious freedom.

We ought to then by passing this legislation eliminate the confusion among school administrators, eliminate the hostility that in an unwarranted way has built up over the last 22 years, hostility between government and religion, and let us return to our constitutional rights.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] consume part of his time at this time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has 4½ minutes remaining; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has 4 minutes remaining. The Chair will reserve as much time as the gentleman wants to be the concluding speaker.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the kind offer of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, and I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to prayer in schools, but I do not understand what this bill does. This bill says:

(b) A public secondary school has a limited open forum whenever such school grants an offering to or opportunity for one or more noncurriculum related student groups to meet on school premises during noninstructional time.

What does that mean?

I do not understand why the proponents of this measure do not simply say that any time any students of a particular school get authority from the school people in authority to have a meeting at a certain place on the school grounds and talk about any religious subject they want to, that they are permitted to do so.

Then there would be no students outside of that school, students from perhaps across the Nation, perhaps they are talking about any school that has an open forum. Well, I did not think schools generally had open forums. So there will be a disappointment on the part of a lot of people that expect they are going to get prayer from this bill who will not get it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a few short months ago I spoke on the floor about my concerns over the equal access bill as passed by our Education and Labor Committee. Acknowledging the laudable intentions of the sponsors, I spoke against it on content, and on procedure.

At that time I brought up the fact that 6 months prior I was on the floor in opposition to a proposed constitutional amendment that was brought to the floor under suspension. Abuse of the suspension calendar was not to stop there. Since that date we have seen a major bill reauthorizing a vital and popular program, Head Start, but which also included unnecessary and expensive reauthorization of other programs, come up under suspension. There was some talk of bringing up the Civil Rights Act of 1984 under suspension, until sanity prevailed and the major sponsors of the bill recognized the necessity of full and open debate and opportunity for amendment. Certainly the potential implications of this legislation are no less weighty than those of the Civil Rights Act. The difference is on civil rights we had 2 days of consideration, several amendments offered, along with detailed and considered legislative history.

Mr. Speaker, are we afraid of full and open debate? Of the opportunity to amend our language? Are we afraid that we might possibly improve the bills before us, or are we afraid that if we took the time to carefully look at some of these bills, they might not stand the close scrutiny?

A few short months ago H.R. 5345, the House version of the Equal Access Act was before us. I spoke about my concerns over this bill. I was prepared to debate the merits of the bill.

I am ashamed to say that we cannot fully debate the merits today. At 6 o'clock yesterday evening, the decision to bring this bill to the floor was made. This bill's language was passed by the Senate on June 27, 2 days before we recessed. Now on our second day back, we have this bill before us. I wonder how many of my colleagues have had their staff read the almost 40 pages of Senate debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? How many of us know what this language means? Even the House and Senate sponsors don't.

We have no clear answer whether religious ceremonies and school prayer are permitted. We have no clear answer whether such activities are prohibited. We have no clear definition of religious speech. The record shows the sponsors disagree. The debate today shows these disagreements continue. The confusion is real.

Just as the sponsors are confused over the interpretation of the equal access bill, they have created a great deal of consternation and confusion over the procedure for consideration of the bill. A "Dear Colleague" letter dated July 24 asked for Republican Members' support for the bill under Calendar Wednesday, allowing 2 hours of general debate and opportunity for amendment. This morning, we received a "Dear Colleague" addressed to all Members urging support of the legislation under suspension of the rules, so that the time-consuming Calendar Wednesday procedure may be avoided. The obvious question is, Why were amendments touted yesterday and today we are being asked to expedite the process? I think the answer is the sponsors of the bill are not on a firm, substantive, or procedural grounds. And what are the substantive issues?

Have the various House committees with jurisdiction over this bill held hearings on this language? No.

Mr. Speaker, does the House have a committee report on this language detailing the various ramifications of this bill? No.

Are we abdicating our responsibilities as legislators by rushing through such an important piece of legislation without thought to its consequences? Yes.

Mr. Speaker, once again we are being asked to abrogate our responsibility to our constituents and to the Constitution of the United States, by acquiescing without murmur to the ramrodding of legislation through this House.

Whether or not you agree with the intent of the equal access bill, I am sure you will agree that our duties as Members of Congress require that we do not legislate in a vacuum. Full and open debate should be the rule, not the exception. We are here to legislate, not to placate. I urge my colleagues to consider the consequences of our actions today. I urge a no vote.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Of course, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my friend that it is a shame that important issues have to be debated in a pressure cooker under stringent time limitations, but there is a difference between forcing this legislation out under these conditions or not getting it on the floor at all. This may provide the only opportunity available. You either forget this legislation or you get it under these very limited difficult circumstances.

Now, ERA was debated because the Speaker chose to bring it to the floor under these circumstances, but the choice here is either vote on it with the limited time available, or do not get a chance to vote on it at all.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman would be pleased to realize that if he is really interested in fully debating this, all he has to do is convince a few of his colleagues to vote no and this will be brought up on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HYDE. We are told the Speaker does not want to bring it up under Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. ACKERMAN. It is the prerogative of the chairmen of the various committees to bring it up on Calendar Wednesday, and while I cannot give the gentleman assurance for any chairman, I would be willing to bet this would be provided for on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HYDE. Providing nobody brings anything else up, or seeks to delay consideration by a maneuver such as the large amount of amendments you have filed.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, may I reclaim my time?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. There are 4 minutes remaining to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS], and the gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the equal access provisions of H.R. 1310 as amended by the other body. While I would have preferred to see us consider again the House equal access bill, I believe that the version before us accomplishes the most important goals that we have been pursuing.

Those of us who have long supported equal access have been primarily concerned about the protection of the free speech rights of voluntary, non-school sponsored, high school student groups as well as the preservation of the integrity of the Constitution in regard to separation of church and State. The measure before us achieves both parts of this goal.

* This legislation does not represent an establishment of religion or interfere with the free exercise of religion. No student will be coerced to join any particular religious group. All we are trying to do is ensure that a group of high school students who wish to meet in school to discuss religious matters may do so during noninstructional time.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this important measure.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, after years of "officially sanctioned" discrimination against student religious groups, it is time that this Congress send a message to the Nation's young people that it is all right for them to practice their religious beliefs.

Our courts have been so aggressive in recent years in their efforts to keep religion out of our public schools that we have now reached a point at which school administrators, teachers, and students are understandably skittish about allowing any vestige of religious expression on school property. As a result, in many of our schools, virtually the only organizations that cannot use school facilities for meetings or other activities are those of a religious nature.

Indeed, political clubs, chess clubs, athletic clubs, and many others are often allowed to use school facilities with no hesitation; however, if the same students voluntarily organize a Bible club, they may find their schools' doors closed to them.

Mr. Speaker, this is absurd. While Government does have an obligation to prevent any kind of state-sponsored or mandatory religious activity in our schools, it does not have the right to discriminate against students who wish to meet to discuss religion instead of chess or politics.

Granting equal access does not mean placing religion in our schools, it simply means placing equity in our schools. We are not talking about teaching religion; we are talking about respecting religious rights. And we are not mandating policies for schools and communities; we are simply allowing them to use their own judgment without fearing ridiculous lawsuits.

Equal access will go a long way toward ending the official hostility that has come to dominate the Government's attitude toward the free and voluntary practice of religious beliefs. By merely stating that a school with a policy of allowing student-organized clubs to meet and use school facilities must grant the same privilege to student-organized religious clubs, this legislation will move us in the direction of Government neutrality toward religion—which the Founding Fathers intended, and away from the discrimination against religion that they so diligently worked to prevent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who voted against the original bill, but as I understand it almost every objection has been met in this bill that most of us had to the original bill and that there is really no longer similarity between this bill and the original bill.

For example, this bill forbids the cutoff of Federal funds to a school district or State as a penalty for a violation. The school will have complete control during school hours over their meetings and it is only after school hours they can either deny a group the right to meet, but, if they deny or grant a right to meet to any group of students, they must treat all the same, is that right?

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my support to the equal access bill. This legislation is strongly supported by a majority of the residents of the Seventh District of Georgia, just as it was supported by a majority of the Members of this House when it was considered earlier this year. Although it did not pass at that time, I voted for it then and I will vote for it again today. I hope that the House will accept what I believe to be the will of a majority of the American people and pass this bill.

It is unfortunate that a great deal of confusion and controversy has entered the debate over equal access legislation. I would like to remind my colleagues that this is a bipartisan bill with broad support from many important religious and nonreligious groups. Although the issue of equal access is a relatively simple and straightforward issue, it is based on important constitutional principles.

The issue is whether or not religious groups should have the same access to public school facilities that many secular groups have. Several Federal court rulings have given conflicting answers to this question and have caused a great deal of confusion for public school authorities over what their policies should be. As a result, many school districts are permitting the use of school facilities for nonreligious activities, but denying such use for religious activities. This is fundamentally unfair and may even be unconstitutional. While I am generally opposed to Federal intervention in local affairs, this problem was created by Federal court rulings, and I believe that action by Congress is necessary to clarify and correct the situation.

The purpose of the equal access bill is simply to end the discrimination against religious groups that has taken place in some areas and to give voluntary student-initiated groups the same right to use secondary school facilities for extracurricular meetings as other student-initiated groups. This legislation would allow voluntary meetings to be judged on an equal basis without discrimination.

The bill carefully and adequately maintains the separation of church and state by prohibiting any official sponsorship or involvement in student religious activity, and by prohibiting any outside groups from initiating, organizing, or controlling student religious meetings. It retains local school board control over school activities by allowing local officials to decide whether, when, and how all groups may use school facilities without a religious distinction.

Mr. Speaker, the first amendment to the Constitution says that:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech.

An eminent constitutional scholar, Prof. Lawrence Tribe, has said that:

> For public school authorities, or the local or state agencies responsible for public school policies and practices, to discriminate on the basis of the religious content of the speech at such meetings would constitute a violation of the right of free speech and free exercise of religion of the students involved.

I agree with Professor Tribe, and I support the equal access bill because it will restore, protect, and expand religious freedom and the right to free speech. It also ends discrimination, protects minority group rights, and ensures government neutrality by prohibiting the State from either promoting or prohibiting religious activity.

In his Farewell Address, President George Washington said that:

> Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.

I strongly agree with this statement, and while I do not think that Government should promote religious activity, the equal access bill does neither. It simply restores fairness and equality of treatment for all groups. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge my fellow Members of the House of Representatives to vote for this bill.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the equal access legislation we are considering today, and urge my colleagues to join me. The Senate has already approved this legislation, which is a substantial improvement over an earlier Equal Access Act debated in this Chamber. I did not support the earlier Equal Access Act. I support this amendment because I feel it addresses a problem that is very real to many Americans. Many local school boards and school administrators have misinterpreted the Supreme Court decisions handed down over the past 35 years with respect to religion in the public schools. The boundaries of activities that can and cannot take place on school grounds need to be defined more carefully so the constitutional rights of students can be protected properly. Instances have been reported in which students were prohibited from carrying Bibles, from praying in lunchrooms, and even from discussing religion while in a school parking lot. Such prohibitions clearly violate existing law. I hope that enactment of the equal access legislation we are considering here today will prevent such abuses in the future.

The earlier version of the Equal Access Act provided that school districts would lose Federal funds if they refused to give student-initiated religious groups the same right to meet during noninstructional periods as nonreligious student groups. I thought the loss of Federal funds was an unfair penalty. The amendment we are considering today explicitly prohibits the withholding of Federal funds as punishment for failing to allow equal access.

In addition, I could not support the earlier version of the Equal Access Act because I felt that its provisions contained tremendous potential for abuse. That bill did not require that student-initiated religious meetings be held before or after the schoolday. I believe that the Senate debate on this amendment makes it clear that religious meetings cannot take place side by side with other school activities where attendance would be compulsory. The earlier version of the Equal Access Act also did not make clear whether student groups would be allowed to bring in outside religious leaders and clergy to participate in and to lead the student religious meetings. The amendment before us addresses this problem by stating, "nonschool persons may not direct, conduct, control or regularly attend activities of student groups." This restriction should ensure that the meetings are truly voluntary and student initiated.

The amendment before us also contains several other improvements concerning areas that were not addressed in the earlier legislation. This legislation protects all student speech in secondary schools, not just religious speech. Students will be able to meet and discuss political and philosophical topics, as well as religious concerns. The proper separation of church and state is maintained by prohibiting school employees from promoting or taking part in the student meetings. Schools are given clear authority to ensure that attendance at the meetings will be voluntary, to maintain order and discipline on school premises, and to prevent unlawful meetings from taking place. Finally, this amendment protects the rights of small groups of students by providing that a school may not refuse to allow a meeting because a group does not contain a certain number of students.

This amendment will not be a cure-all for problems involving the equal access rights of secondary school students. But I am hopeful that it will clarify existing law in this area and eliminate the need for lawsuits to protect individual religious liberties. When this body debated the first version of the Equal Access Act, I stated that I would support legislation in this area that was carefully written and contains a fair penalty, and I am pleased that we have such a proposal before us today.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, this Nation was founded on the belief in a diety. In fact, the Declaration of Independence, which I have here, refers to "our Creator," "To nature's God" and to "the Supreme Judge of the World."

Now, how can anyone say that we are departing from the founding principles of our country by passing this amendment?

Furthermore, court decisions have said that all sorts of student groups are entitled to use public school premises for the free speech discussion of opposition to the war in Vietnam, of support for gay rights, and of support for Communists and the Ku Klux Klan activities.

□ 1210

All this legislation does is to say that students wishing to discuss religious belief among themselves are given the same right. This is no prayer bill.

But I would think that we would not want to relegate the rights of high school students attending a school below the rights of other people in that same building.

The U.S. Catholic Conference stated a few months ago in urging Congress to enact equal access legislation, "This support stems from the concerns of the Catholic Church for the moral and civil responsibility of all Americans."

Let me briefly describe the provisions of this amendment, quite different from the original bill. Before I do, I want to say if we have to go to Calendar Wednesday that we could go to midnight tonight. I say that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ACKERMAN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER]. If you notice the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for today, for dilatory tactics they put in about 500 amendments in the RECORD, and we would have to get back on it Wednesday a week and then the following Wednesday unless the House voted to cut the time off. That is the reason we are here today, to expedite this business.

The Senate bill that we have before us now protects not only religious speech but also all political, philosophical, and other free speech. There is no cutoff of funds for any violation. No outsider may conduct, control, or regularly attend meetings. No numerical limit may be placed on the membership of a student group. Local school authorities control the place, manner, and time of meeting so as not to endanger educational functions. And only meetings before and after instructional periods are fully protected.

I support this substitute, although it is not what I would have preferred, nor is it what the opponents would have preferred. However, it reflects the best results that we can get; that is, the give and take of the legislative process.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge its adoption.

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, once again I rise in support of the exercise of free speech as it relates to religion, particularly in our public schools. Over the last few weeks we have heard much speculation that the equal access measure erodes the separation of church and state. This is simply untrue.

The equal access bill is a carefully crafted piece of legislation that addresses seemingly conflicting constitutional guarantees in a straightforward and simple way. It maintains Government neutrality in religion while assuring that student religious groups have the same opportunity to express their beliefs as other voluntary student groups enjoy. It says that voluntary groups can meet in classrooms during off-hours.

It was my opinion when the House passed its original bill that it simply provided religious groups with the same opportunities available to other nonschool-sponsored, student-initiated groups and clubs. Our colleagues in the other body, have further spelled out that equal access applies to all types of voluntary student groups—political, philosophical, and other nonreligious groups. We see clearly that this is a free speech issue and not a backdoor approach to the establishment of religion.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the measure before us also allays fears that religious minorities could be discriminated against. The language specifically prohibits discrimination against small groups of students. It also maintains the local school's authority to keep order and discipline, thereby alleviating fears about outsiders' ability to take over meetings.

Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize again that we want to look at what this measure does and stop speculating about what is not there. We are making a decision about free speech. We are talking about access to classrooms and facilities by voluntary groups in nonclassroom hours. We are not looking at State-sponsored religion.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for the equal access amendments.●

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to support a true equal access bill—one that gives religious speech the same protection as other forms of speech, does not endanger the rights of minority religions, and assures that religious meetings are student led and only occur before and after school hours.

The equal access bill which came before the House in May would have been more appropriately called the unequal access bill. It would have provided special status to religious groups. The Constitution provides equal status for religion, but does not allow for the special protection this bill would have provided. The bill would have allowed school administrators to set minimum numbers for religious group activities. Outsiders could have entered our schools to lead regular prayer meetings during classroom hours. And the bill would have cut off Federal funds to entire school districts which denied access—even unintentionally—to one group. It was a bad bill.

I believe the bill before us today specifically addresses each of these concerns. However, I sympathize with those groups who still oppose this legislation. Many school administrators may be placed in the difficult position of deciding whether to allow all groups to meet, or simply to bar all student activities. And there may be cases of overzealous school administrators actively promoting or prohibiting one type of religion. But I believe these instances will be isolated and easily remedied.

It's important to remember why this bill is before us in the first place. Many school officials have concluded that they are prohibited from allowing religious groups to meet in school facilities. It is clear that the Constitution does not allow for this type of selective discrimination against religious speech—just as it does not allow for special protection of that speech.

The first amendment states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This legislation strikes the appropriate middle ground and guarantees religious groups the same right to meet as any other group.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House Education and Labor Committee I am pleased to join in support of the pending bill which would target new funds for math and science education in our Nation's schools.

As a cosponsor of the House bill, H.R. 1310, which was the first education bill approved by this body during last session, I am pleased that we have agreed to move forward with the Senate bill in order to assure the adoption of these programs this year.

In light of the national debate calling for an improved educational system, it is both fitting and necessary that we adopt this bill. The reports that have been issued over the past year, from "A Nation at Risk" by the National Commission on Excellence in Education, the report to the President from the business-higher education forum entitled "America's Competitive Challenge: A National Response" and the "Action for Excellence" report by the Task Force for Economic Growth have sent us a strong message. This bill before us is an appropriate—first step—response to that message.

The $425 million provided for in the first year of this bill is a small contribution to our efforts to provide our young people with the technological edge so that we can effectively compete in a world market. Our national security is at stake—at no time since Sputnik have we been challenged to respond in such a bold fashion.

In the field of engineering, for example, the Soviet Union has graduated five times the number of electronic engineers than we do each year. For every million of their citizens, the Soviets graduate 260 electronic engineers—while the United States graduates 67 and Japan graduates 163 per million by comparison. If for every 10,000 people in the United States, 70 are engineers, and Japan has almost 6 times that number, how can we ever hope to compete as a technologically advanced and industrial-based society?

The field of engineering is but one example of the problem. The private sector has secured a critical number of qualified individuals in a rapidly growing brain drain. Consider the fact that only 55 percent of the graduates prepared to teach math actually enter the teaching profession. What we should be most fearful of is the fact that we could end up with a net loss of 35 percent of the number of qualified math and science teachers by the year 1992.

This bill addresses many of these concerns and should be viewed as a first step toward attacking the problem. Clearly the more generous funding levels in H.R. 1310 would be a more complete response to this problem. In this instance, it is not merely a question of throwing money at a problem as some might believe. A major, national training and retraining effort in the areas of math and science to improve the quality of education in this country will cost money. Let us be clear about that fact. The $750 million in H.R. 1310 is a more realistic response to the need but I believe that $450 million in the bill before us is a good starting point.

I am particularly supportive of the higher education programs which will reward the best of our schools and their teacher training programs. Under title II, 30 percent of the State funds would go to the State agency for higher education and 75 percent would be distributed as competitive grants to colleges and universities for math/science trainee programs. Twenty percent of these programs will be on a cooperative basis among industry, schools, universities and libraries. In addition to the higher education portion, the bulk of funding under this bill, $315 million in fiscal year 1984, will be targeted to States through formula grants based on the number of school-age children.

This bill also gives special consideration to special populations, including women and minorities, who have been traditionally underrepresented in the math and science fields. This will assure that math, science and engineering job opportunities remain accessible to those who have had difficulties in securing such access in the past.

Finally, I am glad that there is a requirement for improved coordination of these programs with the National Science Foundation. We should encourage other agencies and organizations to work closely with the NSF to assure the most appropriate and comprehensive programs and policies are adopted.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, while I regret that H.R. 1310 is not receiving full and fair consideration under this process, I nonetheless laud this legislation and urge our colleagues to join with us in support of this historic and bold initiative. We cannot afford to short-change the educational futures of our children today—for such shortsightedness will surely render tomorrow's problems.●

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today we have another opportunity to provide access to school facilities for voluntary religious student groups on the same basis as they are made available to other noncurricular groups.

Although I voted in favor, I expressed reservations about the equal access legislation which came before this body in May. This new Senate legislation is a great improvement, particularly with respect to the penalty provisions. In addition, it places more of the decisionmaking responsibility in the hands of local communities and local officials. In my judgment, that is the appropriate place to make such decisions.

In this bill we are upholding the authority of local officials and educators to maintain order and discipline as well as to protect the well-being of students and faculty. We do not order schools to support or even to allow any particular religious meetings. We simply state that voluntary student religious groups are to be treated in the same manner as other voluntary groups which are allowed to meet in the same facilities.

Schools are public buildings which are built and maintained by taxpayers' dollars. Those same taxpayers, or in this case their children, should have the right to use these buildings in reasonable circumstances for reasonable purposes as determined by local authority.

I supported equal access in May. I will vote for this bill more enthusiastically. It is based on the same concept of equality as it predecessor, the Bonker bill, but it provides more safeguards, better enforcement, and more local decisionmaking.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, the equal access provision before us today represents a vast improvement over the measure considered by the House last May. Like many of my colleagues, I had several grave reservations about the earlier bill which were not addressed either in committee or on the floor of the House. First of all, it would have permitted outside individuals to address or run student religious groups during noninstructional periods during the schoolday. Second, if a school were to deny the use of buildings for such a group, its Federal funding would have been terminated. This, I felt, was too severe a remedy. And finally, the bill provided no access to the courts for students who wished to challenge the decision of school personnel. These items raised grave concerns in my mind about the legislation, leading me to vote against it. As we are all aware, that measure fell 11 votes short of passage in the House.

Today we are considering a new equal access bill which the Senate added to their version of the math-science education bill. After reviewing the changes made by the Senate, I feel that my original reservations have been met, and I will now be able to support the bill. The sanction of fund termination has been removed; student-initiated meetings can now take place only before and after school hours; and restrictions have been placed on the participation and attendance of outside individuals in these student meetings. In addition, the bill provides judicial review for students who have grievances. And finally, the measure before us today extends the principle of equal access to all student groups, including those with religious, political, or philosophical content. This is legislation that I can now support, and I would urge my colleagues who share my previous reservations to vote in favor of this bill.●

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, once again I am afraid that I must rise in opposition to the passage of an equal access bill.

There is no question that the legislation that is before us today is a substantial improvement over the version that we considered back in May. It does not focus exclusively on religious organizations but tries to ensure that other types of student groups have access to school facilities, as well. It does not contain the harsh funding cutoff that was of such concern in H.R. 5345. I believe that the sponsors of this legislation are sincere in their efforts to protect student's rights to assemble and to freely discuss whatever is on their minds. I would like to be able to support them in that effort.

I regret to say, however, that I cannot. Even with this new legislation, there are still too many points that trouble me. For one thing, I still have doubts about the constitutionality of legislation that permits organized religious groups in a publicly owned building. Even if such legislation were ultimately found to be constitutional, I would still be deeply concerned at the precedent that this bill would set. It is my firm belief that we must maintain a strict and absolute separation between church and state and that our Founding Fathers, who knew all too well what happens when the Government becomes involved in religious matters, intended such an absolute separation when they wrote the first amendment to the Constitution. To allow religious organizations to meet on school grounds would be the first small breach in the wall of separation that our Founding Fathers established.

I sympathize with students who wish to get together and discuss their religious beliefs. But it is neither wise nor necessary for this to occur on the grounds of a public school. They can gather before or after school in each others' homes, at their church or synagogue, or in any one of the many places outside the school grounds that young people gather. These places are far more appropriate for religious discussion, especially organized discussion, than facilities that are paid for by taxpayers of widely varying religious beliefs.

I also remain troubled by the burden that this legislation places on local school officials. Indeed, it is somewhat ironic that many of the same people who oppose Federal involvement in education and cry for local control are now asking that the Federal Government be authorized to interfere with local school officials' decisions on the use of their facilities. These decisions, which were once based on their own best judgment, must now be made with an eye toward avoiding trouble with the feds. School systems will have to divert already scarce resources toward evaluating student groups in light of the Federal requirements and providing the monitoring of student religious groups that is required under this bill. If we were to place such a heavy Federal hand on school systems' selection of textbooks or hiring of teachers, these parents would be raising the roof. Why is this type of interference any more acceptable?

In short, public schools are a place for education. The place for religious training and discussion is in the family and at church. The Federal Government should not be in the position of requiring public school systems to play a role that they do not want and were never intended to assume. I do not want to place that responsibility on these school systems, and I therefore must oppose this bill.●

● Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, Congressman PAUL SIMON, is one of the most outstanding Members we have in the House of Representatives. He always attempts to thoroughly analyze legislation and reach an intellectually sound position before he votes.

Therefore, I am very pleased that Mr. SIMON has decided after long and careful analysis to support the amendment we are voting on today, the Senate-passed equal access amendment. For the information of the Members, I would like to insert in the RECORD Mr. SIMON's thoughtful comments on this bill and his reasons for supporting it:

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR, SUBCOMMITTEE ON POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 25, 1984.

Hon. CARL D. PERKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, Washington, DC.

DEAR CARL: I understand that "equal access" legislation, as passed as part of the Senate Math-Science bill (S. 1285) may be considered by the House on Wednesday. Because I will not be present on Wednesday, I am writing to convey my strong support of the Hatfield Amendment, as incorporated in the Senate version of the Math-Science bill.

Although I was an early co-sponsor of H.R. 4996, I offered an amendment in the Education and Labor Committee to H.R. 5345, a clean bill incorporating improvements made by your Subcommittee. During Committee debate on H.R. 5345, I offered an amendment, which I firmly believe would have placed a proper prospective on the whole "access" question and avoided the constitutional questions raised by the bill as it was reported by the Committee. As a co-sponsor of H.R. 4996, I share the view of several of my Colleagues in the House, that if a school board permits its facilities to be used by one religious group for a meeting or for meeting purposes after school hours or by student groups for meeting purposes during school—that the facilities must be made available to all (on a presumably first come, first served basis). I strongly disagree that providing access for the Spanish Club or the Girl Scouts requires the school board to also provide access to school facilities for student religious groups.

What is the basis for the difference? The Constitution makes no provision affecting the status of nonprofit groups or civic associations as it does with respect to religion. The First Amendment question, in regard to "equal access" legislation, becomes increasingly difficult if school facilities are to be used during school hours for religious purposes. I do not believe that the Congress, because of constitutional provisions providing for separation of church and State, should force school boards to permit religious meetings in their schools or to choose between religious groups who wish to meet in their schools. My amendment to H.R. 5345 would have allowed Federal funding to continue to go to school districts that have policies in which no religious schools were allowed to meet, but would have required that any school district that allowed one religious group to meet could not refuse to allow all other religious groups to meet in the school.

I was even more concerned, however, by the potential for Federal intrusion contained in the Committee's bill. Decisions concerning the use of local buildings should be left to the school administrators and board of education. Using termination of Federal funding as a lever to force local authorities to decide who should use local school buildings is improper. The threat of fund termination is used, almost exclusively, in the enforcement of civil rights laws and then very rarely. H.R. 5345 proposed to condition receipt of Federal financial assistance on compliance with Washington's notion of "access". What H.R. 5345 did was to give the Federal Government control over the school buildings themselves. I believe that decision concerning who uses school buildings should be left to those closest to the situation, unless they grant access to one religious group and deny it to another. My amendment would simply have ensured access by all religious groups, if permission was granted to any one religious group.

My principal concerns with the Committee reported bill are resolved in the Equal Access provisions contained in S. 1285. My concerns have been resolved by:

Substantially reducing the constitutional question by modifying the requirement that a school district or principal's decision to provide meeting space for any student group, forced the principal or district to accord the same privilege to all, by requiring that "equal access" only be made available if noncurriculum student groups are permitted to meet on school premises during noninstuctional time.

Eliminating the Federal interference by including language which prohibits the withholding of Federal funds, if a local school district or principal fails to comply with this law, by the Federal Government.

This bill is not perfect. It is still open to constitutional question and will require school officials to decide whether to exclude all non-instructional groups. It is by far a better bill than H.R. 5345, which was defeated in the House on May 15, 1984.

I support the Hatfield "equal access" amendment.

Cordially,

PAUL SIMON,
Chairman.●

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] that the House suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310, and to concur in title VIII of the Senate amendment to H.R 1310.

The question was taken.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 337, nays 77, not voting 19, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Biaggi and Mr. Gramm for, with Mr. Waxman against.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from further consideration of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310, and title VIII of the Senate amendment to the bill was concurred in.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TITLES I THROUGH VII OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1310, EMERGENCY MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE EDUCATION AND JOBS ACT

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the resolution previously adopted, I have a motion at the desk which I offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PERKINS moves to suspend the rules and to concur in titles I through VII of the Senate amendment to the bill (H.R. 1310) to provide assistance to improve elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education in mathematics and science; to provide a national policy for engineering, technical, and scientific personnel; to provide cost sharing by the private sector in training such personnel; to encourage creation of new engineering, technical, and scientific jobs; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us, the math and science education bill, H.R. 1310, as passed by the Senate, is very similar to the House passed version of the bill.

The legislation would improve mathematics and science education at the elementary, secondary and postsecondary levels. Both bills include the following features—the Members will hear from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] in a few moments—an authorization of $425 million for the first year, a program of formula grants to school districts to improve teacher training and other areas of need in math and science for elementary and secondary students, a program administered by the National Science Foundation to support scientific, mathematical and engineering education, higher education programs including scholarships to encourage students to become math and science teachers and training institutes to upgrade the skills of those who are already teaching.

All of the evidence before the House and the Senate hearings has indicated a dire need for strengthening instruction and increasing the number of teachers in these vital areas. We waited over a year for the Senate to pass this legislation. We cannot afford to wait any longer to make these grants available to the school districts and institutions that will help us meet the demand of the technological age.

Although these bills contain some minor differences, for all practical purposes, they are the same.

Let me discuss the Senate bill in more detail.

Most of the funding, $350 million, would be used for formula grants to local educational agencies to improve instruction and teacher training in their school districts and for grants to higher education institutions to improve teacher training in this area.

Another title of the bill sets up a program administered by the National Science Foundation for partnerships between local educational agencies and other public and private agencies to improve instruction in mathematics, science, and computer science and engineering. This legislation also authorizes scholarships to college students who will make a commitment to teach mathematics and science and for summer institutions to improve the skills of persons who are already teachers.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] for his cooperation in developing this legislation. As chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, he contributed valuable expertise and worked well with our committee.

I would also like to highlight some of the other titles in this bill.

In addition to the equal access provision, the bill authorizes $75 million for each of the fiscal years, 1984, 1985, and 1986 for grants to local educational agencies to establish and operate magnet schools to help implement desegregation plans. The bill establishes a program within the Environmental Protection Agency for grants to States for abatement of hazardous asbestos materials in schools. For this purpose $50 million is authorized for fiscal years 1984 and 1985 and $100 million for each of the following 5 years.

I believe that it will be beneficial to have the EPA involved in this activity, since they have the technical expertise to abate health hazards and since they have already issued regulatory guidance and requirements on this subject.

Finally, the Senate bill contains a small authorization of $16 million for each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985 for grants to schools which demonstrate successful techniques for improving educational quality.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage in a colloquy.

I would just like to clarify one point in the section of H.R. 1310, as amended by the Senate, relating to magnet schools. The bill contains three conditions for eligibility for this magnet schools assistance. Is it your understanding that a school district can meet any one of these conditions, but need not meet all three, in order to be eligible?

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct, I wish to say to the gentleman.

Mr. KILDEE. One other question on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] and myself.

Another question on the magnet schools portion of H.R. 1310 as amended by the Senate. Section 702(3) makes voluntary desegregation plans in school systems which have adopted or are implementing a desegregation plan without having been required to do so eligible for funds. Is it your understanding that the term "voluntary plan" can mean plans that were not necessarily initiated by the courts and could include such voluntary plans as exist in the cities of Flint, MI; Rochester, NY; Seattle WA; and Philadelphia, PA; but that are otherwise meeting guidelines established under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KILDEE. One further question on behalf of myself, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] relating to the magnet schools portion of H.R. 1310 as amended by the Senate. Section 702(1) of the bill states that a school system would be eligible for funds if it had lost at least $1 million following the repeal of the old Emergency School Aid Act. Is it your understanding, Mr. Chairman, that this $1 million loss applies to the total funding received by a school system under all chapter 2 antecedent categorical programs in the year immediately preceding the implementation of chapter 2 when compared to total funding received in the first year of chapter 2?

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct, likewise.

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman whether section 709 of the Senate bill prohibits school districts from using their magnet schools assistance under title VII for courses the subject of which is secular humanism. First of all, I want to know what that means. I thought I understood English. I might have an accent, but I do not know what secular humanism means.

□ 1240

Mr. PERKINS. Well, let me state that since there is no definition of secular humanism, the Department of Education is not authorized to promulgate any definition of this term. And, furthermore, since the Secretary is not authorized to define this term, a determination of which courses are or are not secular humanism shall be left purely up to the judgment of the local educational agencies. That is the essence of it.

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the terminology. I do not know why we need it in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The local educational agencies will make that determination.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for the purpose of a question on this subject?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I am not sure what is meant by the term "secular humanism," but if this bill is intended to start regulating the content of teachers' subject matter in such vague terms, it seems to me that it is a real invasion of academic freedom, and I am equally concerned with the gentlewoman from California. Can the gentleman give us further assurances as to what the effect of this provision is?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, let me say to the gentleman, as I understand it, that there is no intent to bring into play any Federal interference, that teachers and the local boards will make the decision exclusively of everybody else. So I see no harm here.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Could I just ask one other question of the distinguished chairman?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has again expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 additional seconds.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield further, is the theory of evolution and natural selection secular humanism, as the gentleman understands it?

Mr. PERKINS. That decision is to be made locally, I will say to the gentleman, by your local boards and your teachers.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation as proposed. As the ranking minority member on the Science and Technology Committee which has the responsibility for this math-science education bill, I think it is appropriate that we move it at this time. This bill addresses what we have all recognized here in the House to be a critical problem, and that is that we have an abysmal situation occurring in our math and science education, especially at the elementary and secondary school level. We are finding that we are short of qualified teachers, that those qualified teachers which we do have are difficult to retain because of the competition from the private sector and that we do not have adequate materials and adequate instrumentation in order to teach math and science at the elementary and secondary school level.

The role of the National Science Foundation under this bill has been significantly increased, and I think it can be an effective tool in addressing the need to educate our children in math and science. There are a number of programs under this bill which are really excellent in concept and which I hope will be promoted aggressively. We have a program which would allow teachers to go to summer institutions and be retrained by the National Science Foundation. We have a program which would encourage people to go into the teaching profession. We now find, unfortunately, that people going into the teaching profession are sometimes not at the top of their class. This program would encourage people to go into the teaching program and would retain and attract extremely qualified teachers.

We have a program in here which would identify the top students and the top teachers throughout the country and would reward them on the basis of the quality and the expertise of their experience and their educational activities.

This is an excellent bill. The issue of secular humanism is really a red herring in this bill. It is a minor line item in the bill which will not affect the vast amount of money which would be appropriated and spent under this bill and which has been approved by the Senate.

In fact, this bill would significantly reduce the strings which this Congress applies to educational activity, as the majority of the funds under the bill are block granted for the specific purpose of math-science education but the actual decision as to how the math-science education will be promoted is left at the local and the State school board level.

So it is a positive bill and it is the type of bill which those of us who have been talking about we need to do something in the area of math and science education should be willing to support.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA].

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker I rise in support of the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, my good friend Mr. PERKINS, to suspend the rules and discharge the committee from further consideration of H.R. 1310 and to agree with a Senate amendment.

The Committee on Science and Technology joins with the Committee on Education and Labor in supporting this bill, H.R. 1310, proposing a broad and comprehensive bill to deal with what has been termed a crisis in science and math education.

Back when we considered this bill on the floor of this House, on March 2, 1983, one of the first pieces of major legislation passed in this Congress, we stated at that time that this bill was comprehensive in nature, it was not seen by either of our committees as a solution to all of the problems confronting our education system in science and math and engineering and technology. Rather it should be viewed as a first step, although a very, very important one, Mr. Speaker, in a series of steps to be taken collectively by the Federal Government with State government and with academia and business and other elements of concern in the private sector.

A true resolution of the problem will require a protracted effort on everyone's part to reverse the present trends in our education system and to meet our human resource needs of tomorrow.

I have provided a brief summary and discussion of several key provisions of the bill that particularly pertain to the Committee on Science and Technology, and that is the Congressional Merit Scholarship Program, which will be a program administered by the National Science Foundation for students with outstanding potential in math, science and engineering, and it would be for around $5,000 per academic year, one that has already begun to be instituted this summer. I have had the privilege of visiting some of these, the teacher institutes, where we bring teachers back in for workshops in institutions of higher education, for workshops in science and math and in other critical foreign languages. This is a very important program that is contained in this bill and one that I think adds considerable merit to it.

Furthermore, the mathematics and science education development program is one to develop and disseminate material for training in math and science and computer learning and research and developing and disseminating elementary and secondary math, science and computer learning course material, a very, very important thing in the period of time in this century that we live in.

There is also an NSF program for partnerships in education for mathematics, science and engineering. This is a national policy, Mr. Speaker, for technical engineering and scientific personnel training for job creation, a very, very important facet of this.

I urge the adoption of this. I want to commend to members of our committee, particularly my friend from New Hampshire, Mr. GREGG, who has worked very hard in our committee and on the floor to bring this about, and my colleague from Kentucky, the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, and my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING, for all of the work that they have done, and the staff, in bringing this about. I think it is a milestone in what we are doing.

As I said, it is only a step in the right direction. We have many other steps down the road. But this is a step in the right direction, and I hope in the beginning of the next Congress that we can start addressing a more long-term solution to some of these very difficult problems that we have.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUQUA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN], the chairman of the subcommittee and also a very distinguished supporter of this bill.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add my support to the remarks of the gentleman from Florida, and also urge passage of this bill.

I think it is important to note that the Senate is in complete agreement with the levels of funding that this House, passed over a year ago. The administration, as usual, has been way behind on this issue, orginally proposing something in the range of $50 million, compared to the $500 million effort called for in this bill. Clearly the crisis that we face in education merits that kind of effort on our part.

We ought to underscore the partnerships for education in math and science and engineering provided in this bill. This is an area which was of particular interest to the gentleman from Florida and the House Science and Technology Committee. These partnerships show the advantage of being extremely flexible, able to take different forms in different circumstances to best adapt to the variety of strengths on the local level.

This bill also increased funding for scholarships and the teacher institutes, the best ideas that we have yet developed to improve present education.

I regret that the Senate bill does not include a provision similar to the one I added to the House bill to provide matching grants to community colleges for model technician training programs. Economist Pat Choate projected future jobs needs this way:

The speed and force of change will be awesome. Consequently, millions of jobs and workers will become obsolete. * * * In this decade virtually all of the Nation's workers will need to be retrained or have their skills sharpened.

Community colleges are in an excellent position to be this training ground. Though the Senate did not agree with a community college initiative, I intend to continue to press for it. Community colleges have strong ties to local labor markets and are probably the largest source of advanced training outside of industry. My amendment would have helped community colleges establish model instructional programs, improve faculty development, and upgrade equipment and instrumentation for technician training.

I am also surprised that the Senate did not include some requirement of redeployment of student grants when an individual takes Government training in education and then fails to contribute their skills to improve our educational system, but rather uses their education for some other private pursuit. Although most who will take tax money for teacher training will stay in teaching, a number will not. Without a repayment requirement, I am apprehensive that individual abuse of this program could undermine essential future public support.

But there are details. We should accept this bill today.

I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. FUQUA. I want to say again, Mr. Speaker, that I was looking the other way and I should have been looking around for my friend from Pennsylvania because I cannot in any way take away from the outstanding work that he did as chairman of the subcommittee within the Science and Technology Committee, that did all the hearings and brought this bill to where it was in our committee, and I want to commend the gentleman for all the work that he did. Overlooking him was certainly not intentional and it was an oversight on my part and I apologize.

The material referred to follows:

CONGRESSIONAL MERIT SCHOLARSHIPS

The House bill authorizes a program of National Teaching Incentive Scholarships administered by the Secretary of Education and to be awarded to up to 5,000 persons for FY 1984 and 10,000 persons for FY 1985. Scholarships may not exceed the tuition and fees for two academic years and require proof of satisfactory achievement. The Senate amendment authorizes a 4-year Congressional Merit Scholarships program administered by the National Science Foundation for higher education students with outstanding potential for teaching in math, science and engineering. Each scholarship is to be $5,000 per academic year and awarded only when the student is maintaining satisfactory progress on a full-time basis.

Discussion: The major difference is in the lead agency designated to administer the program. The Senate amendment makes no provision for foreign languages, but calls for some formulated geographical distribution and engineering scholarships for "post secondary" teaching.

TEACHER INSTITUTES

The House bill provides that the Secretary of Education and the Director of the National Science Foundation are to make grants to higher education institutions for summer teacher institutes and workshops in math, science, and critical foreign languages. Under section 107 of the House bill $20,000,000 a year for FY 1984 and FY 1985 is authorized for these activities by the Secretary; and one-half of the National Science Foundation's annual authorization (set at $30,000,000; section 107(b)(1) a year for FY 1984 through FY 1988 is authorized for these activities by the Director. The Senate amendment authorizes the National Science Foundation to fund joint applications from State and local educational agencies and higher education institutions for teacher training institutes in math, physical and life sciences. The Senate amendment authorizes $20,000,000 a year for FY 1984 and FY 1985 (section 164).

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, requires an equitable distribution of teacher training institutes among and within States, with at least 1 per State if any proposals meeting requirements are filed from such State.

The Senate amendment limits a single grant to not more than $200,000 in any fiscal year. No comparable House provision.

Discussion: In the Senate amendment all grants made by the National Science Foundation require the institutions of higher education to apply jointly together with local educational agencies and requires full continuing consultations with State educational agencies. Since each state is authorized at least one institute, fifty institutes at $200,000 per will account for one-half of the annual authorization. The sharing of responsibility between the Department of Education and the National Science Foundation contained in the House bill was changed by placing all responsibility in the NSF.

MATHEMATICS AND SICENCE EDUCATION DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, authorizes the National Science Foundation to assist higher education institutions or local educational agencies in developing and disseminating material for teacher training in math, science and computer learning; and in researching; developing and disseminating elementary and secondary math, science and computer learning course materials.

Discussion: The House bill provides for research to be conducted by NSF and NIE whereas dissemination of the results are basically left to the formula grant programs in ED. The Senate amendment states specifically that the Foundation will enter into agreements with institutions of higher education or local educational agencies for developing and disseminating programs and materials for teacher in-service training, as well as instructional materials for students.

NSF PROGRAMS FOR PARTNERSHIPS IN EDUCATION FOR MATHEMATICS, SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment propose new National Science Foundation programs to support scientific, mathematical and engineering education. The House bill proposes a national policy for technical, engineering and scientific personnel training and job creation. The Senate amendment focuses on support for partnerships among businesses, higher education institutions, and elementary and secondary schools.

The Senate amendment, but not the House bill, includes detailed requirements for grant applications.

Discussion: The basic concept of the House initiative for a special matching fund to maintain an adequate supply of properly trained technical, scientific, and engineering personnel is retained. The traditional role of NSF working directly with the applicant is changed by the Senate amendment so that State and local educational agencies are involved. However, there is considerable flexibility in what constitutes the partnership. Also, more flexibility is retained for the overall program since the House passed floors for specific areas of concern were not included. One major advantage of the Senate language is the awarding of scholarships to students of higher education in the fields of mathematics, science, computer science, and engineering. All of this is based on 50% cost-sharing. The Senate has eliminated the House concept for recruitment and retention of new engineering faculty which the Science and Technology Committee believes to be a very important initiative.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. I guess the first statement I should make is to make sure that all of my colleagues understand these two pieces of legislation are tied together; equal access and math and science. We need a two-thirds vote on math and science in order to uphold what we just recently approved in relationship to equal access.

In this math and science bill as it comes back to us from the Senate, the amount of money has been increased, but the amount of money for the math and science program is approximately the same as it was when it left the House. The increases came as a result of the things that were added by the other body. One of which I am a cosponsor which is excellence in education. Another addition to this on the Senate side was the Hatch Magnet School amendment and another important one is the Asbestos Abatement Program.

We have kicked this around for a long time; it was we in the Congress of the United States that got all of the people all over the country upset and excited about asbestos. The only thing is we did not send them any money to do anything about it. We just got them into a lot of trouble. There are a lot of poor school districts out there who, as a matter of fact, cannot do anything about their asbestos problem because they do not have any money to do anything about it.

So the Senate has included the asbestos legislation in this particular package. Those three issues, it seems to me, are the issues that have increased the spending beyond where it was when it left the House. Basically, the math and science bill focuses on teacher retraining, on upgrading, on scholarships for promising students, on creative arrangements with the private sector, the schools, and the post-secondary institutions, and on summer institutes and inservice training.

So I would suggest to my colleagues that we have a bill that all should be able to vote for and I would encourage them to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to commend the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. PERKINS, and the ranking member, Mr. GOODLING, for the work they have done, and certainly for the chairman of the Science and Technology Committee, of which I am a member, Mr. FUQUA, for the excellent leadership that he was provided on this issue. I think also there should be a warm recognition for Mr. SIMON, who worked very vigorously to include language skills in this bill, which I think has become a very vital portion of it.

I rise in support of this motion, as one who has worked on math and science legislation for the past 4 years. I am glad that today we finally have the opportunity to send this much-needed measure directly to the President. The House passed H.R. 1310 with strong bipartisan support in March of last year. Now the Senate has finally broken the deadlock that delayed this legislation for nearly 1½ years.

I am disappointed in some of the Senate provisions that have been added, but believe that this bill is the best that we can hope for at this time, and it is absolutely essential that we pass it.

During committee deliberations, we heard from literally hundreds of experts who stated the great need for improved instruction in science, math, and foreign languages. This initiative will go a long way toward attracting new teachers and upgrading skills of those now instructing our children.

Our educational system is the key to maintaining scientific and economic leadership in the world. It is our hope, and our best hope, for a secure and prosperous future. Time is short in this, the 98th Congress, to deal with important issues, and I urge support for this legislation.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in strong support of H.R. 1310. I am a cosponsor of this legislation which is a combination of two bills—the Emergency Mathematics and Science Education Act and the National Engineering and Science Personnel Act. I was originally a cosponsor of each of these vital bills also. This hearing today is an important step in securing a speedy enactment of this important legislation.

The global economy of the 1980's will be one of high technology in homes, schools, businesses, and Government services. Today, the United States is a world technological leader primarily as the result of our national resource of skilled scientists, technologists, engineers, and technicians. This leadership is essential for our economic and national security.

U.S. technological supremacy has eroded as other industrial countries have developed and implemented programs for expanding their technological capability. Our technological edge is threatened by a shortage of skilled engineers and scientists and, even more seriously, by the lack of general scientific and mathematical literacy necessary for the majority of citizens who provide the technical and consumer support of our economy. Technological literacy is also becoming increasingly important for full participation in our society and for individual personal development.

Our future national economic and social well-being is written by our schools and their ability to prepare youth for effective participation in a technological, information society. There is increasing evidence that the mathematical and scientific literacy of our youth and adults is being neglected.

If we are to respond effectively it is essential that we:

Establish the improvement of education and mathematical and scientific literacy as a priority for action;

Increase and improve the pool of qualified teachers of mathematics and science who can adequately prepare our youth for the emerging technological society;

Restructure and revise the mathematics and science curriculum to prepare the nonspecialist as well as the specialist and to modify the sequencing of curriculum to match the stages of intellectual development and ability;

Increase the amount of time students spend on academic studies and increase the availability of scientific equipment and facilities; and

Develop comprehensive programs that can further general computer literacy, including computer applications that will lead to increased mathematical and scientific literacy.

This legislation is an important first step in addressing our current crisis. Our leadership in technology for the world is at stake. We cannot afford to wait any longer.

I commend Mr. PERKINS, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. GOODLING from the Education and Labor Committee and my chairman, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. WALGREN, and Mr. MCCURDY for their insight in bringing this legislation before us in such a timely manner. I urge its passage as soon as possible.

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that H.R. 1310, the math and science education bill, has returned to this floor for our consideration. And I am pleased to rise in support of this important measure.

Mr. Speaker, this initiative to strengthen mathematics and science education in this country is long overdue. Deficiencies in math and science curricula and equipment have seriously injured the morale of this country's teachers and the capabilities of our students. The National Science Foundation [NSF] has reported that math and science teachers have had serious difficulty in obtaining information concerning new instructional materials, thereby hampering the Nation's efforts to improve curriculum. Additionally, the National Association of Secondary School Principals has reported that only 45 percent of all secondary schools possess some sort of science equipment. These are disturbing facts demonstrating serious, widespread problems in our country's ability to educate our children.

Fortunately, H.R. 1310 defines immediate Federal, State, and local roles for improving math and science education and teacher preparation. The bill provides incentives to encourage future generations of teachers to enter these fields, and to help improve the skills of current teachers. Additionally, the problems of student preparation and achievement are addressed by authorizing educational agencies and institutions to develop methods to improve, strengthen, expand, and modernize math and science education.

Moreover, H.R. 1310 addresses the serious problems of underrepresentation of women and minorities in these disciplines by requiring grant recipients to take concrete action to ensure equal educational opportunity. I strongly support this provision and salute the committee's continued efforts to improve opportunities for all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, in considering the bill before us today, however, I am concerned over one amendment added by the other body to provide funding for magnet schools which are part of an approved desegregation plan. My reservations about supporting this amendment stem from its heavy bias toward the larger school districts, while appearing to shun the smaller but equally needy districts. I understand from the colloquy on this debate, however, that the eligibility criteria set forth in the amendment do not preclude those smaller desegregating districts, and therefore I withdraw my reservations. Further I would hope that, this being the case, the Secretary will give close consideration to the needs of those smaller districts when considering awards under this program.●

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] that the House suspend the rules and concur in titles 1 through 7 of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 393, nays 15, not voting 25, as follows:

□ 1310

Mr. CONYERS changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) titles I through VII of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310 were concurred in.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRISON). Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 554, the entire Senate amendment to H.R. 1310 is considered as having been agreed to.

The text of the Senate amendment to H.R. 1310 is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Education for Economic Security Act".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this Act to improve the quality of mathematics and science teaching and instruction in the United States.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purpose of this Act—

(1) The term "area vocational education school" has the same meaning given that term under section 195(2) of the Vocational Education Act of 1965.

(2) The term "Director" means the Director of the National Science Foundation.

(3) The term "elementary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(4) The term "Governor" means the chief executive of a State.

(5) The term "Foundation" means the National Science Foundation.

(6) The term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given that term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

(7) The term "local educational agency" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(8) The term "secondary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(9) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(10) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

(11) The term "State agency for higher education" means the State board of higher education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of higher education, or, if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated for the purpose of this title by the Governor or by State law.

(12) The term "State educational agency" has the meaning given that term under section 198(a)(17) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

TITLE I—NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE PROGRAMS

PART A—TEACHER INSTITUTES

GRANTS FOR TEACHER INSTITUTES AUTHORIZED

SEC. 101. The Foundation is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this part, to make grants to State and local educational agencies and institutions of higher education, applying jointly, for the establishment and operation of teacher institutes for the enhancement of the subject matter skills of public and private elementary and secondary school teachers of mathematics and physical and life sciences.

APPLICATIONS

SEC. 102. (a) Each local educational agency and institution of higher education, and each State educational agency and institution of higher education desiring to receive a grant under this part shall submit a joint application at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Director may require. One or more local educational agencies may apply jointly with one or more institutions of higher education under the provisions of this section. A State educational agency may apply jointly with one or more institutions of higher education.

(b) Each such application shall—

(1) describe the establishment and operation of a teacher institute for elementary and secondary school teachers of mathematics and physical and life sciences, including—

(A) the designation of the institute as a full-time summer or part-time school year, or both;

(B) a description of the courses of study to be offered at the institute;

(C) an estimate of the number of teachers, including the number of teachers from private elementary and secondary schools, to attend the institute and describe the selection procedures;

(D) the nature and location of existing facilities to be used in the operation of the institute;

(E) the teaching and administrative staff for the institute;

(F) the academic credits, if any, to be awarded for the completion of the courses of study to be offered at the institute; and

(G) a schedule of stipends to be paid teacher participants in the institute, including (i) allowances for subsistence and other expenses for teachers attending the institute and their dependents and (ii) provisions assuring that there will be no duplication of Federal benefits paid to participants;

(2) provide assurances that the design and operation of the institute will involve the participation of both the subject matter departments or divisions of each institution of higher education making application as well as the teacher education department or division, if any, of each such institution;

(3) provide for prior and continuing consultation with the State educational agency in the formulation and operation of the institute; and

(4) provide such additional assurances as the Director deems essential to assure compliance with the requirements of this part.

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

SEC. 113. (a) In approving applications under this part, the Director shall assure that there is an equitable distribution of institutes established and operated under approved applications among States and within States. The Director shall award not less than one institute in each State, except that the Director may waive the requirements of this sentence if there is no proposal from a State that meets the requirements of this part.

(b) No grant to a single applicant may exceed $200,000 in any fiscal year.

COOPERATION WITH BUSINESS CONCERNS

SEC. 114. Institutes assisted under this part may, to the extent possible, involve the cooperation of advanced technology business concerns and other business concerns which are able to supply assistance in the teaching of mathematics and science.

SPECIAL CONSIDERATION OF UNDERREPRESENTED AND UNDERSERVED POPULATIONS

SEC. 115. In providing financial assistance under this part the Foundation shall make every effort to ensure that consideration is given to applications which contain provisions designed to meet the needs of underrepresented and underserved populations.

PART B—MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE EDUCATION DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 121. The Foundation is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this part, to enter into agreements with institutions of higher education or local educational agencies for—

(1) developing and disseminating programs and materials for training, retraining, and inservice training for elementary and secondary school teachers in the fields of mathematics, science, including physical and life sciences, computer learning; and

(2) the research, development, and dissemination of instructional programs and materials for courses of study in elementary and secondary schools in the fields of mathematics, science, including physical and life sciences, and computer learning.

APPLICATIONS

SEC. 122. (a) No grant may be made under this part unless an eligible applicant, at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Director may reasonably require. Each application shall contain assurances—

(1) that (A) in the case of an institution of higher education, the institution will enter into a cooperative agreement with one or more local educational agencies, (B) in the case of a State or local educational agency, the agency will enter into a cooperative agreement with one or more institutions of higher education in the case of a profession of a society or association described in subsection (b)(3) the association or society will enter into a cooperative agreement with one or more local educational agencies and one or more institutions of higher education, for the purpose of furnishing the activities authorized by this part;

(2) that the planning and implementation of the cooperative agreement will involve the participation of both the subject matter departments or divisions of each institution of higher education as well as the teacher education department or division, if any, of each such institution; and

(3) that the applicant has consulted with, as appropriate, the State agency for higher education or the State educational agency in the development of the program for which assistance is sought, and will assure appropriate participation of such agencies in the program.

(b) For the purpose of this part an eligible applicant means—

(1) an institution of higher education,

(2) a State or local educational agency, and

(3) a professional society or association, in the fields of mathematics, physical or biological sciences, or engineering.

SPECIAL CONSIDERATION OF UNDERREPRESENTED AND UNDERSERVED POPULATIONS

SEC. 123. In providing financial assistance under this part, the Foundation shall make every effort to ensure that consideration is given to applications which provide for the development and improvement of instructional programs and materials designed to meet the needs of underrepresented and underserved populations.

PART C—CONGRESSIONAL MERIT SCHOLARSHIPS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 131. This part may be cited as the "Congressional Merit Scholarships in Mathematics, Science, and Engineering Education".

MERIT SCHOLARSHIPS ESTABLISHED

SEC. 132. (a) The Foundation is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this part, to award scholarships to individuals who are enrolled in institutions of higher education and who demonstrate outstanding potential for, and who plan to pursue, a career in teaching in the fields of mathematics, science, and engineering.

(b) Scholarships under this part shall be awarded for such period as the Foundation may prescribe, but for not to exceed four academic years.

(c)(1) A student awarded a scholarship under this part may attend any institution of higher education offering courses of study designed to prepare them for teaching careers. Such awards shall be available for periods of study commencing not sooner than the third undergraduate year.

(2) In order to be eligible for a scholarship under this part, each individual shall—

(A) concentrate, at the undergraduate level, in mathematics or science, and indicate a serious intent to teach at the elementary school level; or

(B) concentrate, at the undergraduate level, in mathematics or science, and indicate a serious intent to teach mathematics or science at the secondary school level; or

(C) concentrate, at the undergraduate level, in engineering and indicate a serious intent to teach at the postsecondary level, in an engineering discipline in which the Foundation has determined a shortage of qualified teachers.

(d) Not to exceed 25 per centum of the scholarships available under this part shall be available for students meeting the criteria of subsection (c)(2)(C).

SELECTION OF MERIT SCHOLARS

SEC. 133. (a) The Foundation shall establish criteria for the selection of merit scholars under this part.

(b) The Foundation shall adopt selection procedures which are designed to assure that—

(1) the number of individuals to be selected will not exceed the product of the number of Members of Congress for each State, multiplied by two, and that the individuals will be selected from among the residents of each State (and in the case of the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, not to exceed ten individuals will be selected); and

(2) each recipient of a merit scholarship will enter into an agreement with the Foundation under which the recipient will agree—

(A) to comply with provisions of paragraph (2) of section 142(c) relating to concentration of study; and

(B) to pursue a career in teaching, as prescribed in section 142(c) for not less than two years for each academic year in which a merit scholarship award is received.

STIPENDS AND SCHOLARSHIP CONDITIONS

SEC. 134. (a) Each student awarded a merit scholarship under this part shall receive an award of $5,000 for each academic year of study.

(b) Each student awarded a merit scholarship under the provisions of this part shall continue to receive payments provided under this part for such scholarship only during such period as the Foundation determines that the student is maintaining satisfactory progress in, and devoting full time to, the course of study for which the scholarship is awarded.

(c) The Foundation is authorized to require reports containing such information in such form and to be filed at such time as the Foundation determines to be necessary from any student awarded a merit scholarship under the provisions of this part. Such reports shall be accompanied by a certificate from any appropriate official of the institution of higher education, approved by the Foundation, stating that such student is making satisfactory progress in, and is devoting essentially full time to, the study described in subsection (b).

PART D—DISCRETIONARY FUNDS OF THE DIRECTOR

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 141. (a) From funds available for this part, the Director is authorized to make grants to and to enter into contracts with any public agency or any private organization to carry out any activity authorized by this title. In addition, from such funds, the Director is authorized, directly or by way of grant or contract, to conduct—

(1) a faculty exchange program between institutions of higher education (particularly institutions having established and nationally recognized research facilities) and eligible institutions; and

(2) programs of national significance promoting the improvement of instruction in the fields of mathematics, science, and engineering.

In carrying out the provisions of this part, the Director shall give special consideration to programs and activities for women in science and minorities in science which have been assisted by the Foundation prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) For the purpose of this section the term "eligible institution" means an institution of higher education in any State which—

(1)(A) has an enrollment which includes a substantial percentage of students who are members of a minority group or who are economically or educationally disadvantaged; or

(B) is located in a community that is not within commuting distance of a major institution of higher education; and

(2) demonstrates a commitment to meet the special educational needs of students who are members of a minority group or are economically or educationally disadvantaged.

PART E—GENERAL PROVISIONS

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 161. (a) In order to carry out the provisions of this title, the Foundation is authorized to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, except that in no case shall employees be compensated at a rate to exceed the rate provided for employees in grade GS-18 of the General Schedule set forth in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code;

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services of experts and consultants as are necessary to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the rate specified at the time of such service for grade GS-18 of section 5332 of such title;

(3) prescribe such regulations as it deems necessary governing the manner in which its functions shall be carried out;

(4) receive money and other property donated, bequeathed, or devised, without condition or restriction other than it be used for the purposes of this Act; and to use, sell, or otherwise dispose of such property for the purpose of carrying out the functions of the Foundation under this Act;

(5) accept and utilize the services of voluntary and noncompensated personnel and reimburse them for travel expenses, including per diem, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code;

(6) enter into contracts, grants, or other arrangements, or modifications thereof, to carry out the provisions of this title, and such contracts or modifications thereof may, with the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the National Science Board, be entered into without performance or other bonds, and without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5);

(7) make advances, progress, and other payments which the Board deems necessary under this title without regard to the provisions of section 3324 of title 31, United States Code; and

(8) make other necessary expenditures.

(b) The Foundation shall submit to the President and to the Congress an annual report of its operations under this title.

PARTICIPATION OF TEACHERS FROM PRIVATE SCHOOLS

SEC. 162. The Foundation shall, after consultation with appropriate private school representatives, make provision for the benefit of teachers in private elementary and secondary schools in the programs authorized by this title, in order to assure equitable participation of such teachers.

PROHIBITION AGAINST FEDERAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION

SEC. 163. The provisions of section 432 of the General Education Provisions Act, relating to prohibition against Federal control of education, shall apply to each program authorized by this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 164. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985 to carry out the provisions of part A of this title.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of part B of this title.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984 and $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of part C of this title.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of part D of this title.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Foundation $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984 and $21,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the graduate fellowship program under the National Science Foundation Act of 1950.

TITLE II—EDUCATION FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 201. It is the purpose of this title to make financial assistance available to State and local educational agencies, and to institutions of higher education, to improve the skills of teachers and instruction in mathematics, science, computer learning, and foreign languages, and to increase the access of all students to such instruction, and thereby contribute to strengthening the economic security of the United States.

DEFINITION

SEC. 202. As used in this title, the term "junior or community college" means an institution of higher education—

(1) that admits as regular students individuals who are beyond the age of compulsory school attendance in the State in which the institution is located and who have the ability to benefit from the training offered by the institution;

(2) that does not provide an educational program for which it awards a bachelor's degree (or an equivalent degree); and

(3) that—

(A) provides an educational program of not less than two years that is acceptable for full credit toward such a degree, or

(B) offers a two-year program designed to prepare a student to work as a technician or at the semiprofessional level in engineering, scientific, or other technological fields requiring the understanding and application of basic engineering, scientific, or mathematical principles of knowledge.

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 203. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to States and to make discretionary grants, in accordance with the provisions of this title, for strengthening the skills of teachers and instruction in mathematics, science, computer learning, and foreign languages.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $350,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, and $400,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of this title.

ALLOTMENT TO STATES

SEC. 204. (a)(1) From 90 per centum of the amount appropriated to carry out this title for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such 90 per centum as the number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in the State bears to the number of such children in all States, except that no State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per centum of the amount available under this subsection in any fiscal year.

(2) The Secretary shall reserve the remaining 10 per centum to carry out section 212, relating to discretionary grants of national significance.

(3) For the purpose of this subsection, the term "State" does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(4) The number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in the State and in all States shall be determined by the Secretary on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available to him.

(b) The amount of any State's allotment under subsection (a) for any fiscal year to carry out this title which the Secretary determines will not be required for that fiscal year to carry out this title shall be available for reallotment from time to time, on such dates during that year as the Secretary may fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to those States under subsection (a) for that year but with such proportionate amount for any of those other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates that State needs and will be able to use for that year; and the total of those reductions shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amounts reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed a part of its allotment under subsection (a) for that year.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year for the purpose of this subsection amounts equal to not more than 1 per centum of the amount appropriated for such year under this title. The Secretary shall allot the amount appropriated pursuant to this subsection among Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs for assistance under this title. In addition for each fiscal year the Secretary shall allot from not less than one-half of such amount, to such agency as the Secretary deems appropriate, for programs authorized by this title for children in elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of the Interior. The terms upon which payments are made under the previous sentence shall be determined by such criteria as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this title.

IN-STATE APPORTIONMENT

SEC. 205. (a) For each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985, 70 per centum of each State's allotment under section 204 of this title shall be used for elementary and secondary education programs in accordance with section 206.

(b) For each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985, 30 per centum of each State's allotment under section 204 of this title shall be used for higher education programs in accordance with section 207.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 206. (a) The amount apportioned under section 205(a) from each State's allotment under this title shall be used by the State educational agency to strengthen elementary and secondary education programs in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b)(1) Not less than 70 per centum of the amount available under this section shall be distributed to local educational agencies within the State. Each local educational agency shall use funds distributed under this paragraph for—

(A) the expansion and improvement of in-service training and retraining of teachers and other appropriate school personnel in the fields of mathematics and science, including vocational education teachers who use mathematics and science in the courses of study the teachers teach; or

(B) if the local educational agency determines that the agency has met its need for such training and retraining and subject to the provisions of section 210(c), computer learning and instruction, foreign language instruction, and instructional materials and equipment related to mathematics and science instruction.

Such training and instruction may be carried out through agreements with public agencies, private industry, institutions of higher education, and nonprofit private organizations, including museums, libraries, educational television stations, professional science, mathematics and engineering associations, and other appropriate institutions. A local educational agency may carry out the activities authorized by this paragraph with one or more other local educational agencies within the State, or with the State educational agency, or both. Each local educational agency shall assure that programs of inservice training and retraining will take into account the need for greater access to and participation in mathematics, science, and computer learning programs and careers of students from historically underrepresented groups, including females, minorities, individuals with limited-English proficiency, the handicapped, and migrants.

(2)(A) The State educational agency shall distribute 50 per centum of the funds available under this subsection to local educational agencies within the State according to the relative number of children enrolled in public and nonpublic schools within the school districts of such agencies.

(B) The State educational agency shall distribute 50 per centum of the funds available under this subsection based on the relative number of children aged five to seventeen who—

(i) are from families below the poverty level as determined under section 111(c)(2)(A) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and in the public schools of the local educational agencies within the State.

(ii) are from families above the poverty level as determined under section 111(c)(2)(B) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(3) The State educational agency shall renew payments to local educational agencies under this subsection based upon the criteria set forth in paragraph (2) of this subsection and a determination by the State educational agency that the local educational agency is implementing the program assisted under this title so that a substantial number of teachers in the public and private schools in the school district of such agency are served and several grade levels of instruction in such schools are involved in the program.

(c)(1) If a local educational agency is spending funds under subsection (b)(1)(B), not to exceed 30 per centum of the funds available to the local educational agency under subsection (b) may be used for the purchase of computer and computer-related instructional equipment.

(2) If a local educational agency is spending funds under subsection (b)(1)(B), not to exceed 15 per centum of the funds available to the local educational agency under subsection (b) may be used to strengthen instruction in foreign languages.

(d) Not less than 20 per centum of the amount available under this section shall be used by the State educational agency for demonstration and exemplary programs for—

(1) teacher training and retraining and inservice upgrading of teacher skills in the fields of mathematics and science, foreign language instruction, and computer learning,

(2) instructional equipment and materials in such fields and necessary technical assistance,

(3) special projects for historically underrepresented and underserved populations and for gifted and talented students, and

(4) the dissemination of information to all local educational agencies within the State relating to the exemplary programs in the fields of mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning.

In providing financial assistance for such demonstration and exemplary programs, the State educational agency shall reserve not less than 20 per centum of the amount available under this subsection for special projects in mathematics and science, foreign languages, and computer education to historically underrepresented and underserved populations of students, including females, minorities, handicapped individuals, individuals with limited-English proficiency, and migrant students, and to programs for gifted and talented students. The programs for gifted and talented students may include assistance to magnet schools for such students.

(e) Not less than 5 per centum of the amount available under this section may be used by the State educational agency to provide technical assistance to local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and nonprofit organizations, including museums, libraries, and educational television stations, in the conduct of programs specified under subsection (b).

(f) Not to exceed 5 per centum of the amount available under this section may be used by the State educational agency for—

(1) the State assessment required by section 208 of this title; and

(2) the costs of administration and evaluation of the program assisted under this title.

HIGHER EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 207. (a) The amount apportioned under section 205(b) from each State's allotment under this title shall be used by the State agency for higher education for higher education programs in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b)(1)(A) Not less than 75 per centum of the amount available for this section shall be used by the State agency for higher education for grants to institutions of higher education in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(B) The State agency for higher education shall make funds available on a competitive basis to institutions of higher education in the State which apply for payments under this section. The State agency for higher education shall make every effort to ensure equitable participation of private and public institutions of higher education.

(2) The amount available under this subsection shall be used for—

(A) establishing traineeship programs for new teachers who will specialize in teaching mathematics and science at the secondary school level;

(B) retraining of secondary school teachers who specialize in disciplines other than the teaching of mathematics and science to specialize in the teaching of mathematics, science, or computer learning, including provision of stipends for participation in institutes authorized under title I; and

(C) inservice training for elementary, secondary, and vocational school teachers and training for other appropriate school personnel to improve their teaching skills in the fields of mathematics and science, and computer learning, including stipends for participation in institutes authorized under title I.

Each institution of higher education receiving a grant under this subsection shall assure that programs of training, retraining, and inservice training will take into account the need for greater access to and participation in mathematics, science, and computer learning and careers of students from historically underrepresented and underserved groups, including females, minorities, individuals with limited-English proficiency, the handicapped, migrants, and the gifted and talented.

(3) No institution of higher education may receive assistance under paragraphs (2) (B) and (C) of this subsection unless the institution enters into an agreement with a local educational agency, or consortium of such agencies, to provide inservice training and retraining for the elementary and secondary school teachers in the public and private schools of the school district of each such agency.

(c)(1) Not less than 20 per centum of the amount available under this section shall be used by the State agency for higher education for cooperative programs among institutions of higher education, local educational agencies, State educational agencies, private industry, and private nonprofit organizations, including museums, libraries, educational television stations, and professional mathematics, science, and engineering societies and associations for the development and dissemination of projects designed to improve student understanding and performance in science, mathematics, and critical foreign languages. In carrying out this subsection, the State agency for higher education shall give special consideration to programs involving consortial arrangements which include local educational agencies.

(2) For the purpose of paragraph (1) of this subsection, critical foreign languages include foreign languages designated by the Secretary pursuant to section 211(d).

(d) Not to exceed 5 per centum of the amount available under this section may be used by the State agency for higher education for—

(1) the State assessment required by section 208 of this title; and

(2) the costs of administration and evaluation of the program assisted under this title incurred by the State higher education agency.

STATE ASSESSMENT OF MATHEMATICS, SCIENCE, FOREIGN LANGUAGES, AND COMPUTER LEARNING

SEC. 208. (a) Each State which desires to receive grants under this title shall prepare not later than nine months following the date for which funds under this title become available, a preliminary assessment of the status of mathematics, science, foreign language, and computer learning within the State. Such preliminary assessment shall be made available to all local educational agencies within the State to assist the local educational agencies to carry out the requirements of section 210. A final version of such assessment shall be submitted to the Secretary not later than the end of the first year for which funds under this title are made available. Each first assessment shall be prepared after an examination of the local assessments submitted under section 210. Each such assessment shall include a description and a five-year projection of—

(1) the availability of qualified mathematics, science, foreign language, and computer learning teachers at the secondary and postsecondary education levels within the State;

(2) the qualifications of teachers in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning at the secondary and postsecondary education levels, and the qualifications of teachers at the elementary level to teach mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning;

(3) the State standards for teacher certification, including any special exceptions currently made, for teachers of mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning;

(4) the availability of adequate curricula, instructional materials and equipment, in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning; and

(5) the degree of access to instruction in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning of historically underrepresented and underserved individuals and of the gifted and talented.

(b) Each such assessment shall also describe the programs, initiatives, and resources committed or projected to be undertaken within the State to—

(1) improve teacher recruitment and retention;

(2) improve teacher qualifications and skills in the fields of mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer and computer learning;

(3) improve curricula in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning including instructional materials and equipment; and

(4) improve access for historically underrepresented and underserved populations, and for the gifted and talented, to instruction in mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning.

(c)(1) Each State assessment shall be developed in consultation with the Governor, the State legislature, State Board of Education, local educational agencies within the State, and representatives of—

(A) vocational secondary schools and area vocational education schools,

(B) public and private institutions of higher education,

(C) teacher organizations,

(D) private industry,

(E) other public organizations, including libraries, museums, and educational television stations, and professional scientific and mathematics associations, and

(F) private elementary and secondary schools, within the State.

(2) Each State assessment shall be submitted jointly by the State educational agency and the State agency for higher education.

STATE APPLICATION

SEC. 209. (a) Each State which desires to receive grants under this title shall file an application with the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(b) Each such application shall—

(1) designate the State educational agency for the purpose of programs described in section 206, and the State agency for higher education for programs described in section 207 as the agency or agencies responsible for the administration and supervision of the programs described in sections 207 and 208, as the case may be;

(2) describe the programs for which assistance is sought under the application;

(3) provide assurances that payments will be distributed by the State in accordance with the provisions of sections 207 and 208, as the case may be;

(4) provide procedures—

(A) for submitting applications by local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, junior or community colleges, and other organizations for programs described in section 206 for distribution of payments under this title within the State, and

(B) for approval of applications by the appropriate State agency, including appropriate procedures to assure that the appropriate State agency will not disapprove an application without notice and opportunity for a hearing;

(5) provide assurances that—

(A) the State will prepare and submit the assessment required under section 208;

(B) in the second year for which funds are available under this title, the State will use funds for purposes consistent with the findings of the State assessment under section 208;

(C) for programs described in section 206, the provisions of sections 210 and 211 will be carried out; and

(D) to the extent feasible, evaluations of the program assisted under this title will be performed;

(6) provide assurances that Federal funds made available under this title for any fiscal year will be so used as to supplement, and to the extent practicable, to increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such funds, be available for the purposes described in sections 207 and 208, and in no case supplant such funds; and

(7) provide such fiscal control and accounting procedures as may be necessary (A) to ensure proper accounting of Federal funds paid to the applicant under this title, and (B) to ensure the verification of the programs assisted under the application.

(c) The Secretary shall expeditiously approve any State plan that meets the requirements of this section.

LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY ASSESSMENT

SEC. 210. (a) Each local educational agency which desires to receive a payment from the State educational agency pursuant to section 206 shall provide to the State educational agency an assessment of the local educational agency's need for assistance in—

(1) teacher training, retraining, and inservice training and the training of appropriate school personnel in the areas of mathematics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning, including a description of the availability and qualifications of teachers in the areas of mathematics, science, foreign language and computer learning, including the qualifications of teachers at the elementary level to teach in such areas;

(2) improving instructional materials and equipment related to mathematics and science education; and

(3) Improving the access to instruction in mathemactics, science, foreign languages, and computer learning of historically underserved and underrepresented individuals and of the gifted and talented, and an assessment of the current degree of access to such instruction of such individuals.

(b) Such assessment shall also describe the types of services to be provided pursuant to the program assisted under section 206, a description of how the services assisted will meet the program needs of the local educational agency, and in the second year for which funds under this title are made available, a description of how the services assisted will address unmet needs described under section 208.

(c) If a local educational agency determines, pursuant to section 206(b)(1), that the agency has met its teacher retraining and inservice training needs in mathematics and science and desires to expend its funds on other activities prescribed in section 206(b)(1)(B), the local educational agency may request the State educational agency to waive such training requirements. If the State educational agency determines that the local educational agency has met such teacher training needs, the State educational agency shall grant the waiver.

PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN AND TEACHERS FROM PRIVATE SCHOOLS

SEC. 211. (a) To the extent consistent with the number of children in the State or in the school district of each local educational agency who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, such State or agency shall, after consultation with appropriate private school representatives, make provision for including services and arrangements for the benefit of such children as will assure the equitable participation of such children in the purposes and benefits of this title.

(b) To the extent consistent with the number of children in the State or in the school district of a local educational agency who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, such State, State educational agency, or State agency for higher education shall, after consultation with appropriate private school representatives, make provision, for the benefit of such teachers in such schools, for such inservice and teacher training and retraining as will assure equitable participation of such teachers in the purposes and benefits of this title.

(c) If by reason of any provision of law a State or local educational agency is prohibited from providing for the participation of children or teachers from private schools as required by subsections (a) and (b), or if the Secretary determines that a State or local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for such participation on an equitable basis, the Secretary shall waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children or teachers which shall be subject to the requirements of this section. Such waivers shall be subject to consultation, withholding, notice, and judicial review requirements in accordance with sections 557(b) (3) and (4) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

SECRETARY'S DISCRETIONARY FUND FOR PROGRAMS OF NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE

SEC. 212. (a) From 10 per centum of amounts appropriated under section 203(b), the Secretary shall make grants in accordance with this section.

(b)(1) From 75 per centum of the amount available under this section in each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make grants to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and private nonprofit organizations, including museums, libraries, educational television stations, and professional science, mathematics, and engineering societies and associations for programs of national significance in mathematics and science instruction, computer learning, and foreign language instruction in critical languages. The Secretary shall give special consideration to provide assistance to local educational agencies, or consortia thereof, to establish or improve magnet schools for gifted and talented students. In awarding of grants the Secretary shall give special consideration to local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and private nonprofit organizations, including museums, libraries, educational television stations, and professional science, mathematics, and engineering societies and associations providing special services to historically underserved and underrepresented populations in the fields of mathematics and science.

(2) The Secretary, from the amount available under paragraph (1) for each fiscal year, shall reserve not to exceed $3,000,000 in each such year for the Director of the National Institute of Education for the purpose of conducting evaluation and research activities. Such evaluation and research activities shall include—

(A) a policy analysis of alternative methods to improve instruction in mathematics and science;

(B) an annual evaluation of the programs assisted under this title; and

(C) research on improving teacher training, retraining, inservice training, and retention, as well as the development of curriculum and materials in the fields of mathematics and science.

One-half of the funds reserved under this paragraph shall be used for the research activities described in clause (C).

(c) From 25 per centum of the amount available in each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make grants to institutions of higher education for the improvement and expansion of instruction in critical foreign languages.

(d) In determining which languages are critical to national security, economic, and scientific needs, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Director of the National Science Foundation. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a list of critical foreign languages.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 213. (a) From the amounts appropriated under section 203(b), the Secretary shall pay, in accordance with the provisions of this title, the costs of the programs and activities described in the application approved under section 209, and the costs of programs of national significance under section 211.

(b) Payments under this title shall be made as soon after approval of the application as practicable.

TITLE III—NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION PROGRAM FOR PARTNERSHIPS IN EDUCATION FOR MATHEMATICS, SCIENCE, AND ENGINEERING

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Partnerships in Education for Mathematics, Science, and Engineering Act".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 302. It is the purpose of this title to supplement State and local resources to—

(1) improve the quality of instruction in the fields of mathematics, science, and engineering in the State;

(2) furnish additional resources and support for research, student scholarships, and faculty exchange programs in the fields of mathematics, science, and engineering; and

(3) encourage partnerships in education between the business community, institutions of higher education, and elementary and secondary schools in the community.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 303. As used in this title—

(1) the term "applicant" means with respect to activities described in section 305(a) an institution of higher education and the other participants described in paragraph (3) of section 305(a), and with respect to activities described in section 305(b) a local educational agency and the other participants described in paragraph (3) of section 305(b);

(2) the term "equipment" includes machinery, utilities, and built-in equipment and any necessary enclosures or structures to house them, and includes all other items necessary for the functioning of a particular facility as a facility for the provision of educational services, including items such as instructional equipment and necessary furniture, printed, published, and audio-visual instructional materials, and books, periodicals, documents, and other related materials;

(3) the term "Foundation" means the National Science Foundation;

(4) the term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given that term by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965;

(5) the term "States" includes the fifty States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands; and

(6) the term "State agency for higher education" means the State board of higher education or other agency or officer primarily responsible for the State supervision of higher education, or if there is no such officer or agency, an officer or agency designated by the Governor or by State law.

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 304. (a) The Foundation is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to make grants to applicants to pay the Federal share of the costs of the activities described in section 305.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $30,000,000 for the fiscal year 1984, and $60,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, to carry out the provisions of this title.

AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES

SEC. 305. (a)(1) An applicant may use payments received under this title in any fiscal year for higher education programs and activities described in this subsection.

(2) Grants under this subsection may be used for partnership in education programs—

(A) for the improvement of instruction in mathematics, science, computer science, and engineering education at the postsecondary level;

(B) for awarding scholarships to students at institutions of higher education in the fields of mathematics, science, computer science, and engineering;

(C) for the operation of faculty exchange programs by the institutions of higher education and business concerns within the State;

(D) for research in the fields of mathematics, science, computer science, and engineering;

(E) for the acquisition, rehabilitation, and renovation of equipment and instrumentation for use in instruction in the fields of mathematics, science, computer science, and engineering; and

(F) to promote public understanding of science, mathematics, and computer science.

(3) Education partnerships under this subsection may include institutions of higher education, business concerns, nonprofit private organizations, local educational agencies, professional mathematic and scientific associations, museums, libraries, educational television stations, and if the State so desires, appropriate State agencies.

(b)(1) An applicant may use payments received under this title in any fiscal year for programs and activities described in this subsection.

(2) A local educational agency may carry out an elementary and secondary school partnership in education program under which—

(A) elementary and secondary school teachers in the schools of local educational agencies who teach mathematics, science, or computer science are made available to local business concerns and business concerns with establishments located in the community to serve in such concerns or establishments;

(B) personnel of local business concerns and business concerns with establishments located in the community serve as consultants, lecturers, teaching assistants, or teachers of mathematics, science, or computer science in the elementary and secondary schools within the State;

(C) training and retraining is furnished to elementary and secondary school teachers of mathematics, science, and computer science under a cooperative arrangement between the State or local educational agency and appropriate business concerns;

(D) secondary school students observe, participate, and work in local business concerns and business concerns with establishments located in the community; and

(E) computer clubs and extracurricular activities involving modern technologies are established in elementary and secondary schools.

(3) Partnerships under this subsection may include local educational agencies, business concerns, nonprofit private organizations, institutions of higher education, professional mathematic and scientific associations, museums, libraries, educational television stations, and, if the State so desires, appropriate State agencies.

APPLICATION

SEC. 306. (a) Any applicant which desires to receive a grant under this title shall submit an application approved under section 307 to the Foundation, at such time, in such manner, and accompanied by such additional information as the Foundation may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(1) describe the activities for which assistance under this title is sought;

(2) provide assurances that not more than 5 per centum of the amount received by the applicant in any fiscal year may be expended on administrative expenses;

(3) with respect to each program for which assistance is sought, provide assurances that—

(A) 30 per centum of the funds for each such project will be furnished by business concerns within the community;

(B) 20 per centum of the funds will be supplied by—

(i) the State,

(ii) the institution of higher education or the local educational agency, as the case may be, participating in the program; and

(iii) the other parties participating in the program;

(C) no stipend will be paid directly to employees of a profitmaking business concern; and

(D) teachers participating in the exchange program may not be employed by the participating business concern with which the teacher served within three years after the end of the exchange program unless the teacher repays the full cost of the exchange program to the State and local educational agency, as the case may be; and

(4) provide assurances that whenever the program for which assistance is sought includes scholarships, the scholarships be awarded to undergraduate students at institutions of higher education within the State who wish to pursue a course of study in mathematics or science, engineering or computer science, and that each student awarded a scholarship under this title will receive a stipend which shall not exceed the cost of tuition at the institution of higher education plus a stipend of not to exceed $750 for each academic year of study for which the scholarship is awarded;

(5) set forth policies and procedures to assure that whenever the application includes a local educational agency, to the extent consistent with the number and location of children in the school district of such agency who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, provision is made for the participation of such children in the program assisted under this title;

(6) provide assurances that consideration is given to programs and activities designed to meet the needs of underrepresented and underserved populations;

(7) provide assurances that in the consideration of applications submitted under section 307(a) that equitable consideration is given to applications submitted by private and public institutions of higher education; and

(8) provide such additional assurances as the Foundation determines essential to ensure compliance with the requirements of this title.

(b) A regional consortium of applicants in two or more States may file a joint application under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

INSTITUTIONAL AND LOCAL APPLICATIONS

SUBMISSION OF APPLICATIONS

SEC. 307. Each applicant within a State which desires to receive a grant under this title shall submit the application prepared in accordance with section 306 to the State agency on higher education or the State educational agency, as the case may be, for approval and shall submit the approved application to the Foundation under section 306. Each such application shall be submitted jointly by the local educational agency in the case of activities described in section 305(a), or an institution of higher education in the case of activities described in section 305(b), and each business concern or other party that is to participate in the program for which assistance is sought.

APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS

SEC. 308. (a)(1) The Foundation shall establish criteria for approval of applications under this title.

(2) No application may be approved by the Foundation unless the State educational agency or the State agency for higher education, as the case may be, determines that the application is consistent with State plans for elementary and secondary education or State plans for higher education, as the case may be, in the State.

(b) The Foundation shall adopt approval procedures designed to assure that there is equitable distribution of grants among the States.

PAYMENTS; FEDERAL SHARE; LIMITATION

SEC. 309. (a)(1) The Foundation shall pay, to each applicant having an application approved under section 308, the Federal share of the cost of the program described in the application.

(2) The Federal share for each fiscal year shall be 50 per centum.

(3) The non-Federal share of payments under this title may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

(b) Not more than 15 per centum of the funds appropriated under this title in any fiscal year may be paid to applicants in any single State.

TITLE IV—PRESIDENTIAL AWARDS FOR TEACHING EXCELLENCE IN MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE

PRESIDENTIAL AWARDS

SEC. 401. (a) The President is authorized to make Presidential Awards for Teaching Excellence in Mathematics and Science to elementary and secondary school teachers of mathematics or science who have demonstrated outstanding teaching qualifications in the field of teaching mathematics or science.

(b) Each year the President is authorized to make one hundred awards under subsection (a) of this section. In selecting elementary and secondary school teachers for the award authorized by this section, the President shall select at least one elementary school teacher and one secondary school teacher from each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 402. The President shall carry out the provisions of this title, including the establishment of the selection procedures, after consultation with the Secretary of Education, the Director of the National Science Foundation, and other appropriate officials of Federal agencies.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 403. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985 to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) Amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) shall be available for making awards under this title, for administrative expenses, for necessary travel by teachers selected under this title, and for special activities related to carrying out the provisions of this title.

TITLE V—ASBESTOS SCHOOL HAZARD ABATEMENT

SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the "Asbestos School Hazard Abatement Act of 1984".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 502. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) exposure to asbestos fibers has been identified over a long period of time and by reputable medical and scientific evidence as significantly increasing the incidence of cancer and other severe or fatal diseases, such as asbestosis;

(2) medical evidence has suggested that children may be particularly vulnerable to environmentally induced cancers;

(3) medical science has not established any minimum level of exposure to asbestos fibers which is considered to be safe to individuals exposed to the fibers;

(4) substantial amounts of asbestos, particularly in sprayed form, have been used in school buildings, especially during the period 1946 through 1972;

(5) partial surveys in some States have indicated that (A) in a number of school buildings materials containing asbestos fibers have become damaged or friable, causing asbestos fibers to be dislodged into the air, and (B) asbestos concentration far exceeding normal ambient air levels have been found in school buildings containing such damaged materials;

(6) the presence in school buildings of friable or easily damaged asbestos creates an unwarranted hazard to the health of the school children and school employees who are exposed to such materials;

(7) the Department of Health and Human Services and the Environmental Protection Agency, as well as several States, have attempted to publicize the potential hazards to school children and employees from exposure to asbestos fibers, but there is no systematic program for remedying hazardous conditions in schools;

(8) because there is no Federal health standard regulating the concentration of asbestos fibers in noncommercial workplace environments such as schools, school employees and students may be exposed to hazardous concentrations of asbestos fibers in the school buildings which they use each day;

(9) without a program of information distribution, technical and scientific assistance, and financial support, many local educational agencies and States will not be able to mitigate the potential asbestos hazards in their schools; and

(10) the effective regulation of interstate commerce for the protection of the public health requires the establishment of programs under this title to mitigate hazards from exposure to asbestos fibers and materials emitting such fibers.

(b) It is the purpose of this title to—

(1) direct the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to establish a program to assist States and local educational agencies to ascertain the extent of the danger to the health of school children and employees from asbestos materials in schools;

(2) provide continuing scientific and technical assistance to State and local agencies to enable them to identify and abate asbestos hazards in schools;

(3) provide financial assistance for the abatement of asbestos threats to the health and safety of school children or employees; and

(4) assure that no employee of any local educational agency suffers any disciplinary action as a result of calling attention to potential asbestos hazards which may exist in schools.

ASBESTOS HAZARD ABATEMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 503. (a)(1) There is hereby established a program within the Environmental Protection Agency to be known as the Asbestos Hazards Abatement Program (hereinafter in this title referred to as "Program").

(b) The duties of the Administrator in implementing and effectuating the Program shall include—

(1) the compilation of medical, scientific, and technical information including, but not limited to—

(A) the health and safety hazards associated with asbestos materials;

(B) the means of identifying, sampling, and testing materials suspected of emitting asbestos fibers; and

(C) the means of abating the threat posed by asbestos and asbestos containing materials;

(2) the distribution of the information described in paragraph (1) (in any appropriate form such as pamphlets, reports, or instructions) to State and local agencies and to other institutions for the purpose of carrying out activities described in this title;

(3) the development within forty-five days of enactment of this title of an interim or final application form, which shall be distributed promptly to local educational agencies; and

(4) the review of applications for financial assistance, and the approval or disapproval of such applications, in accordance with the provisions of section 505.

STATE PLANS

SEC. 504. (a) Not later than three months after the date of enactment of this title, the Governor of each State shall submit to the Administrator a plan which describes the procedures to be used by the State for maintaining records on—

(1) the presence of asbestos materials in school buildings of local educational agencies;

(2) the asbestos detection and abatement activities conducted by local educational agencies (including activities relating to the replacement of the asbestos materials removed from school buildings with other appropriate building materials);

(3) repairs made to restore school buildings to conditions comparable to those which existed before the abatement activities referred to in subparagraph (B) were undertaken.

(b)(1) Not later than six months after the date of enactment of this title, and annually thereafter, the Governor of each State shall:

(A) submit to the Administrator and the Secretary of the Department of Education a priority list of all schools under the authority of a local educational agency within the State, without regard to the public or private nature of the school involved, that are candidates for abatement;

(B) forward to the Administrator and the Secretary of the Department of Education for each candidate for abatement all applications for financial assistance prepared by the local educational agencies in accordance with the provisions of section 503(b)(3) and section 505; and,

(C) forward to the Secretary of the Department of Education a copy of all information submitted to the Administrator in accordance with subsection (b)(3).

(2) The priority list shall rank the potential candidates for abatement action based on the nature and magnitude of the existing and potential exposure presented by the asbestos materials.

(3) For each school listed, the Governor shall certify that the statement of need contained in the application for assistance accurately reflects the financial resources available to the local educational agency for the asbestos abatement program.

(4) For the purpose of determining the adequacy of the financial resources available to a local educational agency for the abatement of asbestos threats the Governor shall, to the extent practicable, consider the following:

(A) A measure of financial need used by the State in which the local educational agency is located.

(B) The estimated per capita income of the locality of such agency or of those directly or indirectly providing financial support for such agency.

(C) The extent to which the local school millage rate falls above or below (i) the millage rate average of the State and (ii) the millage rate of other local educational agencies with comparable enrollment, per capita income and resource base.

(D) The ratio, expressed as a percentage, of the estimated cost of the project to the total budget of the local educational agency.

(E) The borrowing capacity of the local educational agency.

(F) Any other factor that demonstrates that the local educational agency has limited financial resources.

(c) Not later than nine months after the submission of the plan described in subsection (a), and each twelve months thereafter, the Governor shall submit to the Administrator a report which describes the actions taken by the State in accordance with its plan under such subsection.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 505. (a) There is hereby established within the Environmental Protection Agency an Asbestos Hazards Abatement Assistance Program (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Assistance Program"), which shall be administered in accordance with this section.

(b)(1) Applications for financial assistance shall be submitted by a local educational agency, to the Governor, or the Governor's designee, who shall establish a priority list based on the criteria of section 504 (b)(2).

(2) Pursuant to section 504, applications shall be submitted, together with the Governor's report and priority list, to the Administrator who shall review and rank such applications pursuant to section 505(c)(2) and propose financing pursuant to the criteria of section 504(b)(4).

(3) Within sixty days of receipt of the information described in section 504(b)(1), the Secretary of the Department of Education shall review such information and, in the Secretary's discretion, provide to the Administrator comments and recommendations based upon the needs of local educational agencies for financial assistance. Within sixty days of receipt of the Secretary's report, or expiration of the time allowed for such report, the Administrator shall approve or disapprove applications for financial assistance.

(c)(1) The Administrator shall provide financial assistance on a school-by-school basis to local educational agencies in accordance with other provisions of this section to carry out projects for—

(A) abating the threat posed by materials containing asbestos to the health and safety of children or employees;

(B) replacing the asbestos materials removed from school buildings with other appropriate building materials; and

(C) restoring school buildings to conditions comparable to those existing before abatement activities were undertaken pursuant to this section.

(2) The Administrator shall review and list in priority order applications for financial assistance. In ranking applications, the Administrator shall consider—

(A) the priority assigned to the abatement program by the Governor pursuant to section 504(b)(2);

(B)(i) the likelihood of release of asbestos fibers into a school environment;

(ii) any other evidence of the risk caused by the presence of asbestos including, but not limited to, situations in which there is a substantial quantity of dry loose asbestos-containing material on horizontal surfaces or asbestos-containing material is substantially deteriorated or damaged, and there is asbestos-containing material in an air plenum or in a high traffic area, confined space or within easy reach of a passerby;

(iii) the extent to which the corrective action proposed by the applicant will reduce the exposure of school children and school employees; and

(iv) the extent to which the corrective action proposed by the applicant is cost-effective compared to other techniques including management of material containing asbestos.

(3) In determining whether an applicant is eligible for assistance, and the nature and amount of financial assistance, the Administrator shall consider—

(A) the financial resources available to the applicant as certified by the Governor pursuant to section 504(b)(4); and

(B) the report, if any, of the Secretary of Education pursuant to section 504(b)(5).

(d) In no event shall financial assistance be provided under this title to an applicant if the Administrator determines that such applicant has resources adequate to support an appropriate asbestos materials abatement program. In making such a determination, the Administrator may consult with the Secretary of Education.

(e)(1) An applicant for financial assistance may be granted a loan of up to 100 per centum of the costs of an abatement program or, if the Administrator determines the applicant is unable to undertake and complete an asbestos materials abatement program with a loan, such applicant may also receive a grant (alone or in combination with a loan) not to exceed 50 per centum of the total costs of abatement, in the amount which the Administrator deems necessary.

(2) In approving any grant, the Administrator shall state with particularity the reasons why the applicant is unable to undertake and complete the abatement program with loan funds.

(f) Loans under this section shall be made pursuant to agreements which shall provide for the following:

(1) the loan shall not bear interest;

(2) the loan shall have a maturity period of not more than twenty years (as determined by the Administrator) and shall be repayable during such period at such times and in such amounts as the Administrator may specify in the loan agreement;

(3) repayment shall be made to the Secretary of the Treasury for deposit in the general fund; and

(4) such other terms and conditions that the Administrator determines necessary to protect the financial interest of the United States.

(g)(1) No financial assistance may be provided under this section unless an application has been submitted to the Administrator within the five-year period beginning on the effective date of this title.

(2) The Administrator shall not approve an application unless—

(A) the application contains such information as the Administrator may require, including but not limited to information describing—

(i) the nature and extent of the asbestos problem for which the assistance is sought;

(ii) the asbestos content of the material to be abated;

(iii) the methods which will be used to abate the asbestos materials;

(iv) the amount and type of financial assistance requested;

(v) a description of the financial resources of the local educational agency; and

(vi) a justification for the type and amount of the financial assistance requested.

(B) the application contains a certification that—

(i) any employee engaged in an asbestos material abatement program will be trained and equipped pursuant to section 506(b)(2)(B); and

(ii) no child or inadequately informed or protected school employee will be permitted in the vicinity of any asbestos abatement activity;

(C) the application contains assurances that the local educational agency will furnish such information as is necessary for the Administrator to make the report required by section 507 of this title.

(3) No financial assistance may be provided by the Administrator under this section for projects described in subsection (a)(2) on which abatement action was completed prior to January 1, 1984.

(B) Except as provided in section 512(b)(1) in approving applications the Administrator shall provide assistance to the local educational agencies having the highest priority among applications being considered in order of ranking until the appropriated funds are expended.

SEC. 506. (a) The Administrator shall promulgate rules and regulations as necessary to implement the authorities and requirements of this title.

(b) The Administrator shall also establish—

(1) procedures to be used by local educational agencies, in programs for which financial assistance is made available under section 505 for—

(A) abating asbestos materials in school buildings;

(B) replacing the asbestos materials removed from school buildings with other appropriate building materials; and

(C) restoring such school buildings to conditions comparable to those existing before asbestos containment or removal activities were undertaken; and

(2) within ninety days, standards for determining—

(A) which contractors are qualified to carry out the activities referred to in paragraph (1), and

(B) what training, equipment, protective clothing and other information and material must be supplied to adequately advise and protect school employees utilized to carry out the activities in paragraph (1).

(3) Nothing contained in this title shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish in any way the level of protection required under State or federal worker protection laws.

(c) In order to effectuate the purposes of this title, the Administrator may also adopt such other procedures, standards and regulations as the Administrator deems necessary, including—

(1) procedures for testing the level of asbestos fibers in schools, including safety measures to be followed in conducting such tests;

(2) standards for evaluating (on the basis of such tests) the likelihood of the leakage of asbestos fibers into the school environment; and

(3) periodic reporting with respect to the activities that have taken place using funds loaned or granted under this title.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 507. During each of the ten calendar years after the year in which this title is enacted, the Administrator shall prepare and submit not later than February 1 of each year a report to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives on the loan and grant program authorized by section 505 of this title. The report shall—

(1) describe the number of applications received;

(2) describe the number of loans and grants made in the preceding calendar year and specify each applicant for and recipient of a loan or grant;

(3) specify the number of loan or grant applications which were disapproved during the preceding calendar year and describe the reasons for such disapprovals;

(4) describe the types of programs for which loans or grants were made;

(5) specify the estimated total costs of such programs to the recipients of loans or grants and specify the amount of loans or grants made under the program authorized by this section; and

(6) estimate the number of schools still in need of assistance.

SEC. 508. (a)(1) As a condition of the award of any financial assistance under section 505, the recipient of any such loan or grant shall permit the United States to sue on behalf of such recipient any person determined by the Attorney General to be liable to the recipient for the costs of any activities undertaken by the recipient under such sections.

(2) The proceeds from any judgment recovered in any suit brought by the United States under paragraph (1) (or, if the recipient files a similar suit on its own behalf, the proceeds from a judgment recovered by the recipient in such suit) shall be used to repay to the United States, to the extent that the proceeds are sufficient to provide for such repayment, an amount equal to the sum of—

(A) the amount (i) outstanding on any loan and (ii) of any grant made to the recipient; and

(B) an amount equal to the interest which would have been charged on such loan were the loan made by a commercial lender at prevailing interest rates (as determined by the Administrator).

(b) The Attorney General shall, where appropriate, proceed in an expeditious manner to recover the amounts expended by the United States to carry out this title from the persons identified by the Attorney General as being liable for such costs.

SEC. 509. No State or local educational agency receiving assistance under this title may discharge any employee or otherwise discriminate against any employee with respect to the employee's compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because the employee has brought to the attention of the public information concerning any asbestos problem in the school buildings within the jurisdiction of such agency.

SEC. 510. Except as otherwise provided in section 508, nothing in this title shall—

(1) affect the right of any party to seek legal redress in connection with the purchase or installation of asbestos materials in schools or any claim of disability or death related to exposure to asbestos in a school setting; or

(2) affect the rights of any party under any other law.

SEC. 511. For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "asbestos" means—

(A) chrysotil", amosite, or crocidolite; or

(B) in fibrous form, tremolite, anthophyllite, or actinolite;

(2) the term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States;

(3) the term "threat" or "hazard" means that an asbestos material is friable or easily damaged, or within each reach of students or employees or otherwise susceptible to damage (including damage from water or air circulation) which could result in the dispersal of asbestos fibers into the school environment;

(4) the term "local educational agency" means—

(A) any local educational agency as defined in section 198(a)(10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(B) the governing authority of any nonprofit elementary or secondary school;

(5) the term "nonprofit elementary or school" means—

(A) any elementary or secondary school as defined in section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 owned and operated by one or more nonprofit corporations or associations no part of the net earnings of which inures, or may lawfully inure, to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and

(B) any school of any agency of the United States;

(6) the term "school buildings" means—

(A) structures suitable for use as classrooms, laboratories, libraries, school eating facilities, or facilities used for the preparation of food;

(B) any gymnasium or other facility which is specially designed for athletic or recreational activities for an academic course in physical education;

(C) other facilities used for the instruction of students, for research, or for the administration of educational or research programs; and

(D) maintenance, storage, or utility facilities essential to the operation of the facilities described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph;

(7) the term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, or the Administrator's designee;

(8) the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

SEC. 512. (a)(1) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the asbestos abatement program not more than $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending on September 30, 1984, $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending on September 30, 1985, and $100,000,000 for each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

(2) The sums appropriated under this title shall remain available until expended.

(b)(1) A State with qualified applicants shall receive no less than one-half of 1 per centum of the sums appropriated under this title or the total of the amounts requested by such applicants, whichever is less. Those amounts available in each fiscal year under this paragraph shall be obligated before the end of that fiscal year. For the purposes of this paragraph the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and, taken together, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(2) Of those sums appropriated for the implementation of this title, up to 10 per centum shall be reserved during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and up to 5 per centum for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, for the administration of this title and for programs including, but not limited to, the following:

(A) the establishment of a training center for contractors, engineers, school employees, parents and other personnel to provide instruction on asbestos assessment and abatement;

(B) the development and dissemination of abatement guidance documents to assist in evaluation of potential hazards, and the determination of proper abatement programs;

(C) the development of rules and regulations regarding inspection, reporting and record-keeping; and

(D) the development of a comprehensive testing and technical assistance program.

TITLE VI—EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION PROGRAM

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Excellence in Education Act".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 602. It is the purpose of this title to make awards to local educational agencies, after a competitive selection process, in order to carry out programs of excellence in individual schools of such agencies designed to achieve excellence in education, which—

(1) demonstrate successful techniques for improving the quality of education,

(2) can be disseminated and replicated, and

(3) are conducted with the participation of school principals, schoolteachers, parents, and business concerns in the locality.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 603. For the purpose of this title—

(1) The term "elementary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(2) The term "local educational agency" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(3) The term "secondary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(4) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(5) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(6) The term "State educational agency" has the same meaning given that term under section 198(a)(17) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

SCHOOL EXCELLENCE AWARDS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 604. (a) The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to make awards to local educational agencies for school excellence programs which are consistent with the purpose of this title.

(b)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated $16,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984 and 1985 to carry out the provisions of this title.

(2) From the amount appropriated in each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve $3,000,000 in each fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 607.

(3) From the amount appropriated in each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve $1,000,000 in each fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 608.

SELECTION OF SCHOOLS FOR AWARDS

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The Secretary is authorized to establish, in accordance with the provisions of this section, criteria for the selection of schools to receive awards under this title. Each local educational agency desiring to participate in the awards program authorized by this title shall submit a proposal nominating each specific school of that agency for school improvement activities designed to carry out the purpose of this title. Each such submission shall be made to the chief State school officer of the State in which the local educational agency is located.

(2) The criteria required by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include standards for each local educational agency to nominate schools of that agency—

(A) which have the potential to experiment with standards of quality; and

(B) which show promise of demonstrating that the school will carry out well-planned, creative, or innovative activities designed to carry out the purposes of this title in a successful manner.

(3) Each proposal submitted under this subsection shall contain—

(A) a description of the activities which will be conducted in the school nominated,

(B) assurances that the school to be nominated will carry out the activities so described, and

(C) such other information as may be necessary to carry out paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(b)(1)(A) The chief State school officer of each State shall in each fiscal year from the proposed nominations made pursuant to subsection (a) select twenty-five schools for submission to the Secretary.

(B) In the case of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the chief educational officer of such jurisdiction shall nominate five schools in accordance with this subsection.

(2) In selecting schools from proposed nominations submitted under subsection (a), the chief State school officer shall assure a fair and equitable distribution of schools within the State, after considering—

(A) all categories of elementary and secondary schools within the State, including elementary schools, junior high schools, secondary schools, vocational-technical schools, or any combination of two or more of the schools;

(B) socioeconomic conditions in the State;

(C) geographic distribution within the State;

(D) school size;

(E) the size and location of the community in which the school is located;

(F) the local governmental arrangements between the government and the local educational agency making the nomination;

(G) the potential for the proposed project to successfully demonstrate techniques for improving the quality of education which can be disseminated and replicated; and

(H) such other relevant factors as the Secretary may prescribe.

(3) Each State shall submit to the Secretary the school nominations made in accordance with this subsection. Each such submission may include such additional information as the chief State school officer (the chief educational officer as prescribed in paragraph (1)(B)), and the local educational agency concerned deem appropriate.

(c)(1) The Secretary shall select not more than five hundred schools from among the nominations submitted pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. The selection under this subsection shall be made by the Secretary after an impartial review panel has considered each submission. The review and selection shall be based upon the factors described in subsection (b) (2) and in accordance with uniform criteria developed by the Secretary.

(2) In making the selections under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall give priority to proposals which have the highest potential for successfully demonstrating techniques to improve the quality of education and which can be disseminated and replicated. In addition the Secretary shall give priority to proposals which have as their purposes—

(A) modernization and improvement of secondary school curricula to improve student achievement in academic or vocational subjects, or both, and competency in basic functional skills;

(B) the elimination of excessive electives and the establishment of increased graduation requirements in basic subjects;

(C) improvement in student attendance and discipline through the demonstration of innovative student motivation techniques and attendance policies with clear sanctions to reduce student absenteeism and tardiness;

(D) demonstrations designed to increase learning time for students;

(E) experimentation providing incentives to teachers, and teams of teachers for outstanding performance, including financial awards, administrative relief such as the removal of paperwork and extra duties, and professional development;

(F) demonstrations to increase student motivation and achievement through creative combinations of independent study, team teaching, laboratory experience, technology utilization, and improved career guidance and counseling; or

(G) new and promising models of school-community and school-to-school relationships including the use of nonschool personnel to alleviate shortages in areas such as math, science, and foreign language instruction, as well as other partnerships between business and education, including the use of equipment.

AMOUNT AND CONDITIONS OF AWARDS

SEC. 606. (a)(1) A school award made to a local educational agency pursuant to this title may not exceed $25,000 in any fiscal year or a total of $40,000.

(2) The amount of each individual school award made pursuant to this title shall be determined by the Secretary based upon the size of the school, the number of students enrolled in the school, and the number of teachers teaching in the school.

(b) Awards made under this title may not be made for more than two school years. No individual school may be eligible for any additional award under this title.

SPECIAL SCHOOL AWARDS

SEC. 607. (a) From the amount reserved under section 604(b)(2) in any fiscal year, the Secretary is authorized to make awards to schools nominated in accordance with the provisions of section 605 to pay the Federal share of the activities described in the proposal if the local educational agency provides further assurances that funds from the private sector will be contributed for carrying out the activities for which assistance is sought.

(b) For purposes of this section, the Federal share for each fiscal year shall be not less than 67½ per centum nor more than 90 per centum. The Secretary shall set the Federal share for categories of school awards based upon uniform criteria established by the Secretary.

RESEARCH, EVALUATION, DISSEMINATION, AND MONITORING ACTIVITIES

SEC. 608. (a) From the amount set aside under section 604(b)(3), the Secretary shall conduct research, evaluation, and dissemination activities to assure that exemplary projects and practices which are developed with assistance provided under this title are made available to local educational agencies throughout the United States.

(b) The Secretary shall use such amount of the funds reserved pursuant to section 604(b)(3) as is necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection. The Secretary shall establish an independent panel to monitor the success of the programs assisted by this title in achieving the national objectives in improving instruction and the achievement of the students.

TITLE VII—MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 701. There are authorized to be appropriated $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986 to carry out the provisions of this title.

ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 702. A local educational agency is eligible to receive assistance under this title if the local educational agency—

(1) has received $1,000,000 less in the first fiscal year after the repeal of the Emergency School Assistance Act by section 5 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 as a result of the repeal of that Act; or

(2) is implementing a plan undertaken pursuant to a final order issued by a court of the United States, or a court of any State, or any other State agency or official of competent jurisdiction, and which requires the desegregation of minority group segregated children or faculty in the elementary and secondary schools of such agency; or

(3) without having been required to do so, has adopted and is implementing, or will, if assistance is made available to it under this title, adopt and implement, a plan which has been approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for the desegregation of minority group segregated children or faculty in such schools.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 703. It is the purpose of this title—

(1) to provide financial assistance to eligible local educational agencies to enable such agencies to establish and operate magnet schools;

(2) to meet the special needs incident to the elimination of minority group segregation and discrimination among students and faculty in elementary and secondary schools;

(3) to encourage the voluntary elimination, reduction, or prevention of minority group isolation in elementary and secondary schools with substantial proportions of minority group students; and

(4) to encourage the development of courses of instruction within magnet schools that will substantially strengthen the knowledge of academic subjects and the grasp of tangible and marketable vocational skills of students attending such schools.

PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 704. The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to make grants to eligible local educational agencies for use in magnet schools which are part of an approved desegregation plan and which are designed to bring students from different social, economic, ethnic, and racial backgrounds together.

DEFINITION

SEC. 705. For the purpose of this title the term "magnet school" means a school or education center that offers a special curriculum capable of attracting substantial numbers of students of different racial backgrounds.

USES OF FUNDS

SEC. 706. (a) Grants made under this title may be used by eligible local educational agencies for the planning for, and conduct of, programs in magnet schools, including—

(1) courses of academic instruction offered at magnet schools;

(2) courses of instruction in magnet schools offering secondary education or vocational education which is designed to increase the tangible and marketable skills of secondary school students and vocational school students;

(3) the purchase of books, materials, and equipment including computers, which directly contribute to academic excellence and the purposes of this title; and

(4) the payment of or subsidization of the compensation of elementary and secondary school teachers in magnet schools who are certified or licensed by the State and who are necessary to carry out the courses of instruction for which assistance is sought.

APPLICATIONS AND REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 707. (a) Each eligible local educational agency which desires to receive assistance under this title shall submit an application to the Secretary. Each such application shall be in such form as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall contain assurances that the local educational agency will meet the conditions enumerated in subsection (b).

(b) As part of the annual application required by subsection (a), each eligible local educational agency shall certify that the agency agrees—

(1) to use funds made available under this title for the purposes specified in section 703;

(2) to employ teachers in the courses of instruction assisted under this title who are certified or licensed by the State to teach the subject matter of the courses of instruction;

(3) to provide assurances that the local educational agency will not engage in discrimination based upon race, religion, color, or national origin in the hiring, promotion, or assignment of employees of the agency or other personnel for whom the agency has any administrative responsibility;

(4) to provide assurances that the local educational agency will not engage in discrimination based upon race, religion, color or national origin in the mandatory assignment of students to schools or to courses of instruction within schools of such agency except to carry out the approved plan;

(5) to provide assurances that the local educational agency will not engage in discrimination based upon race, religion, color or national origin in designing or operating extracurricular activities for students; and

(6) to provide such other assurances as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

(c) No application may be approved under this section unless the Assistant Secretary of Education for Civil Rights determines that the assurances contained in clauses (3), (4), and (5) will be met.

SPECIAL CONSIDERATION

SEC. 708. In approving applications under this title the Secretary shall give special consideration to—

(1) the recentness of the implementation of the approved plan or modification thereof;

(2) the proportion of minority group children involved in the approved plan;

(3) the need for assistance based on the expense or difficulty of effectively carrying out an approved plan and the program or projects for which assistance is sought; and

(4) the degree to which the program or project for which assistance is sought affords promise of achieving the purposes of this title.

PROHIBITION

SEC. 709. Grants under this title may not be used for consultants, for transportation, or for any activity which does not augment academic improvement, or for the courses of instruction the substance of which is secular humanism.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENTS

SEC. 710. (a) No local educational agency may receive a grant under this title for more than one fiscal year unless the Secretary determines that the program for which assistance was provided in the first fiscal year is makng satisfactory progress in achieving the purposes of this title.

(b) No local educational agency may expend more than 10 percent of the amount that the agency receives in any fiscal year for planning.

(c) No State shall reduce the amount of State aid with respect to the provision of free public education or the amount of assistance received under chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 in any school district of any local educational agency within such State because of assistance made or to be made available to such agency under this title, except that a State may reduce the amount of assistance received under such chapter 2 if the amount is attributable to clause (3) of section 577 (as in effect prior to the date of enactment of section 502 of the Education for Economic Security Act) but only to the extent the amount is so attributable. The Secretary may waive the prohibition against the reduction of assistance received under chapter 2 and permit such a reduction if the State demonstrates that the assistance under such chapter 2 is not necessary to the local education agency concerned.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 711. (a) The Secretary shall pay to each local educational agency having an application under this title the amount set forth in the application. Payments under this title for a fiscal year shall remain available for obligation and expenditure by the recipient until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

(b)(1) If a local educational agency in a State is prohibited by law from providing for the participation of children and staff enrolled or employed in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools as required by this title, the Secretary may waive such requirement with respect to local educational agencies in such State and, upon the approval of an application from a local educational agency within such State, shall arrange for the provision of services to such children enrolled in, or teachers or other educational staff of, any nonprofit private elementary or secondary school located within the school district of such agency if the participation of such children and staff would assist in achieving the purpose of this title. The services to be provided through arrangements made by the Secretary under this paragraph shall be comparable to the services to be provided by such local educational agency under such application.

(2) In determining the amount to be paid pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary shall take into account the number of children and teachers and other educational staff who, except for provisions of State law, might reasonably be expected to participate in the program carried out under this title by such local educational agency.

(3) If the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children and staff enrolled or employed in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, the Secretary shall arrange for the provision of services to children enrolled in, or teachers or other educational staff of, the nonprofit private elementary or secondary school or schools located within the school district of such local educational agency, which services shall, to the maximum extent feasible, be identical with the services which would have been provided such children or staff had the local educational agency carried out such assurance. The Secretary shall pay the cost of such services from the grant to such local educational agency and shall have the authority for this purpose of recovering from such agency any funds paid to it under such grant.

WITHHOLDING

SEC. 712. The provisions of sections 453 and 454 of the General Education Provisions Act, relating to withholding and cease and desist orders, shall apply to the program authorized by this title.

TITLE VIII—THE EQUAL ACCESS ACT

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 801. This title may be cited as "The Equal Access Act".

DENIAL OF EQUAL ACCESS PROHIBITED

SEC. 802. (a) It shall be unlawful for any public secondary school which receives Federal financial assistance and which has a limited open forum to deny equal access or a fair opportunity to, or discriminate against, any students who wish to conduct a meeting within that limited open forum on the basis of the religious, political, philosophical, or other content of the speech at such meetings.

(b) A public secondary school has a limited open forum whenever such school grants an offering to or opportunity for one or more noncurriculum related student groups to meet on school premises during noninstructional time.

(c) Schools shall be deemed to offer a fair opportunity to students who wish to conduct a meeting within its limited open forum if such school uniformly provides that—

(1) the meeting is voluntary and student-initiated;

(2) there is no sponsorship of the meeting by the school, the government, or its agents or employees;

(3) employees or agents of the school or government are present at religious meetings only in a nonparticipatory capacity;

(4) the meeting does not materially and substantially interfere with the orderly conduct of educational activities within the school; and

(5) nonschool persons may not direct, conduct, control, or regularly attend activities of student groups.

(d) Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof—

(1) to influence the form or content of any prayer or other religious activity;

(2) to require any person to participate in prayer or other religious activity;

(3) to expend public funds beyond the incidental cost of providing the space for student-initiated meetings;

(4) to compel any school agent or employee to attend a school meeting if the content of the speech at the meeting is contrary to the beliefs of the agent or employee;

(5) to sanction meetings that are otherwise unlawful;

(6) to limit the rights of groups of students which are not of a specified numerical size; or

(7) to abridge the constitutional rights of any person.

(e) Notwithstanding the availability of any other remedy under the Constitution or the laws of the United States, nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the United States to deny or withhold Federal financial assistance to any school.

(f) Nothing in this title shall be construed to limit the authority of the school, its agents or employees, to maintain order and discipline on school premises, to protect the well-being of students and faculty, and to assure that attendance of students at meetings is voluntary.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 803. As used in this title—

(1) The term "secondary school" means a public school which provides secondary education as determined by State law.

(2) The term "sponsorship" includes the act of promoting, leading, or participating in a meeting. The assignment of a teacher, administrator, or other school employee to a meeting for custodial purposes does not constitute sponsorship of the meeting.

(3) The term "meeting" includes those activities of student groups which are permitted under a school's limited open forum and are not directly related to the school curriculum.

(4) The term "noninstructional time" means time set aside by the school before actual classroom instruction begins or after actual classroom instruction ends.

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 804. If any provision of this title or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is judicially determined to be invalid, the provisions of the remainder of the title and the application to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 805. The provisions of this title shall supersede all other provisions of Federal law that are inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, if they so desire, on the legislation just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees.

THE INSIDER TRADING SANCTIONS ACT OF 1984

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 559) to amend the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 to increase the sanctions against trading in securities while in possession of material nonpublic information, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as "The Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. Section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (d)(1), and adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person has violated any provision of this title or the rules or regulations thereunder by purchasing or selling a security while in possession of material nonpublic information in a transaction (i) on or through the facilities of a national securities exchange or from or through a broker or dealer, and (ii) which is not part of a public offering by an issuer of securities other than standardized options, the Commission may bring an action in a United States district court to seek, and the court shall have jurisdiction to impose, a civil penalty to be paid by such person, or any person aiding and abetting the violation of such person. The amount of such penalty shall be determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances, but shall not exceed three times the profit gained or loss avoided as a result of such unlawful purchase or sale, and shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States. If a person upon whom such a penalty is imposed shall fail to pay such penalty within the time prescribed in the court's order, the Commission shall refer the matter to the Attorney General who shall recover such penalty by action in the appropriate United States district court. The actions authorized by this paragraph may be brought in addition to any other actions that the Commission or the Attorney General are entitled to bring. For purposes of section 27 of this title, actions under this paragraph shall be actions to enforce a liability or a duty created by this title. The Commission, by rule or regulation, may exempt from the provisions of this paragraph any class of persons or transactions.

"(B) No person shall be subject to a sanction under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph solely because that person aided and abetted a transaction covered by such subparagraph in a manner other than by communicating material nonpublic information. Section 20(a) of this title shall not apply to an action brought under this paragraph. No person shall be liable under this paragraph solely by reason of employing another person who is liable under this paragraph.

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph 'profit gained' or 'loss avoided' is the difference between the purchase or sale price of the security and the value of that security as measured by the trading price of the security a reasonable period after public dissemination of the nonpublic information.

"(D) No action may be brought under this paragraph more than five years after the date of the purchase or sale. This paragraph shall not be construed to bar or limit in any manner any action by the Commission or the Attorney General under any other provision of this title, nor shall it bar or limit in any manner any action to recover penalties, or to seek any other order regarding penalties, imposed in an action commenced within five years of such transaction.".

SEC. 3. Section 32 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by striking "$10,000" from subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000".

SEC. 4. Section 15(c)(4) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"(4) If the Commission finds, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, that any person subject to the provisions of section 12, 13, 14, or subsection (d) of section 15 of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder has failed to comply with any such provision, rule, or regulation in any material respect, the Commission may publish its findings and issue an order requiring such person, and any person who was a cause of the failure to comply due to an act or omission the person knew or should have known would contribute to the failure to comply, or take steps to effect compliance, with such provision of such rule or regulation thereunder upon such terms and conditions and within such time as the Commission may specify in such order.".

SEC. 5. Section 20 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(d) Wherever communicating, or purchasing or selling a security while in possession of, material nonpublic information would violate, or result in liability to any purchaser or seller of the security under any provision of this title, or any rule or regulation thereunder, such conduct in connection with a purchase or sale of a put, call, straddle, option, or privilege with respect to such security or with respect to a group or index of securities including such security, shall also violate and result in comparable liability to any purchaser or seller of that security under such provision, rule, or regulation.".

SEC. 6. (a) Section 3(a)(39) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(39)) is amended—

(1) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (A) the following: ", contract market designated pursuant to section 5 of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 7), or futures association registered under section 17 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 21), or has been and is denied trading privileges on any such contract market";

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (B) the following: ", or is subject to an order of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission denying, suspending, or revoking his registration under the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 1 et seq.)"; and

(3) by inserting after "municipal securities dealer," in subparagraph (C) the following: "or while associated with an entity or person required to be registered under the Commodity Exchange Act,".

(b) Section 15(b)(4) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 78o(b)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or fiduciary" in subparagraph (B)(ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "fiduciary, or any entity or person required to be registered under the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 1 et seq.)";

(2) in subparagraph (C)—

(A) by inserting "entity or person required to be registered under the Commodity Exchange Act," before "or municipal securities dealer"; and

(B) by inserting "entity or person required to be registered under such Act," before "or insurance company"; and

(3) by inserting "the Commodity Exchange Act," after "Investment Company Act of 1940," each place it appears in subparagraphs (D) and (E).

SEC. 7. The amendments made by this Act shall become effective immediately upon enactment of this Act.

Mr. DINGELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, this is a House-passed bill with a Senate amendment which has been agreed to by the House principals, and what this action does is just to pass the bill without having to go through the time and expense of going to conference.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want to take a moment to explain the Senate amendment?

Mr. DINGELL. I will be happy to do so, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. BROYHILL. It has to do with the disclosure of information that is available to insiders to those who are trading in options.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman raises a point which I know is of special concern.

The bill, as the gentleman knows, clarifies that insider trading in stock derivative instruments such as stock options is illegal, just as in the underlying stock. That was a matter of special concern to my dear friend, the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. This is a loophole that we thought ought to be closed, and the Senate amendment takes care of that?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. The gentleman and I both agree with that, and we applaud that consequence.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support for H.R. 559, the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984. Final congressional action on this legislation is long overdue. Insider trading is becoming commonplace in our markets and threatens to undermine investor confidence and the integrity of our securities markets.

On Monday of this week, it was revealed that the Securities and Exchange Commission had served more than two dozen subpoenas in an investigation of what appears to be the largest insider trading ring ever. The SEC is believed to have identified illegal trading activity involving well over $40 million in trading profits, in more than two dozen takeover target stocks and options over a period extending from the late 1970's to the present. More than 20 Wall Street individuals, law firms and securities firms are behind the suspect trades which appear to have been run through several accounts at the Zurich-based brokerage-concern affiliate of a major Swiss bank.

In May, the SEC filed a complaint against a former Wall Street Journal reporter, his roommate, two Kidder, Peabody brokers and a lawyer in connection with a scheme to profit by trading in stocks on the basis of advance knowledge of market-sensitive articles in the Journal's "Heard on the Street" column. This month, one of the brokers, Peter Brant, pleaded guilty to one charge of criminal conspiracy and two charges of securities fraud brought by the U.S. attorney. These criminal charges carry with them a total maximum sentence of 15 years imprisonment and $30,000 in fines. In connection with the SEC civil charges, without admitting or denying any wrongdoing, he consented to a permanent injunction barring him from future securities-law violations and to being permanently barred from the securities business. He also agreed to disgorge $454,437, his share of the profits from the alleged scheme.

An therein lies the critical issue.

In the absence of criminal charges, which are very rare, there is no disincentive. The huge profits that can be made, especially in the options markets, weigh the risk/reward ratio heavily in favor of the crime. Those who engage in insider trading are thieves and the current law is the equivalent of making a bank robber return the loot and then proceed on his merry way after signing a promise not to steal any more—without having to admit he stole in the first place.

This has generated a scoff-law attitude that now has even reached high into the counsels of this administration.

Former Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Thayer was forced to resign from the No. 2 spot at the Pentagon after the SEC filed a complaint against Thayer and eight codefendants who made $1.9 million in profits on inside information passed on to them by Thayer while he was chairman of LTV Corp.

In another case, Thomas C. Reed, a national security adviser to President Reagan, left the White House staff amid charges that he made a profit in the securities of Amax, Inc., as a result of secret information. His father was on the board of Amax, Inc., and the son atypically bought $3,000 in out-of-the-money Amax calls in the name of a private company he headed, right before a tender offer by Standard Oil Co., of California. The calls were suddenly worth more than $427,000. It didn't take Sherlock Holmes to notice someone also named Reed on the Amax board and then to trace the fishy long-distance calls between the two Reeds and the son's California stockbroker.

Mr. Speaker, believe that the broad bipartisan support in the House and the Senate for the Insider Trading Sanctions Act speaks volumes. We strongly disagree with those who would seek to permeate our markets with this type of fraud. The arguments in favor of insider trading are rubbish. Bevis Longstreth, a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission from 1981 to 1984, forcefully laid the pro-insider trading view to rest in an April 12, 1984, New York Times article which I include at the end of my remarks.

The House passed H.R. 559, without objection on September 19, 1983. On June 29, 1984, the Senate Banking Committee was discharged from further consideration of H.R. 559, and the bill was passed by the Senate, after striking all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the text of S. 910, Senate companion bill, after agreeing to certain amendments. I commend our colleagues in the Senate for their work on this important legislation.

First, the legislation amends section 21(d) of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 to give the Securities and Exchange Commission authority to seek from a court a civil money penalty of up to three times the amount of profit gained or loss avoided by a person who violates, or aids and abets a violation of, the Federal securities laws by purchasing or selling a security while in possession of material nonpublic information.

Second, the legislation amends section 32 of the Exchange Act to increase the maximum fine for a criminal violation from $10,000 to $100,000.

Third, the legislation amends section 15(c)(4) of the Exchange Act to give the Commission authority to bring an administrative proceeding against persons who violate section 14 of the act.

Fourth, the bill clarifies that insider trading in stock derivative instruments such as stock options is illegal, just as it is in the underlying stock.

Finally, the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984 empowers the Securities and Exchange Commission to bar or suspend the registration of a broker who has been disciplined by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for violations of the Commodity Exchange Act. Currently, market professionals who have violated the Federal securities laws may be barred from performing similar functions in the commodities markets. In extending comparable protection to the securities markets, the bill would rectify this unintended anomaly.

Sections 1 through 4 of the bill, but for technical and clarifying amendments, remain substantially unchanged from the version passed by the House and will be governed by House Report No. 98-355 to accompany H.R. 559. The provisions added by the Senate were explained by Senator D'AMATO in his floor statement which appears at pages 20107-20109 of the June 29, 1984, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In the absence of a report by the Senate Banking Committee or a House-Senate conference report, some questions have arisen in connection with the Senate amendments. In the interests of achieving maximum certainty for those who must comply with the legislation just considered, the following explanation is provided to clarify the Senate amendments:

1. REGARDING SENATE CONSIDERATION OF A DEFINITION OF INSIDER TRADING

Although some commentators recommended that the legislation define the conduct which would be subject to the penalty action, both Houses of the Congress have determined not to adopt a statutory definition of insider trading. By the use of the language "[w]henever it shall appear to the Commission that any person has violated any provision of this title or the rules or regulations thereunder by purchasing or selling a security while in possession of material nonpublic information," the Congress intends that the civil penalty shall apply to any violation under the Securities Exchange Act that entails the communication of, or the purchase or sale of a security while in possession of, material nonpublic information. This language is not intended to define the elements of the underlying violation, or to restrict the existing flexibility of the courts in determining what constitutes a violation of Section 10(b) of the Act, Rule 10b-5, thereunder, or any other provision.

The application of the penalty remedy will continue to rely upon an independent violation of the underlying substantive law of insider trading, as administrative and judicial decisions have construed and continue to construe it. We anticipate that the courts in applying Section 10(b) of the Act and Rule 10b-5 thereunder will be mindful of the necessity, in light of the substantial penalty herein imposed, to avoid unduly inhibiting traders from generating and acting upon valid research information of the sort upon which efficient markets necessarily depend.

2. REGARDING THE NATURE OF THE PENALTY ACTION

Payment of a civil penalty by any person does not extinguish the liability of any other person. The Commission may, in its discretion, seek a penalty from any or all persons covered by this provision.

3. REGARDING INTENDED LIMITS ON PRIMARY LIABILITY FOR THE PENALTY

The legislation is not intended to impose unreasonable compliance burdens on investment companies that would ultimately be borne by shareholders. If an investment adviser to an investment company, without the company's knowledge or approval, directs trades on behalf of the investment company while in possession of material nonpublic information, the investment company and consequently its shareholders should not be subject to the triple penalty.

4. REGARDING THE CLARIFICATION OF ONE ASPECT OF THE PROHIBITION ON INSIDER TRADING

The Senate amendment contains a provision intended to clarify one aspect of the prohibition of insider trading under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. This provision would make clear that it is not possible to insulate ones self from the prohibition of insider trading by restricting activity to securities that are derivative of the securities to which the material nonpublic information relates. Thus, the provision clarifies that tipping or trading in respect to derivative securities is unlawful to the same extent as tipping or trading in respect to the underlying security. For example, if, in a given set of circumstances, a corporate officer would violate the antifraud provisions by purchasing any securities issued by his employer, subjecting himself to liability to selling shareholders, then he would violate the antifraud provisions to the same extent by purchasing options with respect to these securities, and subject himself to comparable liability to selling option holders and other similarly situated persons in the derivative market. He would also be subject to any other comparable relief, including a Commission injunctive action or, in appropriate circumstances, an action for the civil penalty.

This amendment clarifies the principle that persons under a duty to make public disclosure or abstain from tipping or trading are not free to circumvent such obligations by trading, or tipping others reasonably likely to trade, in the derivative market. The misuse of material nonpublic information in the derivative markets threatens the integrity of, and public confidence in, the nation's securities markets in the same manner as any other abuse of confidential information.

5. REGARDING THE SENATE AMENDMENT TO SECTION 15(C)(4)

In addition to authorizing the Commission to institute administrative proceedings based on violations of Section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, the Senate amendment also clarifies the Commission's authority under Section 15(c)(4) to proceed administatively against officers or directors or other individuals who are a cause of a failure to comply with Section 12, 13, 14, or 15(d).

This amendment would eliminate unnecessary burdens, costs, and possible inequities, resulting from the potential bifurcation of proceedings in cases where a Section 15(c)(4) proceeding is the appropriate forum for dealing with violations on the part of an issuer, and it is also appropriate to take enforcement action against the individuals responsible for the violation. The Commission's experience demonstrates that individual corporate officials or others may bear responsibility for untimely or inaccurate filings, or other violations, by an issuer. This amendment is consistent with the Commission's current practice of proceeding against such persons.

6. REGARDING THE SENATE AMENDMENT TO SECTION 3(A)(39)

The Senate amendment expands the definition in Section 3(a)(39) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, specifying the conduct that would subject a person to a "statutory disqualification," to include misconduct relating to the commodities markets. Currently, market professionals who have violated the federal securities laws may be barred from performing similar functions in the commodities markets. In extending comparable protection to the securities markets, the amendment would rectify this unintended anomaly. Among other things, this change would make it possible to bar persons who have violated the Commodity Exchange Act from acting as broker-dealers. It would also restrict the ability of such persons to participate in certain public offerings. The amendment would also amend Section 15(b)(4) of the Securities Exchange Act to authorize the Commission to bring administrative proceedings to sanction or restrict the activities of broker-dealers and associated persons, based on misconduct relating to the commodities markets.

HALTING INSIDER TRADING

(By Bevis Longstreth)

Over the last three decades, the Securities and Exchange Commission has successfully discouraged most professional stock traders from capitalizing on inside information. Through a combination of rule-making, monitoring, lecturing and enforcing, the agency has bent the norms of business behavior toward the "disclose or refrain from trading" rule.

Yet, as the commission's recent, highly visible campaign against insider trading makes plain, the Government still lacks adequate tools to deter risk takers—those who believe that the potential rewards outweigh the probability of getting caught and the magnitude of the penalty.

The agency's chief deterrents are a civil injunction against further violations, as well as disgorgement of the ill-gotten gains. But how much deterrence can one expect from a sanction that simply compels the thief to return the stolen goods?

Recognizing this inadequacy, the commission asked Congress in 1982 to legislate a civil penalty of up to three times insiders' trading profits. A bill, the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1983, was approved by the House and now awaits action by the Senate Subcommittee on Securities, headed by Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato, Republican of New York. The bill (which, in light of the recent S.E.C. investigation of a Wall Street Journal reporter, may be broadened to include those who breach any fiduciary or contract duty) should be enacted swiftly.

The prohibition against insider trading rests principally on the notion of fairness—both specifically, in the operation of the marketplace, and generally, as an ethical concept. Insider trading upsets the notion of a fair securities market in which all investors have substantially equal access to material information and securities are promptly and accurately valued on the basis of all relevant information. More broadly, insider trading offends basic ideas of fairness; in short, as every other nation to consider the matter has also concluded, it is simply wrong.

Nonetheless, a small but highly vocal group—largely free-market economists—argues that prohibitions against insider trading are misconceived and counterproductive. There are two principal points in support of this argument.

First, insider trading hurts no one, because the innocent sellers and buyers who indirectly trade with the insider come to the transaction voluntarily. Since the price was right for them anyway, they have no reason to complain. And, since the market impact of insider trading is always in the direction of more accurate pricing, it serves the goal of pricing efficiency.

Second, capitalism depends on creating high incentives for entrepreneurs who, through skill, energy or foresight, increase the value of the business enterprise that they serve. Insider trading is the only effective way of rewarding them.

Let's look at these points.

Is anyone hurt by insider trading? It is true that people will make independent buy or sell decisions while unaware of confidential information. But it doesn't follow that they should be deprived of the fair value of their investments. Misappropriation of profits is no less wrong because the profits were not anticipated.

Other market participants are also harmed by insider trading. Corporations, for example, may find it more expensive to raise capital if insiders are siphoning off secret profits through informational advantages. Specialists who write stock options have been bankrupted by honoring commitments to insiders. Finally, the markets themselves may suffer. Many believe that rampant insider trading would destroy public confidence in the securities markets, discouraging investors from using securities and, ultimately, impairing capital formation.

Is insider trading an appropriate reward for entrepreneurs? This theory has several flaws:

How do you identify the individual responsible for a given price rise in the stock and restrict the resulting benefit to him?

How do you control the size of this "reward," related, as it is, to the size of the entrepreneur's investment rather than to the quality of his contribution?

Why permit the absurd situation in which an insider—through short selling, options trading or accepting a friendly take-over by someone who sees that better advantage can be made of the corporate assets—benefits as much from bad as from good management?

The arguments in favor of insider trading are, in short, rubbish. But there is a legitimate and widely shared concern about whether the battle against insider trading can be waged effectively. In truth, it cannot be unless penalties are strengthened. The Senate should see that they are.—Bevis Longstreth, a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission from 1981 to 1984, is a partner with Debevoise & Plimpton.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, capital formation and our Nation's economic growth and stability depend on investor confidence in the fairness and integrity of our capital markets. Insider trading threatens these markets by undermining the public's expectations of honest and fair securities markets where all participants play by the same rules. Insider trading is destructive and cannot be tolerated.

But, under current law, insider trading is virtually a no-risk practice. Under the Federal securities laws, the only remedy available to the SEC is an injunction against further violations of the securities laws and disgorgement of illicit profits. This merely restores an unscrupulous trader to his original position without extracting a real penalty for his illegal behavior. The risk of simply giving up profits fails to outweigh the temptation to convert illicit information into enormous profits.

Insider trading has become a more widespread problem in recent years, with the increase in mergers and tender offers, which often result in immediate and dramatic price movements in the stock of a target company. With the growth of the options market, a small investment in options can yield enormous profits if the underlying stock increases in value as a result of a tender offer announcement or other news. This potential for immense profits is a powerful lure to this illegal activity.

As we have seen by the increased incidences of insider trading, even the SEC's stepped up enforcement program against insider trading has failed to halt the abuses. The SEC simply must have the tools to deal with this problem effectively.

Passage of H.R. 559 is a critical step in curbing insider trading. This legislation gives the Securities and Exchange Commission authority to seek from a court a civil penalty of up to three times the amount of profit gained or loss avoided by a person who trades while having inside information. Passage of this legislation is long overdue.

H.R. 559 was first considered in hearings of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance on April 13, 1983. The bill was reported by the subcommittee in July 1983. The full committee took it up in early August, and it was passed by a unanimous voice vote. In September of last year, it passed the House.

A number of my colleagues worked exceptionally hard in the effort to move the legislation. EDWARD MARKEY, AL SWIFT, MICKEY LELAND, JOHN BRYANT, JIM BATES, HENRY WAXMAN, MATTHEW RINALDO, JAMES BROYHILL, CARLOS MOORHEAD, MICHAEL OXLEY, BILLY TAUZIN, and GERRY SIKORSKI joined Chairman DINGELL and me in sponsoring the bill.

I want to acknowledge the work of Senator D'AMATO in passing the bill. Although the bill, as amended and passed by the Senate, is virtually identical to the House bill in most respects, the changes made by the Senate are, in my view, good additions. Senator D'AMATO spent much time struggling with the issue of defining insider trading, but decided, as we did, to leave that issue to the evolving case law under section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and rule 10b-5.

The House report on the legislation (No. 98-355) explains its provisions in some detail. It is a strong report, intended to give guidance to the Securities and Exchange Commission and the courts. To the extent that the Senate amendments differ from the House bill, Mr. DINGELL has submitted a statement explaining the purpose of those amendments.

While the bill is intended to provide an increased penalty for insider trading, and is not intended to change the sustantive law, the report makes clear the congressional intent that the courts construe the antifraud provisions of the Federal securities laws broadly, to remedy insider trading abuses.●

CORRECTING TECHNICAL ERRORS IN ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 559, TRADING SANCTIONS ACT OF 1983

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 340) to correct technical errors in the enrollment of the bill H.R. 559.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 340

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 559) to amend the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to increase the sanctions against trading in securities while in possession of material nonpublic information, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall make the following corrections:

(1) In section 1 of the bill, strike out "'The Insider" and insert in lieu thereof "'the Insider".

(2) In section 15(c)(4) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (as contained in section 4 of the bill—

(A) strike out "to comply, or take steps" and insert in lieu thereof "to comply, or to take steps"; and

(B) strike out "such provision of" and insert in lieu thereof "such provision or".

Mr. DINGELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the concurrent resolution be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just considered and agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1492, CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS QUINCENTENARY JUBILEE ACT

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 1492) to establish the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of June 28, 1984.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself whatever time I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in support of H.R. 1492, the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Act has already been agreed to by the other Chamber. The differences in the two versions of the bill, for the most part, were primarily technical. The conference proceeded without difficulty, and as far as we are concerned on this side of the aisle, this is a good piece of legislation, and I might add that it has already been passed by this body. So, in essence, what we are essentially doing is reaffirming our support for H.R. 1492.

The bill establishes a commission to help organize and coordinate activities celebrating the voyages of discovery by Christopher Columbus. It is a very important event. Indeed, it is one of the most important events in the history of this hemisphere. In the relatively short period of time since Columbus made his first voyage 500 years ago, the history of the world has changed dramatically. Our role in that process began with the courageous voyages of Columbus and those who supported him.

H.R. 1492 gives us an opportunity to not only celebrate Columbus' achievement, but to explore the many cultural expressions which have evolved from the migrations and development following Columbus' voyage.

All Americans owe an enormous debt not only to the Mediterranean cultures which Columbus represented, but also to the cultures which were brought here or that further evolved after his voyage. The diversity of these cultures continue to bind us together in many different ways, Mr. Speaker, from Canada in the north to Tierra del Fuego in the south. I hope, therefore, that the Commission members will use the jubilee year of 1992 to encourage a wide range of artistic and cultural activities which will enhance our knowledge and understanding of these cultures so as to accomplish what Columbus literally tried to do with his voyages: To make the world small enough so that a single person can encompass it.

This event deserves to be commemorated. A moderate sum of money has been included in this legislation to ensure that the commemoration is successful. It is not an—and I repeat, Mr. Speaker—it is not an excessive amount, and I believe that this funding ensures that the commemoration will be successful. I urge my colleagues to adopt this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, with that I would like to yield to my colleague—before I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, I will reserve the balance of my time, and now I will yield to my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to wholeheartedly support this legislation. This proposal, which was shepherded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] so ably over a long and sometimes difficult course for a period of time is finally before this body for decision. And I want to commend him for his leadership and his efforts in support of this legislation.

I also want to applaud the gentleman from Illinois, my good friend and colleague [Mr. ANNUNZIO] for his leadership in sponsoring this legislation assuring that this proposal would come to the floor of the House for action.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our speedy approval of the conference report on H.R. 1492, to establish the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission.

Eight years from this coming October will mark the 500th anniversary of Columbus' historic landing in the New World. It is imperative that the Commission be expeditiously established, for 8 years is little time to prepare for our celebration of this landmark event. Plans are already underway in other nations, and in particular in Spain and Italy, to participate in events to honor Columbus' great accomplishment.

The Commission will develop, encourage, and coordinate plans for appropriate ceremonies, commemorations, and educational activities to pay tribute to the courageous and dedicated Genovese navigator whose voyages of discovery were a milestone in the history of mankind. Christopher Columbus heroically braved the myth and mysteries of the unknown Western seas to open the New World to civilization and colonization. So he is very rightly called the father of immigration.

But I envision, Mr. Speaker, that in 1992 we will do much more than celebrate Columbus' bold and daring venture. For the quincentenary year will give our Nation a truly national celebration, similar to our bicentennial in 1976. It will offer an opportunity for all Americans to reaffirm our faith in the future and our willingness to face with courage and confidence the grave challenges that confront our Nation.

In 1992 we will commemorate a magnificent human achievement. But we will also have a year to reflect on what problems can be overcome, what progress can be made, if we guide ourselves by the same virtues of determination, courage, faith, and vision that brought Columbus successfully through that long, dark and lonely first voyage into an unknown world.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague, the gentleman from the State of Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO].

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] for his diligence in shepherding this legislation not only through the House, but through the conference committee meetings where he made a tremendous contribution in bringing the conferees together so that we could have this excellent legislation before us today. I want to urge my colleagues in the House to vote for and pass this legislation, because it is an historic event. The quincentennial of the discovery of America is something that all Americans, regardless of their nationality, their religion or their creed, can be proud of, because this great continent has withstood the test of time.

H.R. 1492 is a strong step toward planning and coordinating local, national, and international observances, to take place in 1992, in honor of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus 500 years ago. In 1892, the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America was celebrated in the United States with Chicago's world-renown Columbian Exposition, and Chicagoans have been planning and preparing for several years to bring a World's Fair to Chicago in 1992 to coincide with the Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee.

The Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission's work will complement the work already being done in my own city of Chicago in preparation for this historic occasion, and should be of great assistance in bringing to the attention of the Nation and the world to Chicago's grand world fair celebration.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1492 will ensure that our country's Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee celebration can be adequately planned in a thoughtful, dignified, and creative way, and again, I strongly urge my colleagues in the House of Representatives to support the conference report on this legislation.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I rise in support of H.R. 1492.

This bill will establish a Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Commission to plan and coordinate the celebration of the 500th anniversary of the discovery of the New World.

In 1492, when Columbus first set eyes on the New World, the course of history was irrevocably changed.

The New World embodies not merely a place on the map, but an ideal of adventure and a state of mind.

The New World represents new thoughts, new challenges, and new dreams.

Who could have known, as those explorers first approached our shores, that a new civilization would emerge, binding the hemispheres, creating new possibilities for culture, cooperation, and commerce?

Who could have predicted the birth of American democracy?

Who could have foreseen the growth of new nations, their impact on world events, their contributions to the worlds of art and ideas?

Mr. Speaker, as we approach the 500th anniversary of this great discovery, it is appropriate and fitting that we create a commission to plan the celebrations.

We have an opportunity, between now and 1992, to think about the Americas, who we are, where we came from, what we share, and the future we can build together.

We have an opportunity, between now and 1992, to remember the common threads of Western civilization, and to rethink and revitalize our relationship with our brothers and sisters to the south.

I want to thank those who have labored to pass this bill, particularly the distinguished Member from New York [Mr. GARCIA] and the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS].

I believe their work will support a grand celebration, which we and our children and people throughout the New World will long remember.

I would also pay tribute to the Mundus Novus Foundation and its founder, Mr. Henry Raymont, who I consider a good friend and an important and provocative thinker.

The Mundus Novus Foundation is a private group, formed to stimulate and coordinate a decade of observance of the discovery.

The foundation seeks to harness our century's channels of learning and expression into a search for new ways of looking at the discovery and the half millenium that followed.

In a statement of purpose the foundation eloquently describes the cause for the celebration:

Since Columbus' voyage of 1492 linked together the two hemispheres of our planet, a new civilization emerged, alliances were made and broken, new doctrines and philosophies were proclaimed, denounced, and embraced—and yet in spite of this surge of growth, decay and transformation, the western world remained an enduring spiritual concept as well as a practical reality.

Mr. Speaker, when I think of H.R. 1492, and when I think of the Mundus Novus Foundation, I am reminded of the end of the "Great Gatsby," where Scott Fitzgerald imagines the feelings of the first explorers who laid eyes on the New World:

Its vanished trees, the trees that had made way for Gatsby's house, had once pandered in whispers to the last and greatest of human dreams; for a transitory enchanted moment Man must have held his breath in the presence of this continent, compelled into an aesthetic contemplation he neither understood nor desired, face to face, for the last time in history, with something commensurate to his capacity for wonder.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for H.R. 1492, so the people of the New World can celebrate and better understand and cherish this important moment in history.

I commend the following articles for the consideration of my colleagues:

COLUMBUS CAN MEAN A STILL NEWER WORLD

(By Henry Raymont)

WASHINGTON.—How do we in the United States celebrate Columbus Day?

In the nation's capital, schools and Federal workers enjoy a long weekend with scarcely any public recognition that Oct. 12 was the day in 1492 when Christopher Columbus, a Genoese navigator, and his three Spanish caravels reached the New World.

In New York and other major cities, public officials tend to mark the anniversary by honoring Italy or Spain, depending on the size of the Hispanic and Italian American communities—as if the epic journey was something less than a joint enterprise involving both Italian knowledge and Iberian navigational skills, all inspired by the questing spirit of the Renaissance.

What happened to the perception that made our forefathers view Columbus Day as the symbol of the key that unlocked the golden door to the New World? Was not Columbus' marvelous voyage the event that linked hemispheres and, in the words of the Harvard historian John Fiske "mingled the two streams of human life which had flowed for countless ages apart"?

That the significance of Columbus Day should elude most children in the United States and more than a few educated adults is not surprising. It can be attributed partly to the appalling neglect of world history in our primary and secondary schools and partly to the confusion that surrounds Christopher Columbus' voyage and its consequences.

First, there are the familiar disputes over who really discovered America: Columbus? Amerigo Vespucci? The Chinese? The Norsemen? The Irish? The Africans? All of this obscures the incontrovertible fact that not until 1492 was significant contact established between the Eastern and Western halves of our planet.

More divisive than these academic disputes are the rival interpretations of the conquest and settlement that followed and the influence they continue to exert. What Spain saw as its divinely ordained civilizing mission, its imperial enemies—Britain, France, the Netherlands and later the United States—assailed as cruel, wanton and driven by the lust for gold, Spanish historians responded by denouncing the Anglo-American colonies as godless, materialistic and crude. Since the 16th century, it has been difficult for any historian to approach the subject of the New World without any emotional bias.

The controversy surfaced last December during a United Nations debate in which Ireland, Scandinavia, Africa and Asia succeeded in blocking a Spanish-Latin America-United States resolution calling for a worldwide celebration of the 500th anniversary of the Columbian enterprise in 1992.

What remains, however, is the sobering reality that as the quincentennial approaches, neither the Old World nor the New is quite sure if it is facing disaster to civilization or a new phase of human understanding. No new light, however, will illuminate human understanding if each society clings to its pet historical truth. A great Mexican poet, Octavio Paz, always alive to the large philosophical implications of what is going on in the world, said recently: "We in the 20th century have discovered pluralistic man, different in all places. . . . I believe that the civilization of the future will either be a dialogue of national cultures or there will be no civilization."

This is wise counsel, particularly when we begin to despair over troublesome times that are made to appear all the more intractable for lack of historical perspective. There can scarcely be a more appropriate occasion then the years leading to the 500th anniversary to take a new, more understanding and compassionate look at 1492 and the events that flowed from it.

Perhaps we need to again gasp and take pride in what might be called the storybook truth about the New World: That the Americans were settled by peoples seeking new frontiers and status in a hemisphere free of the oppressiveness of the old European order. The fact that the New World's two hemispheres are physically far apart and were developed by two predominant cultures—Iberian Roman Catholicism and Northwest European Protestantism—should not obsure, as it frequently does, the common striving for freedom, democracy and justice that is the miracle of the new American man.

A "dialogue of national cultures" is the theme we need to celebrate on Columbus Day: We need to take stock of the heritage that the New World received from the Old, and from the American Indians and Africa and Asia. We need to transcend parochial biases and thus make possible a fuller understanding of self and others.

MUNDUS NOVUS' STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

A man of clear ideas errs grievously if he imagines that whatever is seen confusedly does not exist; it belongs to him, when he meets with such a thing, to dispel the mist, and fix the outlines of the vague form which is looming through it—John Stuart Mill.

Others had reached the Western Hemisphere before. The landing of Christopher Columbus on 12 October 1492 was different: it dispelled the mists that had kept the Old and New Worlds for countless centuries apart and beckoned a westward movement that has continued into our age.

It was as if the Renaissance sent Columbus onto the stage of history on a mission that would provide the framework for the West's new energies that could now be released. The hopes and trials it brought the world then is the embryonic form of our hopes and trials today.

In a time very much like our own—of urban expansion, scientific discovery, the threat of war, social turmoil, evolving economies and new frontiers of art and education—the leaders, scholars, artists and thinkers of the Renaissance achieved a very discernible unity. It was not perfect. It did not abolish the afflictions of war, famine or the ambitions of states.

But it did succeed in persuading the disparate cultures of 15th and 16th century Europe that they shared common ways of thinking and understanding the world around them. Under the impact of that revelation, a new society, a new age of art, thought, science and concept dawned in the shadowed corridors of history. We are its heirs.

In the commemoration of the Columbus Quincentennial, the Mundus Novus Foundation will use the experience of the Renaissance as its guide. It will emulate an era which harnessed philosophy, poetry, history, graphic arts, science, music and commerce to promulgate the ideals which lay at the heart of its humanistic culture. It will combine celebration with reassessment and renewal.

With many nations planning observances, the Quincentennial is bound to be the largest secular celebration in modern history, magnified in the glare of electronic communication. But unless the message of 1492 is distinct, the anniversary is in danger of being rendered into a passing moment of national exaltations.

We believe that a strong argument can be made that its outstanding significance is to civilization as such, rather than to this or that national culture: that 12 October 1492 gave birth not merely to a new phenomenon of geography but to a spiritual and political concept synonymous with what today we know as the western world.

There can scarcely be a more appropriate occasion for serious public reflection about the origins, present state and drift of the West—how its dreams of democracy, equality, tolerance and justice, although never fully realized, have endured as a powerful and influential force not only in the shared values of the Old and New Worlds but eventually for all humanity.

Like the Renaissance, the New World knew no bounds to curiosity, no limits to versatility. New in nature, new in experience and new in the rich convergence of Indo-American, European, African and Asian peoples, it fixed the outlines of a looming new presence in history—the miracle of the American man, the new Adam—which in turn helped the Old World rejuvenate itself.

The whole face of the planet has now been knit together physically by the unprecedented advances of science and technology already set to conquer space. But there has been no corresponding advance in understanding for the way in which human beings in another cultural setting feel, think and plan. It may therefore be more important than ever for a western civilization nurtured by the belief in its inexorable progress, to the point where it paid relatively little attention to its humanistic past, to rediscover that past.

Toward this end, Mundus Novus will devote the years remaining until 1992 to work with other concerned private and official institutions, propounding and coordinating an incremental program of study and commemorative events that will be international in scope and conception and present an open-minded picture of the variety and creative effort of our interrelated cultures. Our theme, inspired by Octavio Paz, is to observe the Quincentenary as "a dialogue between men and cultures."

We conceive our essential function to be that of cultural translator—not only of languages but the more difficult one of making values and concepts of one society intelligible to other societies, of acquiring a feeling for diversity so that we may consult other answers to common problems. For translation introduces a different language and a different language means a different way of thinking about and perceiving the world.

Just as the Columbus enterprise conquered medieval myths and the physical barriers of the Great Ocean Sea, so the enterprise of its Quincentenary must be made to challenge the barriers of ignorance, prejudice and fear that still obstruct the fulfillment of western ideals. We may need to recognize that not all conflicts of values can be finally resolved by a Hegelian synthesis but can, perhaps, become adjusted through compromise and accommodation so that they reinforce, enrich and sustain, rather than convert, combat or destroy each other.

The Columbus Quincentennial, approaching at a time of pervasive pessimism about the future of the West, should be cast as a unique opportunity for taking stock of our condition and to encourage a new Renaissance of culture, thought and human understanding. For we know the importance of learning from the past, particularly when we begin to despair over troublesome times—made to appear all the more intractable for lack of historical perspective.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in full support of H.R. 1492, the conference report establishing the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission. It is only appropriate that our Nation develop a program to commemorate the deeds of this courageous voyageur who discovered the New World. The history of our Nation and that of the world would be very different indeed if Columbus had not had the courage and persistence to set sail on his perilous journey of discovery. All Americans, but particularly Americans of Italian ancestry, have much to take pride in this historic voyage. They have played a vital role in all stages of America's growth. Indeed, it can be said that Italian Americans discovered, named, and helped to build America.

As this legislation indicates, this commemorative Commission would be known as the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission and will plan and execute appropriate activities marking the 500th anniversary of the voyages of discovery of Christopher Columbus.

The Commission would consist of 30 members appointed by the President, the Speaker, and the Senate majority leader. The President would be authorized to invite participation by the Governments of Italy and Spain in a nonvoting capacity.

In an effort to minimize overcommercialization in the U.S. Bicentennial Celebration, this bill limits the amount of individual and corporate contributions. Also, the Commission's focus, as stipulated in the bill, will be educational, not commercial. Activities may include conferences and seminars, the production of books, films, pamphlets, and other educational materials, the development of libraries, museums, and exhibits. The Commission will also conduct appropriate ceremonies and celebrations honoring specific events and issue commemorative stamps, coins, and medals. All these activities will be conducted at a minimum expense to the taxpayer and for the benefit of all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, the 500th anniversary of the journey that planted the seed that grew into America as we know it today, is not very far away. In order to properly honor the birth of our great Nation and the voyage of the courageous adventurer Christopher Columbus, we should start our planning now. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1492.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO].

Mr. COELHO. I would like to inquire about some language in the Senate report, not found in the House report. As the chairman knows, this legislation authorizes the President to invite the Italian and Spanish Governments to appoint nonvoting members to the Commission. It also authorizes the Secretary of State to invite the participation of other nations in events planned and conducted by the Commission. However, the Senate report goes on to say that "Portugal, given its large role in the life of Columbus, should be given special consideration by the Secretary of State in extending any such invitations."

As my colleagues may know, Christopher Columbus, although born in Italy, lived on the Island of Madeira, Portugal, beginning in 1476. His first wife, Felipa Moniz, was the daughter of a Portuguese navigator, and it is here that he learned the skills which would ultimately take him on that now famous maiden voyage to find the westward passage to the Orient. The Portuguese were the great navigators of the day, and it is said that Columbus studied under the watchful eye of the renowned Prince Henry the Navigator.

As a Portuguese American, I am proud of the special role Portugal played not only in the life of Christopher Columbus, but in the heritage and culture of our entire hemisphere. The Portuguese explorer, Pedro Alvares Cabral, was the first European to reach Brazil. That was in 1500. And as a Californian, I am especially proud that Juan Rodrigues Cabrillo, known as the "discoverer" of California, was born in Portugal.

In view of the important role that Portugal played in those voyages which are so much a part of the heritage of this Nation and this hemisphere, I would ask the chairman if he would have any objection to accepting the language of the Senate report in recommending that Portugal be invited to participate in the events planned and conducted by the Commission. I might add here, Mr. Chairman, that I have discussed this matter with our colleague, BILL DANNEMEYER, and he indicated that he would have no objection.

Mr. GARCIA. Will my colleague yield back to me?

Mr. COELHO. I am happy to yield.

Mr. GARCIA. The answer is we would have no problem with it. There is no question in my mind that not only the Italian peninsula but the Iberian peninsula played a major role in this discovery of the Americas. So if that is what the Secretary of State wishes and desires, I would second that motion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report for H.R. 1492, the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' voyages to America and congratulate Congressman GARCIA for his help in making this a reality.

I encourage my colleagues to approve this conference report so that timely preparation may be made for this jubilee celebration; 1992 seems a long way off to us, but for those who will be preparing for this celebration, each day of these 7½ years is needed. For a project of this scale, the year 1992 is approaching rapidly.

I realize that there have been objections to Federal spending for this program, but the sacrifice is small in this case for the benefits which we will reap. We are only talking about $220,000 per year through 1992, for a total of $2 million. And this bill provides for a very limited staff of 22 people in addition to the noncompensated commission members—this hardly creates a new bureaucracy. Finally, the program will be coordinated so as not to conflict with other key anniversary celebrations—such as the Chicago Fair—in 1992.

I would also like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the importance of the Bahamas to this jubilee celebration. I have said during House consideration of this legislation that all Americans should participate in the celebration. I also believe that peoples who share our heritage of Christopher Columbus should share in this. Consider if you will the case of San Salvador, a small island on the eastern side of the chain of Bahamian Islands. Regardless of the historical debate over Columbus' first landing, the fact is that he did land on the island of San Salvador, and this marked the first landfall in the New World. Ignorance of this historical fact would be inappropriate to the intent of this legislation. San Salvador shares with the United States the importance of Columbus' voyages, and the participation of Bahamians or American Bahamians will enhance this celebration immensely.

For these reasons, I propose that we encourage the Secretary of State to allow the full participation of Bahamians. The language of H.R. 1492 clearly allows for—even encourages—such participation. Under this bill, the President, the majority leader of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House have the authority to appoint members to the commission at their discretion. I believe that outstanding Americans of Bahamian descent should be considered for these positions. I ask my colleagues to keep in mind the intent of this legislation to provide for joint participation of Western Hemisphere nations which share the Columbian heritage with the United States. At the very least, then, we should allow the Bahamas observer status on the Commission.

Mr. Speaker, the Bahamian people join us in looking forward to the 500th anniversary celebration of Columbus' landing. As Mr. Philip Smith, a Bahamian Member of Parliament, has said:

> We need to explore with the peoples of the Americas the areas of commonality and thereby establish closer ties.

Those of us behind this bill have worked to assure its smooth passage, and this House has already agreed about the importance of this event. I now ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this sound conference report.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this conference report reflecting in a sense the views of 123 of our colleagues who voted against this measure when it was on the Suspension Calendar on June 21 of last year. I regret to take this position, quite frankly, because I support the concept of a commission being established for the purpose of recognizing the contribution of Christopher Columbus in the history of America. I support the commission.

But what we seek to do with this legislation today really plows new ground. You have to admire the proponents of this legislation because they really have watched out for some folks whom they hope to place as chairman or on the commission staff when it gets organized.

Listen to this. This bill will authorize 20 staff positions at a maximum of GS-18 at $66,400 a year; one at level 5, $66,400, and then, of course, the director, he or she gets the most at level 4, $69,900. That staff is going to work over the course of next 8 years figuring out how to precisely direct and plan and commemorate the contribution of Christopher Columbus to the history of America.

That is almost a dream world for any staff person to get involved in because I really do not think it is going to take them 8 years to do it. And I really wonder if that is a good use of the taxpayers' money.

When you add up the cost of this bill before us, I will remind my colleagues, it comes to $2 million. But when you extrapolate the salaries that will be available for these staff people over the course of the next 8 years, you find the cost is a minimum of $13,147,200. That is the cost if people are hired at the maximum. I do not think there are many Members around here who believe that these job slots are going to be filled at less than the maximum.

So if we say that it is a $2 million bill we can see additional applications for appropriations in future years to flesh out the need for this commission to really work its will.

I would like to comment on other commissions that have been organized in the course of the last 4 or 5 years, that really makes a very interesting contrast.

□ 1340

For instance, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial was built in America, built right here in Washington, DC, with not a dime of taxpayers' money. We did not have any commission staff paid out of the Federal purse for them to do their work. They just organized, the Congress of the United States created that commission, but we did not put in any Federal money.
